That the manufacturers reap a rich harvest from protection is self-evident, but that the laborers receive any benefit from it is as certainly untrue. Every citizen knows that the supply and demand, the regular market price, will regulate the price of labor. As has been well said, when there are two laborers and one employer the employer will fix the price of labor, but when there is one laborer and two employers the laborer will make the price. Those who have put themselves to the trouble to notice have seen reductions in wages immediately upon the increase of the tariff too often to be misled by any pretense that the object of the tariff is to protect labor. The protectionists themselves demonstrate the dishonesty of this pretense.

The claim is that American labor can not compete with the poorer fed and poorer paid labor of Europe, and yet, while they have covered our statute-books with laws to keep out the products of the labor of foreigners, have lined the coasts with custom-houses and covered the seas with ships to prevent the importation of the products of labor, they have not made an effort to prevent the importation of the very labor itself against the products of which the laws are passed, and they rejoice that "men were on the free-list," and consider them "the most valuable commodity we can import," while their candidate for President "can not easily let go of the old idea that ours is the free home of all comers."

The fabric is protected versus the foreign fabric, but there is no protection to the laborer against the foreign laborer. The very men are brought into this country to drive Americans out of the protected industries because these foreigners will work cheaper than Americans, as the investigations of the House committee recently in session in New York show, wages having been reduced 60 per cent. in some instances, while protection has been kept up all the time; and yet the plain people of this country are asked to continue this tax upon themselves to enable these pets of unjust laws to pay high wages to American labor.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], the foremost man of his party in ability, statesmanship, and experience, has, during this session, said that the leading question at issue is—

The duty of Congress to protect the industries of this country from undue competition with the labor of Europe.

I invite special and critical attention to this declaration. He who made it weighs his words and speaks with deliberation and care. It will be seen that if this is the real purpose of the party to which he belongs that it is not to protect American labor. The candid, open, refreshing avowal seems to be made in this declaration that the object of the Republican party is to protect industries against undue competition with the labor of Europe. It is industries and not the labor in them that is to be protected. This declaration is a charming confession of the truth of what I have been trying to demonstrate—that all this pretense of solicitude for American labor is mere acting to catch votes, while the real purpose is to enable the manufacturers to sell their products to American consumers at advanced prices while they employ the cheapest labor the world affords.

The commissioner of labor of New York only last year reported officially (I quote his own words):

In many large industrial establishments there is not a single American at work. This is the sworn testimony of several of the largest manufacturers in the State. Of course, the presence of so large a number of foreign-born workers can not but have an injurious effect upon the trades in which they have practically secured a monopoly—for that monopoly means the exclusion of American labor.

And just here it may not be amiss to note that while the rapacity of these people leads them to sow the wind, that the natural consequence of their own conduct will be to reap the whirlwind, for this same report also has the statement of a manufacturer, as follows:

So far as my observation goes in regard to strikes the most unreasonable and hot-headed are foreigners, many of them not naturalized citizens and who care little or nothing for our institutions.

Their greed may yet be their ruin. They should remember that the laws of God are eternal and always work out just results, and He has said that—

He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches and he that giveth to the rich shall come to want.

Upon this subject Mr. Powderly, a leading representative of labor, recently used the following language:

Nine million seven hundred thousand immigrants have landed since 1860—more than the combined population of New York and Pennsylvania, and as much as the total population of Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington Territory, West Virginia, and Wyoming. The population which came previous to 1860 was civilized; that which comes to-day is, in a great proportion, semi-barbarous.

So long as this tide of unrestricted immigration is permitted to sweep in they will take no steps to reform conditions at home. We must check it at once, or, instead of Americanizing those who come, they will Europeanize us.

These proofs of the falsity of the pretense that labor is protected by the tariff "against the pauper labor of Europe" are not needed to convince the masses, as their experience teaches them that the protected industries will get all they can by protection and pay just as little as possible for labor.

The tariff was enormously increased during the war. This was done to raise revenue, as the Government required extraordinary sums in the emergencies of the period. It was distinctly understood at the time that these extraordinary rates of taxation should continue only so long as the emergency continued, and the promise of reduction has been repeated a thousand times since by the leading men of the Republican party. But those who are reaping the lion's share of the profits of this system, having become accustomed to the vast advantages they derive from it and being now the absolute masters of the Republican party, will not consent to any reduction, but insist instead that the system shall become perpetual.

One of the ablest advocates of this system recently, in the course of an argument intended to persuade us that all that we have of prosperity comes from protection, uses the following language:

What country can show such a trade as ours, such commerce, such immense transportation lines, such a volume of exchanges, and such marvelous production from the raw material to the finished product? Its balance-sheet is without a parallel in the world's history, richest in agriculture, greatest in its domestic trade and traffic, and leading in manufactures any nation in Europe. Why abandon a policy which can point to such achievements and whose trophies are to be seen on every hand? The internal commerce of the United States is greater than the entire foreign commerce of Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Holland, Belgium, and Austria-Hungary. Why, a single railroad system in this country (that of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company) carries more tonnage and traffic in a single year than all the merchant ships of Great Britain. The whole of Europe has not built as many miles of railroad as this country has during some recent years, and in 1880 the whole known world did not lay as many miles of track as were laid across this country. Great Britain's foreign commerce equals about one-sixth of our domestic commerce. Can we do better under any other fiscal policy? We say not. Wise statesmanship commands us, therefore, to let well enough alone.

Another distinguished protectionist in an open letter to the President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, which he thought of sufficient importance to be printed in pamphlet form and laid upon all our tables, uses the following language:

The period since the war—1865-'87—has witnessed strikes, lockouts, the organization of labor, offensive and defensive, to an extent never before known in this country, and to-day shows a feeling of widespread discontent among the masses of the people, and the avowal on the part of not a few, of a desire to overthrow the present organization of society. It winds up with the execution of several men and the sentence of imprisonment for life of others for consequences growing out of these feelings, these avowals, all unmistakable indications of bad government.

Here certainly is a case calling for thoughtful, rational investigation, for something of a far higher order than either passion, partisanship, or mere political expediency. Here are involved the lives, the fortunes, the morals, the happiness of 60,000,000 of people—as great, as absorbing an issue as ever mankind has been forced to face.

Here seems to be a marvelous difference in the statement of the condition of the country by two of the most pronounced advocates of the present system of national taxation, yet the facts stated by each are substantially true. How can these apparently conflicting conditions exist at the same time?

A little reflection will plainly show us how. It is because under the unequal operation of unjust laws one sows and another reaps; it is because our laws do not permit each man to have and enjoy the results of his own labor. A few have arrogated to themselves by shrewd manipulation of the laws the right to absorb and do absorb the result of the labor of the many, to the extent of depriving them of a comfortable support. For centuries the great drawback to the general elevation and advancement of our race has been the unjust and unequal division of the products of labor between laborers and capitalists. The share of capital has been unduly great and that of labor unreasonably small. Money has been regarded as of more value relatively than men. This has been a natural outgrowth of the social condition of the English people at the dawn of our civilization. In the early times the masses of our own race were owned by the landlords and sold by them like cattle. When we read in the old laws that—

Na bondman may buy or purches his libertie with his awin proper gudes or geir, because all the cattell and gudes of all bondmen are understand to be in power and dominion of the maister; Swa that without consent of his maister he may not redeme himself out of bondage with his awin proper denires or money, and that these miserable people were at the absolute disposal of the lord and were transferable by deed, sale, or conveyance from one owner to another, and that they were actually a regular article of commerce, it is easy to understand that the favored classes, having been always accustomed to this state of things, should be firmly fixed in the belief that the poor people had no rights except such as their masters chose to grant them. The natural consequence of this was, when by slow and painful processes the people became free from this bondage, being without property and almost without rights, when wages came to be paid them for their labor, that their old masters would pay them the smallest possible compensation for what they had been accustomed to have without pay.

We can readily see that in such a state of society in fixing the wages of the laborer little attention was given to what the product of his labor might be, and the fact that it brought great returns to the lord was considered as largely a "private affair," a thing with which the public was supposed to have "no particular business." These ideas still prevail to a great extent, though they have been shaken by the intelligent and just demands of organized labor in our time. Still, in the great mass of our business affairs there is not yet any fair division between labor and capital.

We have progressed so far towards freedom, towards a belief that every man ought to own and enjoy the products of his own labor, that we are shocked now to read that only a century ago a farm laborer received but a shilling for a day's labor, while a bushel of wheat was worth 12 shillings and an acre of land rented by the year at 60 shillings. Such a state of things as this could not now of course exist for a moment. The scarcity of land and the abundance of labor, together with the prevailing ideas of the rights of capitalist and labor, brought its inevitable result.

The overflow of dense populations into the new world of fertile and abundant lands gave birth to the idea in the course of time, amongst those who grew up accustomed to the boundless extent and resources of this great continent, that "all men are created equal," and at last the world was startled by the declaration made by "a nation born in a day" that this was "a self-evident truth."

The absolute truth of this declaration has, however, never yet been fully accepted and acted upon, even by our own people. While we read these words on every Fourth of July and declare our faith in them, like many a believer in the cause of Christ, we do not come fully up to our declaration of faith. In the course of time, however, this will be done, and when it is, it will be admitted that manhood is above money. That the right of the laborer to the full product of his labor is fully as sacred as is the right of the capitalist to a reasonable compensation for the use of his capital. The division will then be fair and there will be no enormous and unreasonable fortunes made in a year by capitalists, while laborers are without the ordinary comforts of life.

The oppressions of the poor which resulted from the power of the favored classes in the early times has been of course much affected by the increasing intelligence of the masses and the slowly acquired right of suffrage—and now in our country so universal is the right of suffrage that the old system of unjust distribution can only be maintained by deceiving those who have the power by their ballots to right their wrongs.

They have been deceived in the past and it is being attempted now, and will be continued until the intelligence of the masses shall see through and dissipate false pretenses. I am rejoiced to know that there has never been such a spirit of inquiry abroad in the land as now. Public attention being once arrested and directed to these inequalities, their correction is inevitable. The power of public opinion backed by a clear and intelligent understanding is in this country irresistible.

Let us see for a moment how the products of labor in some of our industries are distributed. A manufacturing establishment is worthless without muscle and brain. It would seem that in the distribution of profits in such an establishment the relative value of money and men could be easily ascertained and that each should have the fair products of his contribution to success. There should be a fair co-operation between labor and capital. If the reports made by the manufacturers themselves to the census bureau in 1880 are to be believed there is now no fairness in this distribution. Let us examine a few tables.

In cotton manufacturing there were, according to the tables in the census reports in 1880, employed—

Capital in mills, etc	$208,280,346.00
Operatives	172,544
Wages paid	$42,040,510.00
Value of material used	102,206,347.00
The value of product was	192,090,110.00

This gives as the average of wages paid the operatives in this industry $243.65 per year. Let us see about how valuable, relatively, the manufacturers consider their capital and the men they employ. Deduct the total amount paid for materials used, $102,206,347, and also the amount paid for wages, $42,040,510, from the value of the product, and we have left $47,843,233, the net profit in one year upon an investment of $208,280,346.

We have been told in glittering generalities about "the brotherhood of man," the "dignity of labor," and the great importance of the American workingman. Any amount of eloquence, pathos, and gush has been expended upon him here and elsewhere, and in many instances, with the fervor and spirit of him who thanked God that he was not as other men, those of us who come here from the South have been taunted with the fact that slavery once existed in our section of the Union.

Sometimes people talk for effect, but of course no man here would obscure hard facts by eloquence and glamour. As, however, this is a practical age, I want to see how much of the sympathy which goes out from these good people to labor generally finds its way to the laborers at their own doors, and how much of this fine talk is for "campaign purposes merely," and how much is, like some of our cheap novels, "founded on a fact."

By a simple calculation, which any school-boy can make, the above figures show that the mill-owners, after having all that they have spent in the current year for wages and for material used returned to them, then take as much for every sum of $1,075.28 invested as they pay for a year's work to an operative. The operative works the year through for $243.65, and the manufacturer takes for his profit $243.65 each year for every $1,075.28 invested in his mill. In other words, in his opinion the cash value of a man who feeds and clothes himself and works faithfully is $1,075.28.

I have often been told that slave labor could not compete with free labor, and have heard that the reason for it was that it cost too much; I had always supposed that this cost of slave labor came from the wastefulness and bad management and want of thrift which I have been told characterized slaveholders; but I never for an instant, until I made this calculation, supposed that it was because a slave had a greater cash value than an American freeman. I had always believed that the same man was worth twice as much to society and to his employers as a freeman as he was to his master as a slave; and never until these figures removed the scales from my eyes did I know that a freeman, intelligent, industrious, skilled, and educated, was worth less in money than an ignorant, unlettered, untutored slave; but thus it is written by the hard task-masters of our American cotton mills.

The owner of a slave had him to feed and clothe and to insure his life or incur the risk of his loss before he could receive any profit from the investment. The intelligent workingman in the cotton mill is not fed nor clothed nor insured by the mill-owner, but he has all that to do for himself. His food and clothing is the "raw material" consumed by him in making out a year's labor; no deduction is made to him for this, while all the "raw material" used by his employer is first returned to him before this calculation begins. Make any reasonable allowance for "materials" to the laborer and you demonstrate that about all he gets is his daily bread for his life work, or, in other words, that he is practically a slave.

But to follow this idea up a little, I examined the table for woolen manufactures, and found that there were employed in capital and labor for different items as follows:

Capital invested	$36,095,564.00
Hands	86,504
Wages and salaries paid	$25,836,392.00
Value of materials used	100,845,611.00
Products (whole value)	160,606,721.00
Average wages per hand	298.77
Amount invested in plant to produce same amount, after deducting wages and material	846.95

Here, then, we have the owners of the woolen mills insisting that the sum of $846.95 is of equal value to one of their men in whose welfare we are assured they feel such a deep and abiding interest. They are willing, in the liberality of their great hearts, to give to one of their laborers after he has fed and clothed himself and his family, provided he keeps well and does good and faithful work, just the same amount that they take for the use of $846.95 capital invested in this "industry" which must be protected against the cheap products of Europe.

The census reports also show that there are invested and employed in Bessemer and open-hearth steel manufactures as follows:

Capital	$20,975,999.00
Hands	10,895
Wages paid	$4,930,349.00
Value of materials used	36,826,928.00
Products	55,805,210.00
Average wages paid in this industry per hand	452.53

Deduct wages and materials from gross products as before and we find $14,047,933 as the net product per annum on the investment of $20,975,999. After repaying total amounts paid for material and wages, this yields to the manufacturer $452.53 net profit upon every amount of $675.66 invested.

Yet when there is a proposition to reduce the tariff on steel rails the laborers are notified, by the report on the Mills bill of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means, that any cut comes upon them, as follows:

If the majority desire to insure the handing over of our steel-rail market to our English rivals, the proposed duty of $11 will accomplish this purpose, unless the workingmen who are employed in producing the raw material and finished products of our steel-rail works are willing to accept still lower wages than they are now receiving, and the railroad companies which transport the raw materials are willing to greatly reduce their freight rates. Have the majority any assurance that the workingmen and the railroad companies are willing to accept these conditions?

Think of it! For every $675.66 invested these people are pocketing clear as much as they pay their laborers gross, and yet their friends defiantly announce that they will remit none of this "pound of flesh," but that any reduction in their tariff will be taken out of the wages of their laborers! And the laborers are told that all this is in their interest.

So we find that the gentlemen who own these great "industries" consider the amount of $675.66 as the proper equivalent of a man—his actual cash value. Looking at these figures who would doubt that the purpose of this system of taxation is to "protect industries," and who would, in the face of this record, pretend that the laborer has any interest in it?

But why is it that a cotton manufacturer does not demand as much upon his investment as the woolen manufacturer or as the Bessemer-steel manufacturer?

Invested in cotton manufacturing it requires $1,075.28 to yield the manufacturer net the gross amount his operative gets for a year's labor, which is only $243.65, while $846.95 invested in woolen manufactures pays the owner as much as a laborer receives in that industry, while $675.66 invested in Bessemer-steel manufactures yields as much net as is paid a laborer gross—$452.53. It would only take $692.09 of the capital of the woolen mills to yield $243.65, the wages of the cotton-mill operatives, while $345.72 would yield to the Bessemer-steel man as much as the cotton manufacturer pays his operatives. So, $345.72 of stock in a Bessemer-steel works will produce just as much net, year by year, as the labor of an operative will gross in a cotton mill; yet we are told, and asked to believe, that this protection to industries is a matter of interest to the laborers. That "it is the labor as well as the industries that are protected," and that these laborers have a fair share of the products of their own labor.

I will call attention to one more fact in connection with this. The average tariff on cotton goods is 40.17 per cent.; on woolens is 67.21 per cent.; and upon steel rails is 84.33 per cent. In a cotton mill with 40 per cent. protection a man is worth $1,075.25; in a woolen mill with 67 per cent. he is worth $846.95; and in Bessemer steel rails with 84 per cent. he is worth $675.66. As the tariff goes up the value of the man goes down!

Mr. President, the wrongs of African slavery have been often and pathetically told; the marring effect of that great curse upon the progress and development of our country has been argued with great force and ingenuity; the inhumanity of the system has stirred the deepest feelings at the North and doubtless amongst these very people; but the time never was when any slaveholder would have insulted a slave by considering him for one moment worth only the miserable, paltry sum of $675.66! But such is the estimate put upon the free laborer now by these task-masters, whose grinding extortions render insignificant, by comparison, the barbarity of the Egyptians, who "made the children of Israel to serve with rigor and made their lives bitter with hard bondage," which called down upon that wicked and selfish people the vengeance of an offended God.

This unjust distribution, this belittling of labor and magnifying capital, has aroused the attention of the laborers themselves, and they are trying to compel a readjustment. In a great speech made in the House of Representatives some years ago, Mr. Hewitt, now the mayor of the city of New York, himself a manufacturer, but one of the type of men capable of looking above and beyond any mere selfish and personal interest, gave an account of his personal observation of steps taken by an organization in England to correct an evil of this character. I quote from his speech as follows:

In a strike I witnessed on the Brighton Railway, in England, I had an interview with one of the chief officers of the great Association of Amalgamated Engineers. I asked him what was the limit of the wages which they expected to get from the railway. He said "There is no limit; we intend to have all the net earnings of these railways except a fair remuneration for the capital actually invested and fair salaries for those who administer them; and the only question with us is how to find out what the amount is, and we intend to have it."

That great association contained as its members all the engineers of Great Britain, numbering many thousand. It has a great fund in its treasury of nearly a million of dollars, and it has had as much as a million and a half dollars at one time.

It selects one concern at a time and puts the men there upon a strike until their demands have been acceded to. The hours of labor have been cut down by this process to fifty-five hours per week and the wages of labor have been largely increased, for no man can say them "nay" within the limits of right and justice which they strive to observe. With this example other trades have organized, and these trades have confederated together and now constitute a great congress. They met in 1881 when I was in London, and the figures of that time are the latest that I happen to have.

There were 157 delegates in that congress, representing a constituency of 463,899 members. They met then to consider what could be done to raise the average condition of the British workmen. Their deliberations were conducted with a calmness, with a courage, with an intelligence that would do honor to this House or to any other deliberating body in the world. They did not seek to attack capital. They have learned that capital is their best friend, but they intend to make it their servant, and they can make it their servant.

There is a steady increase in the growth and influence of this great organization, but what concerns me here is to define the significance of such organization. The labor of Great Britain to-day is practically pooled for the purpose of securing out of the products of industry the full portion which ought to be allotted to labor after paying the current rate of interest upon capital and a proper remuneration for management. This result they have been able to accomplish. The rate of wages has steadily tended upward in Great Britain, and although much time has been lost in disputes ending in strikes, the result of the organization has been to introduce arbitration between the master and men, so that strikes are becoming the exception rather than the rule in trade disputes.

In these arbitrations the master and the workmen meet upon equal terms. The result is a better understanding of each other's rights, interests, and duties, and out of which is slowly growing, through the agency of co-operation, the association of the workmen with the owners in ownership and management of the property. That process is only at its beginning; but, thank God, the day is at hand and will surely come, in my time I hope, when workmen themselves will be the owners of all the machinery upon which they expend their daily toil and shall themselves have whatever profits the God of nature intended them to have as the fruit of their labor. That process in England will precede its possibility in this country, but it will be then as a great example.

In this country it can not begin until protection is broken down. I repeat that protection is in the nature of artificial friction, causing so large a deduction from the earnings of labor as to prevent the accumulation of capital in the hands of workmen. Hence I have changed my views. I have changed my views because I am a Democrat who believes that the welfare of the people is to be considered before the welfare of any single interest or of any single man.

Labor is organizing in this country, too—organizing, as I firmly believe, not to do any wrong to any man or interest, but for the purpose of enforcing their rights and to secure for themselves a fair share of the profits of the industries that they make prosperous. In this struggle from my heart I wish them God-speed. I believe that not only their interest but the interest of all mankind is involved; in their success the future freedom, happiness, and progress of man are assured; with their failure—but I will not consider that; they will not fail; their contest may be obstinately resisted, it may take years to accomplish their emancipation, but the truth is mighty and it will prevail.

The aggregate of wealth made here, produced here, would be here still in just as large quantities as now if it had been differently distributed, and I believe that the country would be much more prosperous if of all this wealth those who produced it now owned it instead of its being, as it is, collected into comparatively few hands.

The glorious state of things of which Mr. MCKINLEY speaks in the extract quoted above is the result of the labor, industry, and economy of the American people; the calamities of which Mr. Baird speaks come from the fact that the law takes unjustly and in insidious ways this product of the labor of the masses and transfers it to the hands of people who did not earn it.

If the hundreds of millions of dollars which are thus taken annually from the masses could be retained by them, who can estimate the difference in the condition of those who earn day by day their daily bread? Falling like the gentle dew of heaven upon all, its effect would be to relieve many a burden, save many a mortgaged home, educate many a boy and girl, and improve the condition of the masses everywhere. The effect of this in a series of years would be an absolute revolution in the social advancement and well-being of those upon whose well-being the future not only of this country but of human liberty in all the future absolutely depends. The conservatism of the people will not always lead them to submit to these outrages so thinly veiled, and it will not always do to try to satisfy the demand of the poor for lightened burdens by telling them of the prosperity of the rich, made so by robbing them, nor of the prosperity of the country as a whole.

SELFISHNESS APPEALED TO.

The laborers in protected industries are urged to vote for a continuance of these wrongs upon the plea that they are benefited thereby. There doubtless is a class of persons who are so selfish and unfair as to be willing that the masses may be robbed if only they can be thereby benefited, but I am persuaded that this is not a large class. The American citizen as a rule demands fair play, not only for himself but for all others as well; he is unwilling to see any injustice done. He believes that justice to each is the best interest of all, and that "the injury of one is the concern of all," and when the real nature of this unjust taxation is fully understood the mass of the laborers themselves will repudiate it and scorn to receive as theirs the result of the labor of other men, even if it should appear that labor gets some share of the profits of protection. And when they learn, as they will, that they are being used simply as a convenience in the robbing of others, and that they get no part of it, they will rise in their wrath and indignantly overthrow the system.

A LOSING BUSINESS.

Recently, in a debate in the House, a member of that body, himself a strong advocate of protection and one who can not be suspected of stating the case against his own side too strongly, said:

It has been time and again proven here, and we assert positively and acknowledge that the protectionists are not any more the friend of the laboring men by reason of being employers than other men are, and that they will get their employés to work as cheap as free-traders will get theirs; that it is not a matter of love but it is a matter of square business, it is a matter of dollars and cents. We only claim that by protection we make a demand for labor, and that makes a demand for higher wages.

This argument will not bear investigation. When protection is necessary it must be admitted that without protection the proposed business would not be profitable; in other words, would be a losing business. The effect, then, is that the law is invoked to compel the country at large to contribute to those who engage in a losing business, enough not only to make up all losses, but also to make the investment pay them what they call a reasonable profit, after paying interest, insurance, expenses, etc.

It requires no argument to satisfy practical men that a losing business does not pay, and it does not make the case any better to have forced contributions taken from the public at large to indemnify the owners for losses, because then the loss falls upon the community instead of upon those who own the business. There is a loss to the community as a whole as the result of this sort of financiering, and if it is prosecuted far enough the result would be the bankruptcy of the entire country. The more there is of such losing business the worse for the country at large.

We have all heard of the pedlar who, trying to convince his country customer that he sold goods for less than they cost him, explained it, by saying he sold so many goods that he could afford it. But the people are few in this country who believe that prosperity results from either conducting a losing business or from taxing themselves.

LABOR COST.

The truth is our difficulty in manufacturing in competition with the world is not one of labor cost. Americans "used not aforetime" to confess themselves inferior to anybody; they are not now. Investigation has shown that owing to the better work, the superior skill, and machinery in this country that the labor cost of the product of American labor is often less than the labor cost to English or other foreign producers. But if this is true our manufacturers can not produce goods as cheaply as their English rivals, for the reason that they are handicapped by the tariff.

It was stated to a committee of Congress that the machinery of a mill which cost $300,000 in this country could be had by an Englishman for $200,000. The tariff was the cause of this difference. Then when a tariff is paid upon all the material used in such a mill, it is clear that with the same labor cost Americans can not produce as cheaply as an Englishman, consequently Americans are driven out of the markets of the world, the English being able to manufacture goods and sell them at a profit at prices that Americans can not produce them. The only market open to Americans for the product of protected industries is our own home market, and this they confess by their actions that they keep only because the law compels the American people to pay higher prices for their goods than any other people on earth will pay.

If the American manufacturer had the right to buy his machinery as cheaply as his English rival and could procure his material on as favorable terms, I have faith enough in the thrift, energy, and intelligence of our people to believe that they can "hold their own" against the world, and that without any reduction of wages. I believe that our manufacturing interests would, under such a system, spring forward at a rate that would startle the world; and without asking any advantages of anybody, without skulking behind this Chinese wall, protection, that our manufactures, on account of superior skill of our workingmen, could and would pay higher wages, and hold our own markets and also those of the world against all competitors, and that our people would then have their goods on as favorable terms as others.

DRAWBACKS.

This mode of taxing our own manufacturers, so as to render them unable to contend for a share of the foreign trade, is so manifestly suicidal that to avoid in some degree the effect of our own folly we have adopted our system of drawbacks, under which, when a manufacturer imports certain materials to be manufactured and then reshipped abroad for foreign consumption, the tariff tax paid by him on the importation shall be refunded to him upon reshipment after manufacture. The design of this, of course, is to enable our manufacturers to compete for foreign markets by giving them their raw materials free whenever they manufacture for foreign consumption; but the outrage of the system is that the very same article, manufactured by the same man, when intended for American consumption, is taxed, discriminated against, so that the foreigner under this system is by American law deliberately provided with American products at lower rates than Americans can have them.

Under this system we have in the last three years remitted upon articles intended for foreign consumption the amount of $23,336,030.89, while if these same goods had been kept here for American consumers not one cent of this great sum would have been remitted, and still the people are expected to believe that we are only protecting our poor, discriminating in their favor against foreigners. Having tried this in a few articles, such as sugar, tin-plate, etc., this plan of discriminating against our own people and in favor of foreigners so captivates the protectionists that one of their champions, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], on the 16th of December, 1886, presented the following resolution to the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire into the subject, and if in their opinion it be for the public interest to prepare and report to the Senate a bill providing for the payment of a rebate upon all imported materials which are incorporated with domestic materials, or which may be converted into other articles without incorporation with domestic materials and exported to foreign countries for sale, thereby providing for the extension of our foreign trade by placing the domestic producers and manufacturers upon a fair basis of competition with foreign producers and manufacturers in foreign markets without reducing the price of American labor or in any wise interfering with the existing prices of labor or production in the home market.

In presenting his reasons for the adoption of this resolution Mr. BLAIR said:

It has seemed to me for a long time that upon this line there could be legislation which, while not interfering with the control of our own markets for our own manufacturer and producer, would yet give the opportunity of a great extension of our foreign trade, and that, too, without disturbing the laws under which our domestic prosperity has been built up, and by the preservation of which alone can that industry and prosperity be retained.

In other words, Mr. BLAIR wants absolute free trade when we are to manufacture for foreigners, but when Americans are to be supplied he wishes the taxes piled up, "heaping Ossa upon Pelion." He wishes goods manufactured here and sold to all the pauper laborers of the world at low prices while the American consumer is to pay the old high rates.

This seems to be a very cunning device. The foreign consumers not living under our laws, we can not compel them to buy from our manufacturers; hence it is necessary that our manufacturers must be relieved from the tariff for enough to enable them to make their goods and sell them as cheaply as foreigners. This enables them to enter into competition with the pauper labor of Europe successfully, but Mr. BLAIR and our protectionists are very careful that the American laborer shall not be permitted to buy these American products as cheaply as these favored foreigners do.

I confess that until I saw this resolution introduced by a leading advocate of protection I did not believe that any human being could be found on this continent who would openly advocate adopting a general plan by which Americans were to manufacture cheaply for the benefit of foreign pauper laborers, while in direct and plain terms it would be proposed to exclude by name the American consumers from all participation in its benefits.

It is clear that the professions of the protectionists of interests in the welfare of American labor are only a ruse to keep laborers quiet while the industries are cared for; while they profess a desire to protect our labor against the competition of pauper labor I did not look for so open an avowal of a desire on the part of our protectionists to benefit this same pauper labor at the expense of our own. Yet this is the legitimate and natural outcome of the restrictive principles of protection, and this will be the inevitable result of a continuation of the present system.

American consumers are assured that they suffer no wrong under this system of protection because it is alleged that the tax is not paid by the consumer, but that it is paid by the foreigner, who is only thereby compelled to pay for the privilege of coming into our markets.

The protectionists do not explain that if the price of the imported article is not raised to the consumers by the tariff just how it is that it furnishes any protection to the manufacturer, how it is, if the price is not raised by the tax, that there can be any increase in wages to the American laborer by reason of the tariff.

The keen interest of the manufacturers, the papers they publish, the documents they scatter broadcast over the country, the "fat" that is "fried" out of them for every national campaign, all show that they have, or imagine they have, a real live interest in the tariff. The assertions so often made that even a very slight reduction of our unreasonably high tax will close up this or that business all speak in tones that can not be mistaken that they believe they are getting a real important pecuniary advantage under this system such as can come only from an increased price. Why is a bill reducing the average tariff on protected articles from 47 to 42 per cent. resisted so vigorously by protected interests if prices are not kept up by it?

Protectionists are forced to admit that absolute free trade amongst the States has been productive of great good, and all rejoice that this internal commerce is the greatest on the globe. If any good comes of restricting trade with the world by the United States, why would not the same reasons demonstrate that New York or Pennsylvania or

Georgia would be in a like manner benefited by protection of their own citizens against the people of all other States? If these arguments are good, why is it not necessary to protect the white farmer of Ohio or the white mill laborer of Massachusetts against the poor and ignorant negro laborer of Mississippi and Louisiana? Yet here in this country we have the spectacle of educated intelligent labor in the Northern States entering without complaint and without injury into competition with the unlettered, unskilled, yes, pauper negro labor of the South.

These people live in cabins, wear coarse clothes, are accustomed to the plainest food, are unlettered and untaught, and so far undeveloped as to create doubts in many minds whether they can be developed to a high degree; yet with this competition (which was, too, at one time greatly feared) this intelligent labor competes successfully and has not been in any sense injured. All this shows the power of superior skill and brains.

If this freedom to trade with whomsoever they chose has been beneficial in such a degree amongst the States might it not be well to have the right to trade with other countries, hampered only so far as is necessary to raise revenue?

Centuries ago there was almost no trade amongst the nations of the earth, and what little there was was slow, difficult, and dangerous. What a protectionist's paradise, when there was practically no commerce amongst the nations of the earth; yet who wishes the old order of things restored? If this theory of protection, of restriction, and embarrassment of trade, for after all that is just what it means, is the true idea, then all facilities of commerce are a mistake or worse. The cheap and quick transit across the ocean, the communication by steam and lightning is a great misfortune. It is astonishing that anybody in this age should advocate a doctrine which leads to such a conclusion, yet such is the result of protection. It would turn back the wheels of progress; would clip the wings of the lightning; would undo all that the marvelous advance of this age has done and leave us unknown to the world.

Another proof of the falsity of their claim that the purpose of protection is to raise wages is the fact, which no one will deny, that no higher wages are paid in protected than in unprotected industries.

HOW FARMERS ARE AFFECTED.

But suppose, for the sake of argument, that the laborers in the protected industries do get the benefit of this tax, why should the 15,892,099 workers who are not engaged in protected industries be taxed to make high wages for those who are, being fewer in number than 1,000,000 people?

The laborers in protected industries are assured that while the masses are taxed they get the benefit of it, that it raises their wages. At the same time the farmers are assured that the real purpose of protection is to build up a market for their products, and in an argument to farmers years ago Mr. KELLEY said:

> I find that whenever our duties have been low immigration has fallen off, and whenever our duties have been high the volume of immigration has increased. This seems to be a fixed law.

This was perhaps not the kind of argument to use to convince the laborers in protected industries that the sole purpose of protection was to protect them against competition with pauper labor of Europe, for this would plainly show that whenever protection is high and the manufacturers are reaping great harvests the European laborers are brought over in greatest numbers to take the place of high-priced American labor; but it was good to show to farmers that more consumers of farm products are by this means brought into this country, with the purpose of making them believe that this would insure them a "magnificent market."

The logic of events always exposes a false position. If this increase of population was to insure high prices for farm products, why is wheat now worth only one-third of what it was twenty years ago? We have had high protection all the time just for the purpose of making wheat high, if protectionist argument to wheat-growers are true; yet wheat has declined greatly. Mr. President, the farmers who make the wheat of this country know that the price of their product is fixed by the markets of the world. They know that if the manufacturer who supplies his laborers can buy his wheat or his flour cheaper in Europe than here he will do so; so the price of his wheat here in the United States is fixed by the price in Europe. He thus comes without any sort of protection in open and direct competition with the real pauper labor of India and the serf labor of Russia. That argument will not serve to deceive the practical men of this time.

The cotton-grower knows well enough that the price of his crop is fixed by the Liverpool price. He knows that this brings him in direct and personal competition, not with English and European labor, but with that of Egypt and Brazil, and it will be long before you make him believe that while he is thus forced into open competition with the lowest and poorest paid labor on the globe, that he and his little ones ought to be taxed to save others of his fellow-citizens from an equally open competition with intelligent European labor.

The cotton-grower is compelled to find a market for his cotton in England, but he is not allowed to buy his cotton goods of the man who buys his cotton, but is compelled to come back to this side of the ocean to buy of an American manufacturer—all this because the Englishman will sell his goods to the cotton-grower too cheap, in the opinion of the American protected manufacturer.

The farmers of this country are an honorable class. They eat their bread in the sweat of their faces all the days of their lives; they furnish us nine-tenths of all our great exports; they supply the food for the millions of this great continent; they supply cotton to clothe the world. In times of danger by millions they are ready to present their bosoms like a stone wall in opposition to any foe; they are the foundation, support, defense, and hope of this country. From their ranks comes almost every man who towers above his fellows. The President of thirty or forty years from now is somewhere on a farm. Your future generals and statesmen are now in that nursery of great men. Why should this great class of honored citizens be discriminated against, be made hewers of wood and drawers of water to their brethren? This will not always be so. The spirit and the numbers are with them, and their modesty and conservatism will not always prevent an assertion by force of their superior numbers and the justice, fairness, and righteousness of their cause, of their rights to equality under the law. Great as are the manufacturing industries in this country, all-important as the protectionists assure us they are, the census of 1880 shows that the capital invested in them and in farming was as follows:

Manufacturing	$2,790,223,506
Farming	12,104,081,440

While from the same authority we find that of persons employed in each there were—

Manufacturing	2,738,930
Farming	7,670,493

From which it seems that there are employed almost five times as much capital in farming as in manufacturing and three times as many people. Yet the gross product was:

Manufacturing	$5,369,667,706
Farming	2,212,540,929

The average product of a laborer in manufacturing is $1,960.49, while the average product of a laborer in farming is $288.44.

Yet we are gravely told that farmers must be taxed, not only now but for all time, to benefit this other class.

Living apart from each other, constantly employed in mind and body in the struggle for a living, the farmers have been slow to note the effects of combination amongst others; but the lesson has at last been forced upon them, and they too are moving; with the same high purpose which Mr. Hewitt imputes to the English workingmen, they intend to observe the "limits of right and justice," but conscious that they are the great interest of this country, that they have more men, more money, and more homes involved in this great controversy than any other class, they are learning their power and their rights and are preparing to assert them. There is now a greater spirit of inquiry, a more earnest seeking for light and the truth amongst this great body of men than has ever been seen before. They are perhaps the most conservative class of all our citizens. They will think well and calmly before they strike. They will do no injustice to anybody, but they will understand their rights, and will demand them.

Of course the cohesive power of public plunder will hold the protectionists together. They are a drilled, disciplined, and thoroughly organized army, compact and active, and have unlimited money at their disposal. The stakes they play for are immense. They know that to succeed they must mislead all the voters they can into joining with them. Their great enemy is the Democratic party; they fear nothing but this. It has for years denounced their wrongs and has steadily demanded reform. It has grown in power and strength and influence in each contest. It has shown itself to be the party of the people and liberty, until now it is almost within reach of the power to accomplish the great purposes for which it has struggled so long, and with a leader who has shown himself wise, able, and patriotic, and an unselfish man of the people.

The protectionists know that without dissensions and division amongst the Democrats they can no longer resist the reduction of unjust taxation, hence their unlimited campaign fund will be used without stint or scruple in misleading, deceiving, and dividing them if possible; shrewd, able, unscrupulous men will not be wanting to urge cunningly devised complaints against that party; wrongs, real or fancied, will be paraded and exaggerated with the purpose of dividing and thereby weakening those who ought now to act together; hired candidates will appear everywhere howling "down with the Mills gang;" hireling, venal newspapers will be enlisted and paid for everywhere to foment discord amongst those who are being plundered for the purpose of dividing the only party that can bring relief and continuing for "yet a little while" this system of iniquity.

Despots and tyrants in past ages were able to maintain their control over their people only by divisions amongst them, fomented by the hireling minions of power. The hydra-headed monster which is now absorbing the entire wealth produced by this nation must, if it retains its grasp upon the country, resort to these tactics. It is clearly in the minority; force will not serve its purpose now; fraud and deception, the corrupting power of money, are the only means left by which it can hope to control the majority.

These means are being unscrupulously resorted to at this moment, and will be used for all they are worth every day and hour until this struggle is over.

The carefully sown seeds of discord are beginning to bear fruit on every hand. Every enthusiast is encouraged to believe that this is the auspicious moment to press his hobby to a successful issue and save mankind. When was it ever the case until now that there were seven candidates for the Presidency of the United States? Such efforts at tricks and schemes in politics as are being made at this moment were never before known. Only a few days ago the dispatches announced that in my State there would be in the present Presidential election a fusion between the Republican and Union Labor parties. The purpose of this is manifest, but it will fail.

There is in Arkansas, as well as in other States, an organization of farmers known as the Wheel. It is not a political organization in any sense, but is simply an association of farmers, intended to secure co-operation among themselves for the purpose of bringing about the well-being and advancement of the great mass of people who engage in that business. It is intended to promote investigation and a better understanding of the moral, social, economic, as well as political forces affecting their interests. A strong effort is being made to divert this organization from its real purposes to serve the personal ends of artful demagogues. Certain political pariahs, blatant, self-seeking demagogues, have sought to "have" this organization as the devil sought to have Peter, but they will not succeed.

In a recent interview in a Western paper of wide circulation the candidate for Vice-President on the Union Labor ticket is reported to have said:

> The Union Labor party afforded the Wheelers the means of accomplishing their ends in politics. I may say that there is not a prominent Union Labor party man in Arkansas who is not a Wheeler. That will show you how close the relationship between the two is.

The fact "that there is not a prominent Union Labor party man in Arkansas who is not a Wheeler," and the other fact, carefully left out of view by this aspirant for the Vice-Presidency, that not one Wheeler in a hundred is a member of the Union Labor party, shows the whole case very distinctly. The "prominent" Union Labor party men have gotten into the Wheel to play the part that the serpent did in Eden. They have hoped that the Wheel afforded them the means of accomplishing their ends in politics, and they have gone about doing their master's bidding to the best of their ability.

By false promises, by perversions of records they hope to lead earnest men into the support, either directly or indirectly, of a party and principles which they detest. Four-fifths of the intelligent people of Arkansas are to-day in thorough accord with the President in his great struggle for the rights of our outraged and plundered farmers. They are, whether Wheelers or not, earnestly devoted to the cause of Democracy and the great principles it has always taught. If by any means this great mass of people could be induced to throw the vote of their State away in this struggle it might be the salvation of the present system of robbery. What would the great protected interest not give for such a result?

If by insidious and devious methods the willing and pliant tools of protection can so far divide and mislead the voters of this great stronghold of freedom, as to prostitute this great agricultural organization to the purposes of protection, they will have deserved well of their masters, and will be amply rewarded.

But I know the people of Arkansas too well to have any, the slightest, fear of their success. Cunningly devised, adroitly managed, and unscrupulously followed up, this scheme will fail of its purpose, and the authors of it will be covered with the confusion and shame that the contempt of all good men will shower upon them as the reward of their unholy attempt to betray the cause of liberty. The Democrats of Arkansas, those who believe in the eternal principles of that great party, whether farmers or not, whether Wheelers or not, will be found recording their votes in November as they have always done, in favor of the great party of the people and its nominees.

Some good men will doubtless be led astray by these minions of protection—the very elect are sometimes deceived—but their purpose in fomenting discord amongst Democrats will be plainly seen in time to avoid all danger. I believe as Mr. Lincoln is quoted as saying:

> You may deceive part of the people all the time, and all of the people part of the time; but no party can deceive all of the people all the time.

The hope of this country is in the honesty, sincerity, and good sense of the masses; all of them will not be led astray, and honesty and good government will prevail.

In the language of a great editor I believe—

> That humanity is advancing, and that there is progress in human life and human affairs, and that as sure as God lives the future will be greater and better than the present or the past.

Believing this, I have no doubt that unjust and unequal laws must go, and that in this country people will not only be created equal but that they will yet live equals, under the equal operation of just and impartial laws.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator from Nevada to give way for two or three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STEWART. If it involves no discussion, I will yield.

Mr. PALMER. If it does I will withdraw the bill I wish to call up.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

ST. CLAIR FLATS SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884.

The bill was read twice, and by unanimous consent considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PALMER. The object of the bill is to include the St. Clair Flats Canal in the list of canals which are under the supervision of the War Department. By some inadvertence in the river and harbor act of 1884 it was omitted. In that act the Des Moines Rapids Canal, the St. Mary's Falls Canal, and the Louisville and Portland Canal were included. The object of the bill is merely to amend section 7 of the act of 1884 in that respect.

The bill has the approbation of all the members of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate whom I could find, with the exception of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. I would have approached him if it had not been for the discourtesy of talking in front of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who was making a speech. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and myself, all approve of the measure.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask a question?

Mr. STEWART. If Senators are going to discuss the bill I must insist on proceeding with my remarks.

Mr. PALMER. There will be no discussion of it.

Mr. PLATT. I am not going to discuss it. I wish to ask if the bill in any way touches the question of the disputed jurisdiction of the St. Clair Flats Canal.

Mr. PALMER. Not at all. It merely puts it under Government supervision. The action is so necessary that I think the Senate will not object to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate, and had appointed Mr. CRISP, Mr. ANDERSON of Iowa, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance, on which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I propose to discuss the tariff, money, and politics, and shall begin with a brief review of the origin of the American system for the protection of home industry.

Commercial and industrial independence absorbed the attention of the colonies for generations before political independence was considered. The various devices adopted by Great Britain to depress the industries of the early American colonies for the benefit of the mother country attest the genius, brutality, and selfishness of the British Government in her efforts to hold the colonies in a state of poverty and dependence. She denied them the privilege of trading with any foreign country, and the whole force of the British navy was used as a guard to prevent foreign intercourse with America.

The laws enacted by Great Britain to prevent manufactures in the several colonies and trade between the colonies are monuments of cruelty, stupidity, folly, and despotism. The people were not allowed to use a boat, or a ship, or a carriage, or a pack-horse, to carry wool, or any manufacture of wool, from one colony to another; they could not land wool from an island in a harbor or convey it across a river. No British soldier stationed in America was allowed to buy more than 40 shillings' worth of woolens in the colonies. Many families were destitute of the English Bible, and yet they were not allowed to print it in America. The country was the home of the beaver, and to prevent the colonists from manufacturing their own hats no man could be a hatter or a journeyman hatter unless he had served seven years' apprenticeship. No American hat could be sent from one colony to another or loaded on a horse or cart for conveyance. America abounded in the best quality of iron ore, wood, and coal, but slitting mills, steel furnaces, and plating forges were prohibited. These are specimens of the laws of Great Britain which forced the colonies into revolt.

Mr. Bancroft, in his history of the United States, gives many pages of the common talk among the colonists, showing their condition and the oppression of Great Britain. For the purposes of illustration I quote the following:

> "It is plain," said even the calmest, "Englishmen do not regard Americans as members of the same family, brothers and equals, but as subordinates, bound to submit to oppression at their pleasure." "A bill was even prepared," thus men warned each other against new dangers, "that authorized quartering British soldiers upon American private families." "And is not our property seized," they further exclaimed, "by men who cry, 'Give, give,' and never say, 'Enough,' and thrown into a prerogative court to be forfeited without a jury?"

"There is not silver enough in the colonies to pay for the stamps," computed patriot financiers, "and the trade by which we could get more is prohibited." "And yet," declared the eager merchants of New York, "we have a natural right to every freedom of trade of the English." "To tax us and bind our commerce and restrain manufactures," reasoned even the most patient, "is to bid us make brick without straw." "The Northern colonies will be absolutely restricted from using any articles of clothing of their own fabric," predicted one colony to another. And men laughed as they added, "Catching a mouse within His Majesty's colonies with a trap of our own making will be deemed, in the ministerial cant, an infamous, atrocious, and nefarious crime." "A colonist," murmured a Boston man who had dipped into Grenville's pamphlet, "a colonist can not make a horseshoe or a hob-nail but some iron-monger of Britain shall bawl that he is robbed by the 'American republican.'" "Yes, they are even stupid enough," it was said in the town of Providence, "to judge it criminal for us to become our own manufacturers."

"We will eat no lamb," promised the multitude, seeking to retaliate; "we will wear no mourning at funerals." "We will none of us import British goods," said the traders in the towns. The inhabitants of North Carolina set up looms for weaving their own clothes and South Carolina was ready to follow the example. "The people," wrote Lieutenant-Governor Sharpe, of Maryland, "will go on upon manufactures." "We will have home-spun markets of linens and woolens," passed from mouth to mouth, till it found its way across the Atlantic and alarmed the king in council; "the ladies of the first fortune shall set the example of wearing home-spun;" "it will be accounted a virtue in them to wear a garment of their own spinning." "A little attention to manufactures will make us ample amends for the distresses of the present day, and render us a great, rich, and happy people."

Volumes of sentiments of this character might be collected showing how keenly the colonies suffered from the tyranny of Great Britain, which deprived them of the natural rights of trade and manufacture. The separate protests of the colonies were found unavailing; every petition was met by the enactment of more rigorous and cruel laws. Many efforts were made among the colonies to unite in a demand for the redress of their common grievances.

These efforts finally resulted, in 1765, in a convention or congress, which met in the city of New York. The subject of discussion was how to obtain redress from the mother country and the repeal of obnoxious laws. Otis, of Massachusetts, was instructed to support not only colonial liberties but chartered rights; Johnson, of Connecticut, pleaded chartered rights from the Crown; Robert Livingston, of New York, placed the rights of the colonists on broader grounds than the narrow limits of chartered rights. He contended that all the rights and privileges of Englishmen belonged to the colonists as a common heritage, and warned his associates to avoid the danger of technical quibbles growing out of the construction of particular charters. Gadsden, of South Carolina, was the inspiration of the assembly. He declared that they must stand on the broad and common ground of those natural rights that all feel and know belong to them as men and as descendants of Englishmen. Continuing, he said:

I wish the charters may not ensnare us at last by drawing different colonies to act differently in this great cause. Whenever that is the case, all will be over with the whole. There ought to be no New England man, no New Yorker, known on the continent, but all of us Americans.

His views prevailed and America was united, although a perfect union was not formed until after years of struggle and a most bloody and exhausting war, yet the sentiment remained and grew that "all of us are Americans," until it finally culminated in the Constitution of the United States. The discussion of grievances and the union of the colonies occupied the attention of the people until the immortal Declaration of Independence was proclaimed on the 4th of July, 1776. The seven years of war that followed impressed upon the colonies a realizing sense of the terrible privations and sufferings which befall a people who are compelled to endure the hardships and trials of war without manufactures, and who are forced to improvise not only the instruments and munitions of war, but the means of clothing, feeding, and transporting armies while the war is raging and danger is imminent.

During the war no protective tariff was necessary; all American ports were blockaded. An industrial crisis came with the close of the war. The Confederation had no power to impose duties on imports or deal with national questions. Some of the States passed tariff laws and started manufactures, but there was no uniformity of action or freedom of intercourse between them. Great Britain pursued her accustomed policy to destroy the manufactures of other countries and glutted the markets of the States with her cheap manufactures without regard to temporary loss. The advice which Lord Brougham gave after the war of 1812, in a speech in Parliament, was anticipated and acted upon in 1784. He said:

It is well worth while to incur a loss upon the first exportation, in order by the glut to stifle in the cradle the rising manufactures in the United States which the war had forced into existence contrary to the natural course of things.

During the first seven years after the war of the Revolution the balance of trade against the States was over $50,000,000, which was at that time more than $15 for each inhabitant. The condition of the Confederation became desperate and the people of the several States, actuated by a common impulse, formed associations to encourage home manufacturing. The ladies in Connecticut and North Carolina formed associations pledging themselves to retrenchment in their domestic expenses and to give encouragement to home manufactures. Numerous citizens of Richmond, Va., formed a similar association and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we will be at all times ready, by every encouragement in our power, to promote any well-founded scheme of trade and manufacture to which the circumstances of this State are adapted and the profits of which shall arise and center with her own citizens.

Resolved, That the present circumstances of this State are adapted to the manufacture of the coarser woolens, cottons, linens, cordage, leather, and iron, and the production of salted pork and beef, of butter, cheese, soap, tallow, and candles.

Resolved, therefore, That we will use the utmost of our exertions to promote agriculture in general, and more particularly those parts of it which tend most to the encouragement of our manufactures and to the diminution of our foreign importations.

The Association of Massachusetts expressed its views in the following manner:

Whereas the excessive use of articles of foreign growth and manufacture has been attended with the most pernicious consequences by exhausting our circulating medium and by diffusing a taste for extravagance; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance to encourage industry, frugality, and our own manufactures, to recover a circulating medium, to restore public credit, to facilitate the payment of public and private debts, and thereby to promote the welfare and happiness of our country:

With a view to these salutary and important purposes, we, the subscribers, do hereby enter into a solemn agreement and association to refrain from and, as far as in our power, to prevent, the excessive use and consumption of articles of foreign manufacture, especially articles of luxury and extravagance; and that we will exert our best endeavors for the promotion of industry and our own manufactures.

The people of Pennsylvania were thoroughly aroused. The inhabitants of Germantown adopted the following resolution:

We will individually exert our utmost influence for the promotion of industry and our own manufactures, and will refrain from, and, as far as in our power, prevent, the excessive use of foreign articles of luxury.

The Society of Pennsylvania for the Encouragement of Manufactures and Useful Arts declared:

The United States, having assumed the station of an independent Government, require new resources to support their rank and influence, both abroad and at home. Our distance from the nations of Europe; our possessing within ourselves the materials of the useful arts and articles of consumption and commerce; the profusion of wood and water, those powerful and necessary agents in all arts and manufactures, the variety of natural productions with which this extensive country abounds, and the number of people in our towns and most ancient settlements whose education has qualified them for employments of this nature all concur to point out the necessity of promoting and establishing manufactures among ourselves.

At a meeting of the State University of Pennsylvania, over which the governor presided, it was declared—

That an extravagant and wasteful use of foreign manufactures has been too just a charge against the people of the United States since the close of the war. They have been so cheap, and so easily obtained on credit, that the consumption of them has been absolutely wanton. * * * It behooves us to consider our untimely passion for European luxuries as a malignant and alarming symptom, threatening convulsions and dissolution to the political body. Let us hasten, then, to apply the most efficient remedies ere the disease becomes inveterate, lest unhappily we should find it incurable.

Other States passed similar resolutions. The voice of the press was in harmony with the sentiments of the people, but there was no power in the Confederation, as I before stated, to remedy these evils. A more perfect union was required, and when the States met in constitutional convention they gave the General Government express power to deal with the whole subject of commercial intercourse between the States and with foreign governments, and expressly conferred upon Congress the power to lay duties on imports. This is the language of the Constitution:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

The power granted is complete and comprehensive. Taxes, duties, imposts, and excises may be laid and collected, not only "to pay debts and provide for the common defense," but also to provide for the "general welfare of the United States." No doubt was expressed by the framers of the Constitution or their contemporaries that the power to impose duties for the protection of manufactures was granted by the Constitution. The contemporaneous discussions show that such protection was universally regarded as necessary for the general welfare.

Immediately upon the assembling of the First Congress, in 1789, petitions were presented by the people of the several States urging the passage of laws for the protection of home industries. The tradesmen, mechanics, and citizens of Baltimore presenting the following:

The happy period having now arrived when the United States are placed in a new situation, when the adoption of the General Government gives one sovereign legislature the sole and exclusive power of laying duties upon imports, your petitioners rejoice at the prospect this affords them, that America, freed from the commercial shackles which have so long bound her, will see and pursue her true interest, becoming independent in fact as well as in name; and they confidently hope that the encouragement and protection of American manufactures will claim the earliest attention of the supreme Legislature of the nation, as it is a universally acknowledged truth that the United States contain within their limits resources amply sufficient to enable them to become a great manufacturing country, and only want the patriotism and support of a wise, energetic government.

Similar petitions were presented from New York, Massachusetts, and other States.

The immortal Washington knew as well as any man could know the grievances that forced the colonies to separate from the mother country, the embarrassments under which the Confederation labored for the want of power to protect home industries and maintain financial and industrial independence, and also the purposes of the Constitution and the intent and meaning of the language used. In his first annual message, in 1790, he used the following language:

The advancement of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures by all proper means will not, I trust, need recommendation; but I can not forbear intimating to you the expediency of giving effectual encouragement as well to the introduction of new and useful inventions from abroad as to the exertions of skill in producing them at home.

In his second message, in discussing the rivalry of nations, he said:

I recommend it to your serious reflections how far and in what mode it may be expedient to guard against embarrassments from these contingencies by such encouragement to our own navigation as will render our commerce and agriculture less dependent on foreign bottoms, which may fail us at the very moments most interesting to both of these objects. Our fisheries and the transportation of our own produce offer us abundant means for guarding ourselves against evil.

In pursuance of the understanding and expectation of the people of the several States, among the first acts which were passed by the first Congress was an act to levy duties on imports, to raise revenue, and to protect home industry. It was entitled: "An act laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises imported into the United States." It was recommended and approved by President Washington, and its preamble is in the following significant language:

Whereas it is necessary for the support of the Government, the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandises imported.

Mr. Madison, who, as a member of the Constitutional convention contributed more than any other individual in the formation of the Constitution, took a leading part in the discussion of this bill in the House of Representatives. A few extracts from his remarks will be instructive. In speaking of the general purposes of the bill, he said:

The Union, by the establishment of a more effective government, having recovered from a state of imbecility that heretofore prevented a performance of its duty, ought, in its first act, to revive those principles of honor and honesty that have too long lain dormant.

Mr. Fitzimons, of Pennsylvania, offered an additional proposition or amendment, and remarked:

I have prepared myself with an additional number, which I wish subjoined to those already mentioned in the motion on your table; among these are some calculated to encourage the productions of our country and protect our infant manufactures.

In discussing this proposition Mr. Madison said:

Duties laid on imported articles may have an effect which comes within the idea of national prudence. It may happen that materials for manufactures may grow up without any encouragement for that purpose. It has been the case in some of the States, but in others regulations have been provided and have succeeded in producing some establishments which ought not to be allowed to perish from the alteration which has taken place. It would be cruel to neglect them and direct their industry to other channels, for it is not possible for the hand of man to shift from one employment to another without being injured by the change. There may be some manufactures which, being once formed, can advance toward perfection without any adventitious aid, while others, for want of the fostering hand of Government, will be unable to go on at all.

In giving his assent to Mr. Fitzimons' amendment he said:

I have no objection to the committee's accepting the proposition offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. * * * I think some of the propositions may be productive of revenue and some may protect our domestic manufactures, etc.

In the course of the debate Mr. Bland, of Virginia, said:

There are mines in Virginia capable of supplying the whole United States, and if some restraint were laid on the importation of foreign coal these mines might be worked to advantage.

Mr. Madison, continuing the debate, said:

The people adopted the new Constitution, I believe, under a universal expectation that we should collect higher duties; we must do this if we mean to avoid direct taxation, which was always means of revenue in particular States. * * * Let us review the policy of Great Britain toward us. Has she ever shown any disposition to enter into reciprocal regulations? Has she not by a temporary policy plainly declared that until we are able and willing to do justice to ourselves she will shut us out of her ports and make us tributary to her?

Washington, in his last message, said:

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuation of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.

And after his retirement from office, in a communication to the people, he said:

Ought our country to remain in such cases dependent on foreign supply, precarious because liable to be interrupted? If the necessary article should in this mode cost more in time of peace, will not the security and independence thence arising form an ample consideration?

At this time Washington was not only familiar, as I have already shown, with the grievances of the people before the war, their privations and necessities during the war, their embarrassments after the war, and before the tariff he had approved went into effect, and with the fact that during the seven years previous to that event the balance of trade was more than $50,000,000 against the States, but he also knew another important and material fact, showing the practical operation and effect of the new tariff. During the seven years from 1795 to 1801, both inclusive, after the new tariff went into effect, the balance of trade, instead of being against the United States, was in its favor more than $31,000,000, and the people were enjoying a degree of prosperity, progress, and contentment never before known on the American continent.

The principle of protection was maintained without compromise or opposition from any source of the slightest importance until after the election of Andrew Jackson in 1828. John Adams approved the principle in all his messages. Jefferson, the father and founder of the Democratic party, was a strong advocate of protection for home industry. In 1806, when it became evident that there would be a surplus in the Treasury, Mr. Jefferson, in his annual message, said:

The question, therefore, now comes forward, to what other objects shall these surpluses be appropriated and the whole surplus of import, after the discharge of the public debt and during these intervals when the purposes of war shall not call for them? Shall we suppress the impost and give that advantage to foreign over domestic manufactures? On a few articles of more general and necessary use the suppression in due season will doubtless be right; but the great mass of the articles on which impost is laid are foreign luxuries, purchased by those only who are rich enough to afford themselves the use of them. Their patriotism would certainly prefer its continuance and application to the great purposes of public education, roads, rivers, canals, and such other objects of public improvement as it may be thought proper to add to the constitutional enumeration of Federal powers.

The contrast between the method proposed by Mr. Jefferson and that of the present Executive to dispose of the surplus revenue is significant. Mr. Jefferson preferred to use the surplus revenue for education and internal improvements rather than to reduce or repeal the tariff, and disturb or destroy home industry. Mr. Cleveland's plan is to retain the internal-revenue war tax as an excuse for free trade and the destruction of American manufactures. Mr. Cleveland claims to be a Jeffersonian Democrat.

Mr. Madison, after he became President, maintained the same views with regard to a protective tariff which he had entertained as a member of the constitutional convention and of the House of Representatives. In his annual message of 1815, immediately after the war with Great Britain, he said:

But there is no subject that can enter with greater force and merit into the deliberations of Congress than the consideration of the means to preserve and promote the manufactures which have sprung into existence and attained an unparalleled maturity throughout the United States during the period of European wars. This source of national independence and wealth I anxiously recommend, therefore, to the prompt and constant guardianship of Congress.

In pursuance of this recommendation a bill was presented to increase the duties on imports. John Randolph, of Virginia, delivered one of his characteristic philippics against the whole system of protection, while Mr. Calhoun defended it in a most forcible argument. He said:

Neither agriculture, manufactures, nor commerce, taken separately, is the cause of wealth; it flows from the three combined and can not exist without each. The wealth of any single nation or any individual, it is true, may not immediately depend on the three, but such wealth always presupposes their existence. He viewed the words in the most enlarged sense. Without commerce industry would have no stimulus, without manufactures it would be without the means of production, and without agriculture neither of the others can subsist. When separated entirely and permanently they perish.

Protection never had a better friend than Mr. Monroe. In his inaugural address he declared the principles upon which he acted during his entire administration. He said:

Our manufacturers will require the systematic and fostering aid of the Government. Possessing, as we do, all the raw materials, the fruit of our own toil and industry, we ought not to depend in the degree we have done on supplies from other countries. While we are thus dependent the sudden event of war, unsought and unexpected, can not fail to plunge us into the most serious difficulties. It is important, too, that the capital which nourishes our manufactures should be domestic, as its influence in that case instead of exhausting, as it may do in foreign hands, would be felt advantageously to agriculture and every branch of industry. Equally important is it to provide at home a market for our raw materials, as by extending the competition it will enhance the price and protect the cultivator against the casualties incident to foreign markets.

In the last year of his administration (1824) another act was passed giving additional protection to home manufactures.

The candidates for the Presidency in 1824 were John Quincy Adams, Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, and William H. Crawford. Adams was Secretary of State under Monroe and Crawford was Secretary of the Treasury, and both were advocates of Monroe's policy of protection and of the act of 1824. Andrew Jackson, another illustrious Democrat who had been a protectionist during all his public life, supported Monroe's policy of protection and voted for the act of 1824. Clay was at this time Speaker of the House of Representatives, and also supported and voted for that law, as he previously had voted for and supported the tariff of 1816. None of the candidates had a majority of the electoral votes, and the election was thrown into the House, where, by a combination between Clay and Adams, the latter was elected.

After the Presidential election of 1828, in the last session of Congress of John Quincy Adams' administration, in obedience to public sentiment and on the recommendation of the President, an act was passed further increasing the duties on imports. This set at rest all question as to the views of Mr. Adams in regard to the principle of protection. Before the election, however, and during the campaign, it was contended that Mr. Adams, who was a candidate for re-election against General Jackson, not having recommended further protection during his term of office previous to the election, was not as good a protectionist as Jackson, who had been a consistent protectionist from the time of the administration of Washington. In addition to this, Jackson, on the 28th of February, 1828, in response to a resolution of the senate of Indiana requesting him to give a full explanation of his views on the tariff issue, addressed a letter to J. B. Ray, governor of Indiana, reviewing his own record on the question of protection, and declaring most unequivocally that he was in favor of protecting home manufactures.

President Jackson in his first message to Congress, in December, 1829, discussed at length the question of the protection of home industry, and among other things he said:

The agricultural interest of our country is so connected with every other, and so superior in importance to them all, that it is scarcely necessary to invite to it your special attention. It is principally as manufactures and commerce tend to increase the value of agricultural productions, and to extend their application to the wants and comforts of society, that they deserve the fostering care of Government.

Looking forward to the period, not far distant, when a sinking fund will no longer be required, the duties on those articles of importation which can not come in competition with our own productions are the first that should engage the attention of Congress in the modification of the tariff. Of these tea and coffee are the most prominent; they enter largely into the consumption of the country, and have become articles of necessity to all classes. A reduction, therefore, of the existing duties will be felt as a common benefit, but like all other legislation connected with commerce, to be efficacious, and not injurious, it should be gradual and certain

No more definite declaration of the principles of protective tariff could well be enunciated. The duties on articles that could be produced in this country were to be maintained, and any reduction which the state of the revenue would permit was to be made on articles that could not be produced in this country, and consequently did not come in competition with American productions. The surplus in the Treasury at the time of the delivery of this message was $5,000,000, and it was estimated that it would be about $4,000,000 on the 1st of January, 1830. Jackson, like Jefferson and Monroe, found a surplus in the Treasury with which he was called upon to deal at the commencement of his administration. He did not recommend a reduction of that surplus by reducing the duties on protected articles, but recommended the disposal of it by distributing it among the States according to population. He said:

To avoid these evils [meaning the evils of a surplus] it appears to me that the most safe, just, and federal disposition which could be made of this surplus revenue, would be its apportionment among the several States, according to their ratio of representation; and should this measure not be found warranted by the Constitution, that it would be expedient to propose to the States an amendment authorizing it.

Some years afterwards he stated that his opinion had changed with regard to the necessity of amending the Constitution. But that is immaterial. The only materiality in the suggestion is that General Jackson would reduce the surplus by any other means that could be devised rather than destroy our manufactures. In his second annual message he said:

The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust these duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely identical with that power that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the General Government, without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to the inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them; and consequently, if it is not possessed by the General Government, it must be extinct. Our political system would thus present the anomaly of the people stripped of the right to foster their own industry, and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely can not be the case; this indispensable power thus surrendered by the States must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated to Congress.

In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people.

The effect of the tariff of 1828 on the industries of the country was marvelous. General Jackson, in his annual message of December, 1831, had occasion to congratulate the country on the growth of manufactures, agriculture, and commerce. The excess of the revenues over the expenditures for the preceding year had been over $13,000,000, and the prosperity of the country was unparalleled.

Up to this time the United States had been regarded by statesmen as one common country. Its industrial, financial, and commercial independence was regarded by all statesmen as the object to be promoted by national legislation. In the mean time a disturbing element was developed. It was ascertained that the new and fertile lands of the South, by slave labor, could produce cotton cheaper than any other country in the world. The people of South Carolina abandoned the traditions of the fathers of the Republic and the principles upon which the nation had been founded for the common good of all. They were beguiled by the free-trade arguments of Great Britain and induced to believe that their interests demanded as free intercourse with the British Empire as South Carolina enjoyed with her sister States.

The discussions between Hayne and Webster presented a new issue between the cotton planters of the South and the manufacturers of the North, the same issue which is to-day under consideration. Although King Cotton now has no slaves, and although there is now greater necessity for protecting manufactures in the South than in the North, still the war for the destruction of Northern manufacturers for the benefit of England is raging as fiercely to-day as when it first begun. The arguments of Mr. Cleveland are borrowed from Hayne and McDuffie. I call particular attention to the language of Mr. McDuffie, of South Carolina, in the House of Representatives in 1832, when a bill was under consideration amending the tariff act of 1828, which was the last tariff act passed before the fatal compromise of 1833, to which I shall hereafter call attention. Mr. McDuffie said:

It is against domestic and not foreign industry that the manufacturers call for protection. But why is it that they need this very high and extravagant protection? It is because foreign manufactures are purchased with the productions of the Southern States, and because these are produced by slave labor, which is four times as cheap in the operations of agriculture as the white labor of the Northern States. This is the true and only cause why the manufacturers require the Government to interpose its powerful arm to keep down competition. It is, when properly considered, the greatest of all absurdities to suppose that it is against the English manufactures that this protection is demanded. This is a mere flimsy disguise to cover the fraud and conceal the outrage perpetrated against the planters. I confidently believe that the contributions exacted from the planting States of this Union by the action of this disguised and irresponsible despotism of confederated interests is in no degree less oppressive and disastrous than the exactions levied by the most insatiable of the Roman emperors from the conquered and dependent provinces of the empire. I mean not to cast any especial reproach upon the manufacturing confederacy, which constitutes the existing majority in this country. I speak nothing but the plain truths of philosophy when I say that on such a question as that which we are now considering they can not in the nature of things have any more sense or moral responsibility than an infuriated mob. And it is worthy of special remark here that the despotism of an irresponsible majority never existed in any country in a form so dangerous and so difficult to be resisted as it does at this moment in this Confederacy.

I call the attention of the laborers of this country to the frank admission of Mr. McDuffie, that the slave labor of the South was four times as cheap as the free labor of the North, and that therefore the planters of the South required no protective tariff against the underpaid labor of Europe, and also to his fierce denunciation against the American system and the government of the fathers, because they fostered and protected free labor from ruinous competition with the servile labor of foreign lands. He did not pretend that the system of government which he advocated was applicable to the whole country or any section of it, except where cotton was produced with slave labor. There, and there only, where slave labor was four times as cheap as free labor, no necessity existed for a protective tariff, and he boldly declared that the cotton planters would not submit to the payment of duties on imports, however beneficial it might be to the great majority of the people of the United States. His policy was predicated upon the cheap labor of African slaves, and the foundation of it was removed with the abolition of slavery. He never pretended that free trade was beneficial to free labor; he was opposed to free labor and to any legislation that would benefit it. He was more honest in the expression of his sentiment than the emissaries of the Cobden Club, who advocate free trade under the false pretense of increasing the wages of labor in this country by depriving the laborers of employment.

Jackson remained firm, and the act of July 14, 1832, continuing the protective policy was passed. He was re-elected in 1832 without the aid of South Carolina. A cotton rebellion was then inaugurated with the avowed purpose of obtaining free commercial intercourse with Great Britain for the benefit of cotton-planters, and in November, 1832, the celebrated nullification ordinance of South Carolina was adopted. The sole ground of complaint of South Carolina, and for which she passed the ordinance, was because of the policy of the United States of protecting home manufactures, which had been established by the Constitution, and had been maintained by patriotic statesmen for more than forty years.

The language of the ordinance is as follows:

1. That the tariff law of 1828, and the amendment of the same of 1832 are null and void, and no law, nor binding upon this State, its officers, or citizens.

2. No duties enjoined by that law or its amendment shall be paid or permitted to be paid in the State of South Carolina after the 1st day of February, 1833.

3. In no case involving the validity of the expected nullifying act of the Legislature shall an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States be permitted. No copy of proceedings shall be allowed to be taken for that purpose. Any attempt to appeal to the Supreme Court "may be dealt with as for a contempt of the court" from which the appeal is taken.

4. Every office-holder of the State, whether in the civil or military service, and every person hereafter assuming an office, and every juror, shall take an oath to obey this ordinance, and all acts of the Legislature in accordance therewith or suggested thereby.

5. If the Government of the United States shall attempt to enforce the tariff laws now existing by means of its Army or Navy, by closing the ports of the State, or preventing the egress or ingress of vessels, or shall in any way harass or obstruct the foreign commerce of the State, then South Carolina will no longer consider herself a member of the Federal Union. "The people of this State will thenceforth hold themselves absolved from all further obligation to maintain or preserve their political connection with the people of the other States, and will forthwith proceed to organize a separate government, and do all other acts and things which sovereign and independent States may of right do."

Although the firm action of General Jackson prevented the final consummation of the secession of South Carolina at the time, an humiliating compromise was made, whereby the industries of the nation were embarrassed, the finances deranged, the credit destroyed, and universal bankruptcy and misery throughout the country produced.

Great injustice has been done to the memories of Jackson, Clay, and other great statesmen who submitted to this compromise, by assuming that it expressed their real views upon the American system of protection, and by quoting them as favoring free trade. This is refuted by their long and patriotic services in support of measures for the protection of home industry. The only motive on their part for consenting to this legislation was a patriotic desire to preserve the country from anarchy and disunion by conciliating the cotton-planters by concessions to a policy which they knew was at war with the industrial interests of the whole country. These concessions, it was well known, would be injurious to the best interests of the country, but they were made to avoid the disruption of the Union, but were not accepted in the spirit of generosity and conciliation in which they were made. South Carolina never forgave General Jackson for forcing her to remain in the Union.

Mr. Clay was the author of this compromise measure. It is known as the tariff act of 1833. It provided that, from and after the 31st day of December, 1833, in all cases where duties are imposed on foreign imports by the act of the 14th of July, 1832, or by any other act, which shall exceed 20 per cent. of the value thereof, one-tenth part of such excess shall be deducted; from and after the 31st day of December, 1835, 1837, and 1839, respectively, a further deduction of one-tenth of said excess shall be made; and from and after the 31st day of December, 1841, a further reduction of one-half of the remainder of such excess; and from and after the 31st day of December, 1842, the residue of such excess shall be deducted.

As these reductions took place from time to time foreign imports increased and home manufacturing decayed. England availed herself of this opportunity to glut our markets, destroy our manufactures, and involve the people in debt. From that time forth it was unnecessary to discuss what disposition should be made of the surplus, because there was none.

Van Buren was elected to succeed Jackson in 1836, and during his term he was compelled from time to time to issue Treasury notes to obtain money to carry on the Government. The influx of foreign manufactures was such as to withdraw from the country its circulating medium in payment of foreign debts and in the purchase of foreign goods, and in 1837 bankruptcy prevailed throughout the United States. The crisis of 1837 will be memorable as one of the greatest calamities that has ever befallen this country. The causes that produced it were simple, direct, and certain—reduction of the tariff, destruction of home manufactures, glut of foreign goods, and loss of circulating medium.

The restoration of the tariff was the issue of 1840, as the preservation of the tariff is the issue of 1888. Van Buren, whose administration had been ruined by the operation of the compromise tariff of 1833, ran against General Harrison, who was opposed to that compromise and in favor of protection. General Harrison was elected by an overwhelming majority. He found the condition of the Treasury such, and the credit of the nation so far impaired, that he was compelled to convene Congress in extra session in June, 1841, to provide means to carry on the Government; but before the meeting of Congress he died. John Tyler, the Vice-President, succeeded to the Presidency.

The Presidential contest in 1840 between Martin Van Buren, of New York, and William Henry Harrison, of Ohio, was made on the issue of protection for free labor in the United States, or free trade for slave labor on the cotton plantations of the South. The Presidential contest of 1888 is between Grover Cleveland, of New York, and Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, and the issue is between the free labor of every section of the United States and the underpaid labor of Europe. Slavery in the United States is dead and eliminated from the contest, although its ghost stalks abroad and gives comfort to the enemies of free labor. History repeats itself, and the election of Harrison in 1888 will be a repetition of the victory for protection achieved in 1840.

Tyler undertook to reverse the verdict of the people and to sustain the free-trade compromise act of 1833. He vetoed two bills passed by Congress to restore the tariff and revive the industries of the country, and eight other bills during his term of office, and merited and received the just condemnation of John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and other leading patriotic statesmen for his usurpation of the legislative power of Congress. The bad precedent set by Tyler is bearing, and will continue to bear, bitter fruit containing the seeds of monarchy. But finally the condition of the country became so desperate, and the popular demand so strong, that Tyler was forced to sign the tariff bill of 1842, which was a bill not only for revenue, but for protection. The beneficial results of this legislation were manifest on every hand. Trade revived, manufactures increased, confidence was restored, the Treasury was replenished, and the people were relieved for a time from dependence upon foreign markets.

The election of 1844 was a contest between Mr. Polk and Mr. Clay. Although the tariff was an issue in that contest, it was subordinated by other issues which diverted the attention of the people and secured the success of Mr. Polk. The Democratic party claimed the northwest territory to 54° 40′, and the motto was "Fifty-four forty or fight." It was also in favor of the annexation of Texas. These issues were popular. The American people have always been in favor of the acquisition of new territory. President Polk compromised with Great Britain and surrendered to her all north of the parallel of 49°. The annexation of Texas involved war with Mexico. The acquisitions of territory, including Texas and California, brought about by this war, were of immense value to the United States, and if Mr. Polk had secured a fair settlement of our Northern boundary, and had refrained from making war on Northern industries by a reduction of the tariff, his administration would have been as illustrious as any of his predecessors. His Secretary of the Treasury, Robert J. Walker, was a politician of the South Carolina school, and an advocate of free trade. Under his auspices the tariff act of 1846 was passed. It largely reduced the duties on imports and changed many specific duties into ad valorem duties. The evil effects upon the business of the country of the tariff of 1846 were somewhat mitigated by the Mexican war, which, while it involved the country in debt, furnished a market for the people and created activity in business, and after the close of the war a new element of prosperity came into existence.

The discovery of gold in California changed the condition of things everywhere, revived business, increased imports, and provided the money to pay for them. Railroad building and the importation of iron largely increased the revenue, and enabled the Government to obtain sufficient money for ordinary expenses without largely increasing its debt.

The tariff of 1846 lasted for eleven years, when the cotton States asked for a further reduction. Under Buchanan's administration, in 1857, a further reduction was made, and, notwithstanding the flow of gold continued and the energy of the people was unabated, this last reduction gave Great Britain another opportunity to glut the markets and exhaust the circulating medium of the United States, whereby the celebrated crisis of 1857 was brought upon the country. Cotton was King, and the Northern industries were prostrated by the edicts of His Majesty.

In the mean time Great Britain had not been idle in her efforts to make the people of the United States tributary to her wealth and prosperity. She liberated her slaves in the West India Islands in 1833 and commenced the agitation of the abolition of slavery amongst the people of the North, while she cultivated intimate social and commercial relations with the South. By these means she was able to array the two sections against each other, her purpose being the destruction of not only the political but the industrial independence of both. The war that she intrigued to produce came. It found the United States with an empty Treasury, without credit, and the South without manufactures, relying on Great Britain to supply her with arms and munitions of war. The North had manufactories and mechanics, railroads, and all other means necessary to supply, equip, and transport armies. The conflict shook the continent; the South failed from exhaustion, largely produced by her want of manufactures; the North was victorious and the Union was saved, and the supposed reason for a different policy for the two sections removed. Slavery, which had excluded manufactures from the South, was abolished. The real interests of the North and the South were made the same. Free labor, both North and South, thereafter demanded protection from foreign competition. Cheap men and cheap labor no longer existed in any State of the Union by force of law.

In 1861, after the South had seceded, the loyal States adopted a tariff to protect home manufactures and encourage home production, which tariff, with some reductions, still remains, and under its benign influence, notwithstanding the destruction of war, the wealth of the nation has been increased in twenty-seven years from sixteen thousand million dollars to about sixty-five thousand million dollars.

The prosperity of the United States during that period is without a parallel. The depression of the last few years does not result from the tariff. On the contrary, the existing stagnation in business is caused by an insufficient supply of the circulating medium, and a repetition of the financial disasters of 1837 and 1857 has only been averted by a tariff which preserved the large balance of trade in favor of the United States until the renewal of the agitation of free trade by the message of President Cleveland.

The passage of the Mills bill in the present stringency of the money market would be followed by a glut of foreign manufactures and the withdrawal of our meager supply of money to pay for increased importation; home industry would be destroyed, millions thrown out of employment, and bankruptcy and ruin would be inevitable. The President's message and the passage of the Mills bill through the House are bearing fruit. We are already buying more than we sell in foreign markets. Money is leaving the country to pay balances. The prudence of business men withholds the means of creating new manufactures or enlarging existing establishments. The fear of a glut in the markets by cheap importations has checked production, reduced the number of laborers, and increased the army of the unemployed. The bare fear of the passage of the Mills bill and the contraction of the currency by shipping gold to Europe to pay for increased importations has brought us to the brink of financial ruin.

In order to show the real cause of the depression which now prevails, and to answer the argument which falsely ascribes it to the tariff, it is necessary to examine briefly the question of money. I will first point out the injurious effects upon commerce, agriculture, and production by the contraction resulting from the manipulations of interested parties to demonetize silver, after which I will compare the one-crop agricultural countries with the countries having a multiplicity of industries and a high state of manufactures, and I will also call attention to the new industries that are springing up in the South, and the ruin that will result in that section if the free-trade policy of President Cleveland shall prevail after the system of raising cotton by slave labor for the benefit of England, which produced the free-trade party in America, has been abolished. I shall also expose the absurdity of acquiring foreign markets by the destruction of our own, and show that there are no foreign markets to be acquired.

FINANCE.

Financial independence is equally as necessary to the prosperity of a nation as industrial independence. Neither can exist without the other. Products can not be interchanged or business enterprises conducted without money. The price of property, including services, is the amount of money for which it can be exchanged. The value of money is governed by the same law of supply and demand that fixes the price of property. A deficient supply of money is called contraction. An over abundance is called expansion. The more stringent the contraction the more property will be required in exchange for a given amount of money. The greater the expansion of the circulating medium the larger the amount of money which can be acquired with a given quantity of property. From which it follows that the value of money depends upon the volume of the circulation and not upon the material of which money is made.

Gold and silver were selected in the early ages of civilization as money metals. They have always determined the price of property and the value of obligations for the payment of money, including issues of paper circulation redeemable in coin. The quantity of gold and silver in existence in the commercial world has consequently determined the price of all other things. Property and services have been forced to correspond in price to the volume of these metals. It is a significant fact that civilization itself has advanced, remained stationary, or receded, in response to the increase or failing supply of the precious metals.

While Rome augmented her stores of gold and silver from the treasures of conquered nations and from the toil in the mines of the vanquished armies she enslaved, she advanced in power, wealth, and dominion until her circulating medium in gold and silver, at the time of the zenith of her glory, is variously estimated at from two thousand to three thousand millions of dollars. When she ceased to acquire the precious metals her ruin commenced.

During the fifteen hundred years which followed the reign of Augustus this vast accumulation of gold and silver gradually disappeared by wear and loss, by war, and by accident on land and sea, until, in the year 1500, less than $150,000,000 remained in the commercial world. The price of property and labor during all this dreary period, called the Dark Ages, declined as the volume of the circulating medium was contracted, until the laborers of Europe were feudal slaves.

The flow of gold from Mexico and South America, commencing with the fifteenth century, in three hundred years replenished the exhausted circulating medium of the civilized world and increased it to near the same amount which existed in the Roman Empire at the beginning of the Christian era. Civilization revived with this new supply of the precious metals and advanced without embarrassment so long as the supply continued.

The Spanish-American wars retarded mining in the early part of the present century and its depressing effects were immediately felt throughout the civilized world. Notwithstanding the enormous impetus which civilization had received during the preceding three hundred years from a continued supply of the precious metals, the diminution of that supply produced stagnation, low prices of labor and of commodities throughout Europe and America from about 1810 to 1850, when the gold discoveries in California and Australia furnished new life-blood to commerce, business, and enterprise, and advanced the prosperity of the world in the twenty-five years from 1849 to 1875 more than it had advanced in any period of one hundred years which had preceded it.

At the end of the year 1875 a conspiracy, which commenced in Germany in 1871, to discard one of the precious metals, for the purpose of enhancing the obligation of contracts by contracting the world's money, was so far consummated that silver was excluded from every mint in the United States and Europe and discarded as a money metal exchangeable for coin at any fixed standard. Since 1875 the civilized world has been contending against the relentless pressure of contraction. From 1810 to 1850 the price of property and of labor decreased with the shrinking supply of the precious metals, and at the latter date it reached a lower point than it touched at any time within the previous century. From 1850 to 1875 the annual product of gold and silver averaged nearly $200,000,000 and the price of property and of services increased more than 30 per cent. More wealth was produced and more of the comforts of life were enjoyed during that period than during the whole century that preceded it.

From 1875 to the present time gold alone has been treated by Europe and America as a money metal, and although the aggregate supply of the two metals has increased rather than diminished, the annual supply of gold has been but little more than one-half of the annual product of the two metals combined for the twenty-five years preceding the exclusion of silver from the mints of Europe and America, which has reduced the supply of money metals nearly one-half and inflicted upon the world the withering blight of violent contraction. Notwithstanding the accumulations of gold and silver furnished by the new discoveries, and notwithstanding the various devices by which paper circulation has been maintained, the contraction occasioned by the rejection of silver has already checked the progress of the civilized world and reduced the price of property more than 33 per cent., which is now as low, if not lower, than it was in 1850.

The act of 1878, which requires the purchase and coinage of not more than four million nor less than two million dollars' worth of silver bullion per month, has saved the United States from utter bankruptcy by adding to the circulating medium more than $300,000,000.

The great financial question of the hour is the restoration of silver to its place as money, and the revival of business and the renewal of prosperity by a generous supply of the circulating medium, which would be afforded by the joint annual production of two hundred millions of gold and silver.

The Republican party and its nominee for President are pledged by the platform adopted at the Chicago convention to favor the use of both gold and silver as money, treating neither as a commodity of depreciated value, and although the great mass of the Democratic party are in favor of the free coinage of silver, that party was restrained from an expression of its honest views upon this vital question on account of the unfortunate position its candidate for President occupies with regard to it.

President Cleveland, by the use of the enormous power of his great office, has during his short administration depressed the price of silver more than 17 per cent. His exertions to prevent its use as money in any form have been vigorous and persistent. Before his inauguration he addressed a letter to the Democratic members of the Forty-eighth Congress urging the repeal of all laws providing for the coinage of silver, and assumed that the bonds of the United States were payable in gold alone, notwithstanding that the statutes under which every debt of the United States was contracted provided that it might be paid in coin of either gold or silver.

In July, 1885, the President, through his authorized agent, George Walker, consul-general to Paris, informed the Latin Union Monetary Conference assembled in that city that there was a growing sentiment in the United States in favor of the repeal of the Bland act, and that the Administration would do all in its power to secure its repeal. In his annual messages to Congress in 1885 and 1886 he urgently advised the repeal of all laws providing for silver coinage, and predicted ruin and disaster if this were not done. In 1885 and 1887 he sent commissioners to Europe, who entertained views on this subject in harmony with his own, to junket about in that country at the expense of the United States and inculcate theories adverse to the free use of silver as money, namely, Manton Marble in 1885 and Edward Atkinson in 1887, both abundantly competent to misrepresent the United States on the vital question of the free coinage of silver. When the Senate, in April last, amended the House bill authorizing the purchase of United States bonds by requiring the purchase and coinage of sufficient silver to take the place of the national-bank notes retired, and thus stop further contraction, the bill, through the alleged influence of the Administration, when it was returned to the House, was smothered in the Democratic Committee of Ways and Means, from whence it will never emerge.

The opposition of President Cleveland to the use of silver as money is so intense that he refuses to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase and coin more than $2,000,000 worth of silver per month, although the surplus in the Treasury and the stringency of the money market indicate that the contingency exists contemplated by Congress, when it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase and coin $4,000,000 worth of silver per month. The President advocates the purchase of bonds at 27 per cent. premium, and the destruction of our manufactures by free trade to reduce the surplus, rather than relieve the stringency of the money market by exercising the discretion conferred upon him by Congress to coin more silver.

Whatever may be the views of the Democratic party or the sufferings of the people in consequence of contraction, Mr. Cleveland will never sign a bill for the free coinage of silver to afford them relief. He does not regard it as a calamity that the prices of wheat and cotton, the staple farm products of this country for export, have fallen so low that there is no profit in their production. He makes no account of the fact that silver has the same purchasing power in India and other Asiatic countries that it ever possessed, and that 412½ grains of silver will purchase the same amount of wheat or cotton to-day in all countries retaining the silver standard as it would before that metal was excluded from our mints, and that the prices of wheat and cotton have declined and must decline in the markets of Europe and America in exact accordance with the fall of the price of silver.

The fact that silver can be bought in this country at 30 per cent. discount and exchanged in India at par is immaterial to the President. It makes no difference to him that the wheat bought in India with silver costs the importer in European markets 30 per cent. less than wheat bought in America with gold, and that therefore India wheat is fast supplanting wheat from America, and that importers of wheat from America are forced to sell in the Liverpool market at prices fixed by India wheat. In proof of this assertion I will print in the appendix to my remarks tables showing that the purchasing power of silver bullion has not decreased in India or any other country which maintains the silver standard, while the price of that metal has declined in this country over 30 per cent. since its exclusion from the mints, and the prices of wheat and cotton in the United States have kept pace in their decline with every fall in silver. (See Exhibits A, B, C, D, and E.)

It is useless for the Democratic party to point to their votes in Congress in favor of remonetizing silver while they indorse the administration and advocate the election of a President whose avowed policy on all financial questions is in accordance with the views of the most avaricious Shylock, who, without remorse, would enslave mankind to enhance the value of his bonds and increase the burdens of his debtors.

MANUFACTURES.

While financial independence and commercial success can only be maintained by an ample and permanent supply of money, the state of manufactures always indicates the prosperity enjoyed by the people. This proposition is verified by comparing the condition of manufacturing countries with that of purely agricultural countries at any period of history which may be selected. Such comparison will in every case, without an exception, prove the truth of my proposition. A few examples will illustrate this.

During the eighteen years that Ireland had an independent parliament (from 1782 to 1800) her manufactures developed enormously under laws protecting her home industries. At the time of the union with England, in 1800, there were employed in manufacturing in Ireland about 250,000 people. Her manufactures are now nearly all destroyed, except the flax industry in the north of Ireland, which the English Government has not suppressed. The magnitude of the manufactures of Ireland when 250,000 people were employed in industrial pursuits will be appreciated by an example of three American States. Illinois, Indiana, and New Jersey, in 1880, contained a population of 6,187,288, which was about the same as that of Ireland at the time of its union with England. The number of persons employed in manufacturing in the three States named in the year 1880, was 240,266, not quite equal to the number employed in Ireland in manufacturing at the time in question. The value of manufactured products in these three States was $817,046,420, which was over $200,000,000 more than the products of all the manufactures of the sixteen Southern States. The manufacturing industries of Ireland were destroyed by English laws. After the union England required Ireland to receive free of duty English manufactured commodities, and by glutting her markets destroyed her manufactures, according to the advice of Lord Brougham, to which I have already alluded.

Many apt illustrations might be given showing the effect of manufacturing in our own country upon the growth, prosperity, wealth, and development of those sections of the United States where the energies of the people have been directed to multifarious industries, as compared with those other sections where the industries of the people have been mainly confined to the pursuit of farming. The products of manufactures in the State of Ohio in 1880 amounted to $348,305,390, while the value of the products of all the manufactures of the late Confederate States, namely, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, was, in the same year, only $240,544,295. The area of farms in the late Confederate States was at the same date 197,554,865 acres, of the aggregate value of $1,229,958,624, while the entire area of farms in Ohio was only 24,529,226 acres, and the aggregate value thereof was $1,127,497,353, only $102,461,271, less than the value of all the farms in the late Confederate States; an acre of farm land in Ohio being equal in value to about eight in the late Confederate States.

The area of farms in Indiana and Kentucky were about equal, the former containing 20,656,259 acres and the latter 21,941,974 acres, while the products of manufactures in Indiana were about double in value of those of Kentucky, the former being $148,600,411 and the latter $75,483,311. The value of the land in Indiana, following the value of the products of manufactures, was more than double that of Kentucky, the former being $635,236,111; and the latter $299,298,631; an acre in Indiana being worth more than two acres of farm land in Kentucky, and an acre in the former being worth more than $31 while an acre in the latter was only worth about $14.

If we were to compare the great manufacturing States of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and New England with the South the contrast would be more apparent. For example, the products of manufactures in the State of Massachusetts in the year 1880 was $631,511,484, while the products of all the manufactures of the sixteen Southern States was in the same year only $631,401,105. The number of acres of farms in the State of Massachusetts was, in 1880, 3,359,079, and was of the value of $146,197,415, while 22,639,644 acres of farms in the State of North Carolina were valued at only $135,793,602; an acre in Massachusetts being worth about $48 while an acre in North Carolina was worth only about $6.

The value of the products of the manufactures of North Carolina in 1880 was only $20,084,237. The value of manufactured products of New York and New Jersey in 1880 was $1,335,013,932, being more than double the value of the products of manufactures of the sixteen Southern States; and the estimated value of real and personal property of New York and New Jersey was $9,052,000,000, while the total estimated value of the real and personal property of the sixteen Southern States was only $8,569,000,000. Take the States of California and Texas, which are about equal in age, for another comparison. Texas in 1880 had 36,303,454 acres of farms, while California had only 16,593,742 acres. The value of the products of the manufactures of California in 1880 was $116,227,973, against $20,719,928 for Texas. The value of the farms in California was $262,051,282, while those of Texas were valued at only $170,468,886; an acre of land in California being worth about $19 and an acre in Texas about $4.

THE NEW SOUTH.

The foregoing comparisons between the agricultural States of the South and the manufacturing States of the North are made from the census of 1880. Since that time a new South has sprung into existence, which exhibits a growth of varied industries which can not fail in the near future to rival the Northern States. I found it impossible to gather statistics as to the value of the products of manufactures in the Southern States since 1880, but the various publications in the South furnish very accurate data of the new capital employed in the South in manufactures, and also the number of new factories established during the years 1886, 1887, and the first six months of 1888.

In 1880 Alabama had only $9,668,008 invested in manufactures, and on June 30, 1888, she had $62,922,000 invested in manufacturing establishments. Arkansas in 1880 had $2,953,130 as against $22,216,000 invested in manufactures on June 30, 1888. Florida increased her investments in manufactures from $3,210,680 in 1880 to $6,996,680 on June 30, 1888, and between the same periods Georgia increased her investments from $20,672,410 to $40,464,510; Kentucky, from $45,813,039 to $99,010,039; Louisiana, from $11,462,468 to $21,116,668; Maryland, from $58,742,384 to $76,355,909; Mississippi, from $4,727,600 to $10,328,640; North Carolina, from $13,045,639 to $18,617,890; South Carolina, from $11,205,894 to $16,748,720; Tennessee, from $20,092,845 to $60,886,500; Texas, from $9,245,561 to $34,540,600; Virginia, from $26,968,990 to $41,854,000, and West Virginia, from $13,883,390 to $22,950,500. The total investments in manufactures of the States above named was in 1880 $261,822,138, while on June 30, 1888, it had reached $535,018,656, an increase in eight and one-half years of 104.6 per cent. The greater part of this increase has been made in the last thirty months.

The following table will show the number and kinds of factories established in the fourteen States above named during the last thirty months:

Kinds of factories.	1886	1887.	1888.*
Agricultural implements	11	25	6
Brick works	53	169	95

* First six months of.

The foregoing table shows that the number of factories established in 1887 was nearly 100 per cent. greater than the number in 1886, and the number established in the first six months of 1888 shows that there will be a corresponding increase for the year 1888 over the year 1887 with the latter year over 1886. The articles to be manufactured by these establishments are such as would be forced in competition with foreign commodities under free trade, and these establishments would be easily destroyed by the glut from Great Britain which would follow a reduction of the tariff.

I am indebted to Mr. MCKINLEY for the following table, compiled from his recent Georgia speech, also showing the growth of the New South:

Items.	1880.	1888.
Cotton mills	179	300

This new development of manufactures in the South is a glorious promise for that section if the American system of protection can be maintained. It is hardly necessary to call the attention of the country to the superior advantages of the South for the development of her manufactures. Excluding a narrow strip of country bordering on the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf, peculiarly adapted to the production of rice, sugar, and cotton, the balance of that vast region south of Mason and Dixon's line has a climate as well suited to promote the health, vigor, activity, and intelligence of white as well as black laborers as that of any section of the United States; its soil abounds in every product of the temperate zone, and particularly such articles as are used in the manufacture of textile fabrics, including hemp, flax, jute, wool; and over a large extent of this area cotton is also produced; and besides, all the great cotton-fields of America, if not included within, lie adjoining and form parts of the great States of the South. Wood, coal, iron, and every mineral necessary for use in the manufacture of iron and steel abound in unlimited quantities. Water power for the use of manufactories exists on every hand, and the climate is such as to render its use available throughout the year, in winter as well as in summer. In short, nature has done everything for the South that she has done for the most favored land, and this new birth of industry indicates a disposition of the people to discard dependence upon any other section of this country, or any foreign land, and join in a noble rivalry with the East and the great and growing West in the development of the vast resources of our common country, and in the development of the intellectual faculties of the people by making the whole country a school, so to speak, of technology, in which every youth shall be taught some useful employment.

Already the names of the growing centers of industrial development in the South are familiar throughout the land. South Pittsburg, in Tennessee, bids fair to rival its namesake in the great State of Pennsylvania, and the day is not far distant when Birmingham, in Alabama, will be as well known throughout the world as the Birmingham of old England. Anniston, Talladega, and Tuscaloosa, in Alabama; Atlanta, Augusta, Columbus, and Rome, in Georgia; Chattanooga and Lawrenceburgh, in Tennessee; Burlington and Charlotte, in North Carolina, and Little Rock, in Arkansas, exhibit the same thrift, enterprise, activity, and prosperity that is witnessed in the most thriving manufacturing towns in the North. Skilled artisans and mechanics are already flocking to these centers of industry. Both Northern and local capital find profitable investments, and industries of every kind are multiplying and developing in these and many other places in the growing South. Nothing but unwise legislation can prevent the development of the resources or mar the prosperity of the South.

THE NECESSITY OF MARKETS.

The fact that manufactures can not be maintained without markets seems self-evident; but strange as it may appear this truth is generally ignored by the advocates of free trade. The efforts of Great Britain to secure markets for her manufactures show what importance she attaches to them; the skill of her diplomats, the power of her army and navy, and the resources of her treasury have been exhausted by the use of strategy, force, and money to protect the markets of her own country and to secure the markets of foreign countries for her manufactured commodities. She holds in her despotic grasp Ireland, India, Egypt, and more than fifty other countries, for the sole purpose of compelling their inhabitants to purchase her wares. Her cruel exactions from her American colonies, and her vindictive war to retain them as tributaries to her industrial resources, I have already mentioned.

Her utter lack of all sense of moral obligation in pursuit of foreign markets is illustrated by her encouragement of slavery in the South and of the abolition of slavery in the North, by her acknowledgment of the belligerent rights of the South while she maintained friendly diplomatic relations with the North, by her building armed cruisers to run the blockade and carry on contraband trade with the South while she retained all the advantages afforded by the markets of the North for military supplies and munitions of war, and by the ruin and demoralization she has produced in China, in forcing that unwarlike people to make a market for her opium, and also by corrupting the minds and warping the judgment of the youth of America by awarding prizes to students of our colleges and universities for writing essays in favor of the surrender of our markets to English manufacturers.

The influence of the Cobden Club in institutions of learning, which are the pride of America, such as Harvard, Yale, Williams, and others, is most unfortunate. It is strange that the educators of this country fail to realize that there may be some sinister motive in the contributions of the aristocracy of England for the education of American youth. The influence of the Cobden Club is also felt in the public press, where hundreds of editors, who have been taught at the seats of learning of both England and the United States the arguments of the Cobden Club in favor of free trade, are daily flooding the country with arguments to show that the prosperity of this country would be enhanced by surrendering our markets to England. The character of these arguments is well illustrated by a short extract from the last report of the Cobden Club, published in London, showing its membership, operations, and purposes. It is as follows:

Your committee have never despaired of the ultimate adoption of free trade by the commercial nations of the world, in accordance with the aspirations of Richard Cobden. They do not forget what has been forcibly explained by Mr. Medley and others, that the adoption of a free-trade policy by great productive nations like America would probably put a severe strain upon our power to compete with all comers in neutral markets; and they have in their publications emphasized the point that Great Britain enjoys "the lion's share of the world's trade" to a large extent, because the nation which has free imports while other nations impose a tariff enjoys the best half of the free-trade loaf. But the Cobden Club puts faith in free trade as a principle of universal application for the benefit of mankind, and therefore your committee rejoice to see that the Government of the United States, by the very inconvenient excess of its tariff revenue, is being driven irresistibly to the reduction of its tariff. A considerable reduction of American tariffs would have the effect of educating the people of the States in the true principles of international exchange.

Competition with "all comers in neutral markets" is good; it would be better, however, if the report had continued and stated where such "neutral markets" exist for the products of the United States.

THE UNITED STATES EXCLUDED FROM FOREIGN MARKETS BY FOREIGN TARIFFS.

An examination of the tariffs of England and her various colonies, together with the protection she extends to her steam-ship lines by subsidies amounting to near $4,000,000 per annum, and the credit facilities her banking institutions afford to exporters of her manufactures, will show with what care and ingenuity she has guarded against the possibility of any product of the United States entering her dominions which she can obtain elsewhere; and an examination of the tariff laws of all other organized governments will also show that all American products are shut out from every foreign market in the world, except such products of the United States as can not be obtained from any other source.

I will print in the appendix to my speech tables showing the tariffs of England and her colonies, and also the tariffs of other nations. (See Exhibits F, G, and H.) I challenge any free-trader to examine these tables and point out where there is a foreign market in any country for the products of the United States, which that country can produce in sufficient quantities or obtain elsewhere, or where the United States could obtain any additional foreign markets for her products if she extended free trade to all the world.

The following brief statements of the main features of some of the foreign tariffs will illustrate how other countries protect their markets:

On cotton gloves France levies a duty of $88.44 per 100 pounds. The importation of tobacco on private account is prohibited, and only a few privileged importers are allowed 22 pounds per annum for their personal use. Cigars and cigarettes are taxed $315.15 per 100 pounds; smoking, snuff, and chewing tobacco, $131.32 per 100 pounds. The importation of tobacco, raw or cured in the leaf, is absolutely prohibited, and the importation of pork is virtually prohibited. Woolen goods are taxed from 40 to 110 per cent.

The German tariff regulations as to pork are virtually prohibitory. In 1872 the German Empire inaugurated the system of protection. In that year the imports amounted to $824,432,000 and the exports to $593,096,000, while in 1886, under the influence of her protective tariff, her exports rose to $726,225,000 and her imports fell to $700,902,000. In seven years Germany has increased her tariff on foreign wheat. In 1879 the duty was 6⅔ cents per bushel; in 1881, 20 cents per bushel; and in 1887, it was increased to 33⅓ cents per bushel.

The tariff of Russia is virtually prohibitory. Plain woolen goods pay a duty of 79 cents per pound, and if colored 30 per cent. is added. The duties on cotton goods vary from 40 to 120 per cent. On American tobacco Russia levies duties of from 250 to 680 per cent., and on American wines from 80 to 125 per cent.

Spain collects on cotton goods from 30 to 70 per cent., and on woolen goods from 20 to 66 per cent. A duty of $16 per ton is levied on iron and steel rails, and $38 per ton on iron nails.

A duty of 120 per cent. is levied on American clocks by Italy. On cotton and woolen goods the duty is from 30 to 70 per cent.

Mexico taxes unbleached cotton cloth 150 to 175 per cent., and bleached cloth from 150 to 200 per cent. Common cotton covers for umbrellas pay a duty of $1 per pound, while they are not worth 26 cents per pound. Her duty on iron nails is over 100 per cent.; on tobacco from 100 to 300 per cent. The duties on woolen goods are virtually prohibitory.

Brazil lays a duty of from 45 to 125 per cent. on tobacco, besides a special duty of 40 and 60 per cent., making the duty 145 to 225 per cent. On cotton and woolen goods her tariff is almost prohibitory.

Argentine Republic levies a general duty of 25 per cent.; but on wheat she exacts from 80 to 100 per cent. The duty on American clocks is from 100 to 200 per cent.

Our tobacco has to pay a duty of 150 per cent. and our cigars 300 per cent. in Chili. The duty on American clocks is 80 per cent., and some of our boots and shoes are taxed at from 75 to 125 per cent.

Peru charges a duty of 70 per cent. on spirits, 40 per cent. on cotton and woolen goods, and 70 per cent. on cigars.

The duties of Venezuela on cotton and woolen goods are almost prohibitory.

I desire to call especial attention to a few items in the tariffs of Great Britain and her provinces. The import duties collected in England in 1887 amounted to $101,564,430 (see Exhibit I), which was $2.73 for every man, woman, and child in Great Britain and Ireland, while the duties collected in the United States during the same year amounted to about $217,000,000, which was $3.46 per capita, estimating the population at 62,000,000. Although the duties collected in the United States exceed those of Great Britain per capita, yet the various devices adopted by Great Britain furnish her manufacturers far more protection from competition with foreign countries than the manufacturers of the United States enjoy. The reason why duties in England do not amount to as much per capita as duties in the United States is not because England practices free trade (which she urges us to adopt), but because the principles of protection are fully complied with by the duties she levies.

She can not collect duties on articles of food which are not produced in sufficient quantities at home without injury to her manufactures by increasing the price of living so as to deprive her of the power of cheap production, even with starvation wages. Her situation as to food for her people is similar to that of the United States with regard to tea and coffee. We produce no tea or coffee, and therefore admit them free of duty.

Great Britain does not levy a duty on manufactured commodities because the advantages she furnishes to her manufacturers in ample and stable markets throughout the world, and in large subsidies to steamships, etc., enable them to manufacture cheaper than any other people, and consequently they are freed from competition from abroad.

On articles imported from the United States which are not indispensable to enable her to manufacture cheaply she levies enormous duties. From tobacco alone, principally imported from the United States, she collected in 1887 $47,374,440 of duty, and the duty so collected per pound was 775 per cent. of the cost of that commodity in this country. She also collected during the same year from rum, brandy, and other spirits, mostly imported from the United States, $21,235,845.

The duties collected in the various colonies of Great Britain, except India, are enormous. India is held under the military control of Great Britain and its business is conducted by the East India Council in London. Its people are practically the slaves of Great Britain, but little foreign intercourse is tolerated, and therefore only $6,165,000 was collected from duties in India in 1887. India is held by Great Britain for two purposes: first, to furnish an exclusive market for the wares and products of Great Britain, and, second, to contribute to the support of that government.

I have already stated that the duties per capita collected in England amounted to $2.73 in 1887, and that the duties per capita amounted to $3.46 in the United States. The following were the duties per capita collected in 1887 in the various colonies of Great Britain, with the exception of India:

Malta, $4.50; Ascension Islands, $6.35; Lagos, $2.55; Bermudas, $7.95; Falkland Islands, $9.74; British Guiana, $3.85; British Honduras, $5.09; Newfoundland, $4.85; Jamaica, $2.60; Trinidad, $7.40; Barbadoes, $3.04; Canada, $4.35; Cape of Good Hope, $4.13; Mauritius, $3.22; Natal, $1.92; Fiji, $1.16; New South Wales, $9.48; New Zealand, $10.90; Queensland, $14.15; South Australia, $15.01; Tasmania, $16.49; Victoria, $10.66; Western Australia, $20. (See tabulated statement giving population and duties collected, Exhibit J.)

The false pretenses of the Cobden Club are rebuked by their own countrymen in the following extract from the Financial Reform Almanac for 1887, page 161, in this impressive language:

> It thus becomes clear that the free-trade sermons so constantly preached to foreign nations and to her colonies by Great Britain are all spoiled by the practice not agreeing with the precept. It is the old case of "Don't do as I do, but do as I tell you," and every people under the sun must realize our hypocrisy in posing as a free-trade nation while taxing their products.

The duties imposed by Canada are mainly directed against the products of the United States. On agricultural machinery the duty is 35 per cent., while on all other machinery it is from 10 to 25 per cent. The machines exported from the United States to Canada are principally agricultural. Petroleum imported from this country pays 100 per cent. duty, while other oils imported from elsewhere pay only from 10 to 25 per cent. duty. On anthracite coal from the United States Canada charges 56 cents a ton duty, while the United States imposes no duty on that article imported from Canada. The United States imposes no duty on tea and coffee, and to prevent our merchants from importing those articles and selling them in Canadian markets Canada imposes a duty of 10 per cent. when imported from the United States, admitting them free from all other sources. This duty was levied by Canada after the establishment of an American steam-ship line to China. Whisky and spirits of all kinds pay a duty of from $1.33 to $2.02 per gallon. The people of several of the States of the West are anxious for cheap lumber, and it has been suggested that the repeal of the duty of $2 a thousand feet on lumber might give them some relief. This is a mistake, as shown in the case of logs for lumber imported from Canada. The United States imposes no duty on logs, but Canada, finding that they will bear a duty and still compete successfully with logs cut in the United States, imposes an export duty of $1.01 per thousand feet on logs.

The famous Joggins raft, which attracted so much attention on its passage from Canada to New York, contained 3,000,000 feet of lumber, upon which Canada collected a duty of $3,030, but it was admitted free of duty into the United States. If the United States should repeal the duty on lumber, can there be any doubt that Canada would collect an export duty, and that the only party who would be benefited by such repeal would be the Government of the Dominion of Canada instead of the Government of the United States?

Canada has still another method of collecting a tax on timber which she might resort to in lieu of an export duty in case lumber were put on the free-list, so that an additional burden or tax could be put upon it in Canada and still compete with lumber cut in the United States. Nearly all the lumber in Canada is on land belonging to the Dominion. She now charges for the privilege of cutting it $5 per square mile and a royalty of 5 per cent. on all sales of lumber so cut. This is regulated by the Canadian Parliament, and if we put lumber on the free-list it would be easy to increase the royalty to an equivalent amount of our tariff reduction. There is no way of getting cheaper lumber from Canada by any legislation on the part of the United States. If we remove the duty, Canada will replace it by an export duty or a royalty.

The United States made a mistake when it removed the duty from coffee. Since coffee was admitted free into the United States Brazil has collected an average export duty annually of $8,900,000 from coffee imported into the United States, which duty was levied by Brazil immediately after the abolition of the duty on coffee by the United States.

The proposition to abolish the duty on salt is another mistake. No benefit would be afforded to the consumer by such legislation. The foreign salt imported into this country comes principally from Turks Island, a colony of Great Britain and one of the group of the West India Islands. An export duty of 10 per cent. on salt from that island is now exacted. If we admit it free, as a matter of course that export duty would be correspondingly increased and Great Britian would get the benefit instead of the United States.

About fifteen years ago we repealed the duty on logwood. Immediately thereafter Jamaica, also a colony of Great Britain, and from which we obtain our logwood, imposed an export duty of 12½ cents per hundred-weight.

The following significant item from New Zealand, another colony of Great Britain, appeared in the New York Herald of July 17 last:

> A new tariff bill has been proposed by the New Zealand Government which will considerably diminish the large free-list now in existence there and increase small ad valorem duties. The class of goods affected principally are such as can be exported from the United States, and includes dried, salted, or pickled fish, olives, oysters, provisions, vegetables, wooden-ware, leather goods, patent medicines, earthenware, dry goods, machinery, cotton and woolen goods, boilers, ironware, and manufactured carriages and wagons.

These examples are sufficient to indicate the policy of Great Britain and her colonies of not only excluding the products of the United States from their markets, but also of taxing by export duties articles admitted free into the United States to the full extent that the trade will bear. The more the various tariffs of the world are examined, and particularly of Great Britain, the more clearly it will appear that there is no free trade, and that there is not likely to be, in any foreign country for the United States. The markets of the United States are the best in the world; our people produce more, consume more, and enjoy more of the comforts of life than any other people on earth. The natural resources of this country in variety and extent equal, if they do not surpass, the whole continent of Europe. The Cobden Club was formed to aid England to acquire the markets of this country. The United States is the fat goose that the English fox is seeking to devour and all other nations endeavoring to pluck.

The legislation of Austria since the reduction of our tariff by the act of 1883 is a fair sample of the conduct of foreign nations. She has increased the duty on cotton cloths, unbleached, from 7 to 10 per cent.; on bleached cloth, 11½ per cent.; on woolen goods, 16½ per cent.; on barley, 200 per cent.; on Indian corn, 100 per cent.; on wheat, 100 per cent.; on flour, 150 per cent.; on clocks and clock-works, 100 per cent., and on manufactured India-rubber goods, 50 per cent.

PROTECTION BY SUBSIDIES TO VESSELS.

In the act for the protection of home industries, passed by the First Congress, in 1789, to which I have already alluded, our merchant marine was also protected. On goods imported in American vessels 10 per cent. less duty was levied and collected than on like goods imported in foreign vessels. The result was an enormous increase in our carrying trade with foreign nations. American tonnage engaged in foreign trade in 1789, when the act was passed, was 127,329 tons, and in 1807 it had increased to 848,306 tons.

This discrimination between American and foreign vessels continued as to all the world until 1815, when a treaty was made with Great Britain agreeing to charge no discriminating duties or tonnage against English vessels coming into our ports if England would charge none against American vessels entering her ports. This discriminating duty as to other nations was repealed from time to time by fifty different acts between 1816 and 1846. Among the last abolished were those on Spanish vessels. We could always build wooden ships cheaper than England, and from the treaty of 1815 to the year 1851 the carrying trade was continued in wooden bottoms, and we were enabled to compete with her for the carrying trade of the world on about equal terms, and we succeeded in securing our full share of that trade. Steam-ships commenced to take the place of sailing vessels in 1840.

It was not expressly stipulated in the treaty of 1815 between the United States and England that neither country should grant subsidies to their vessels, but it is difficult to understand why the granting of subsidies is not an evasion of the treaty. What difference does it make to a vessel whether the Goverment remits a portion of its revenue in the way of duties, which would be charged and collected if the goods were imported in foreign bottoms, and thereby give an American ship an advantage over an English ship engaged in the same business, or paying to the ship-owner an equivalent amount of money from the Treasury which had been collected from duties, under the pretense of paying for carrying the mails, but, in fact, to give the American ship-owner an advantage over his foreign competitor?

The Cunard Line in 1840 received a subsidy of $291,960 a year from Great Britain for a monthly line of steamers between Liverpool, Halifax, and Boston, which was increased in 1849 to $437,940. The United States soon after subsidized the Collins Line. England immediately granted a subsidy to the Cunard Line of $705,570 between Liverpool and New York. On June 14, 1858, an act was passed by Congress forbidding the Postmaster-General from making a contract for carrying ocean mails for more than two years, or to involve a higher rate of expense than the amount collected on the sea and land postage. This destroyed the Collins Line and the Havre and Bremen American lines. Mr. Cobden, the father of the cardinal principles of modern democracy, in examining a witness before a Parliamentary committee with regard to contracts for subsidies in 1859, asked the following question, which the witness answered in the affirmative:

You are aware that it (the Collins Line) ceased because the American Government withdrew the subsidy?

Mr. Wilson, another free-trader, during the same examination asked the following question:

Mr. Cunard's contract is £191,000, is it not?
A. Yes; £191,400.
Q. Three hundred and twenty thousand pounds is the amount which is now paid by this country and the colony for the trans-Atlantic postage, including the Galway Line?
A. Yes.
Q. And in the face of these increasing subsidies the American Government has altogether relinquished the practice of subsidizing their vessels, and their vessels, of course, have been driven off the passage?

The astonishment expressed in these questions at the folly of the American Government by these English free-traders is significant. In 1851 England commenced building steel ships. The cotton tariffs of 1833 and 1846 had rendered it impossible to manufacture steel in the United States. As these steel ships supplanted wooden ships it was impossible for the United States ship-builders longer to compete with Great Britain in the building of ships. England, however, continued to increase her subsidies for the purpose of driving our ships off the ocean, and finally, when the war broke out, she sent her armed cruisers, which destroyed our wooden ships and ended the contest. She was then enabled to decrease her subsidies somewhat, but every time the United States has made an effort to increase her carrying trade by subsidies, as in the case of the China line in 1870, Great Britain has increased her subsidies and put on competing lines. The following table will show the annual subsidies paid to steam-ships by Great Britain from 1848 to 1882, both inclusive:

Year.	Bounty or subsidy paid British ships by British Government.	Year.	Bounty or subsidy paid British ships by British Government.
1849	3,180,000	1867	4,079,996
1850	5,313,985	1868	4,047,586
1851	5,330,000	1869	5,481,690
1852	5,510,635	1870	6,107,761
1853	5,865,400	1871	6,070,741
1854	5,950,559	1872	5,693,500
1855	5,741,633	1873	5,665,296
1856	5,713,560	1874	5,697,346
1857	5,133,485	1875	4,860,000
1858	4,679,415	1876	4,420,271
1859	4,740,190	1877	3,976,580
1860	4,349,760	1878	3,914,990
1861	4,703,285	1879	3,768,230
1862	4,105,353	1880	3,873,130
1863	4,188,275	1881	3,601,350
1864	4,503,050	1882	3,538,835
1865	3,981,995

Since 1882 these annual subsidies have been somewhat increased, averaging about $3,800,000. France and Germany have also adopted the policy of subsidizing their steam-ship lines, while the United States has returned to the policy inaugurated by Mr. Cobb, Secretary of the Treasury in 1858, of making money on our letter postage through the mails carried on American vessels. By means of these subsidies England increased her shipping to 5,500,000 tons, valued at one thousand millions of dollars; employed two hundred and forty thousand men in the construction and repair of ships and two hundred and twenty thousand more in sailing them, and added to her national earnings $350,000,000 a year, while the United States got cheap postage by sending her mails on American ships for 2 cents per letter if she could find such a ship afloat, otherwise by paying foreign ship-owners for carrying our mails. The present Administration is keenly alive on this subject, as on all others, to the interest of Great Britain, and bitterly opposes a dollar in subsidy to American vessels, but kindly advises the people of the United States to cultivate foreign intercourse and find foreign markets.

NO NEW POLICY WANTED.

I would not have the United States enter upon any new or untried policy. I would have it return to the policy for which the colonies separated from the mother country, for which the patriotic soldiers of the Revolution fought, and which was incorporated in the Constitution and carried into effect during the administrations of Washington and his successors in the early and better days of the Republic. That policy included not only political but financial, commercial, and industrial independence. Financial independence was secured by the free coinage of both gold and silver. Commercial independence was maintained by charging less duties on goods imported in American ships than on goods imported in foreign bottoms, thereby discriminating in favor of American vessels. If treaty obligations would be violated by such discrimination, I would use the methods of avoiding those obligations which Great Britain, France, and Germany have adopted by applying a part of the customs revenues in subsidizing steam-ship lines to South American ports and every other part of the world which would buy our products.

Industrial independence was encouraged by laws for the protection of manufactures. I would so extend those laws as to give to the laboring people of this country the entire market of the United States for every product of both farm and factory which can be produced in our own country, and I would secure to them the permanent and exclusive right to supply such markets, and thereby give confidence to capital invested in manufactures. The laborers of this country, with the fixed market for their productions which our great and growing country would afford, would be more independent than any other people on earth. The vast amount of manufacturing necessary to supply such a market would cheapen production and increase the price of labor. Experience has taught us that the more a people manufacture the cheaper they can produce. The people of this country would have the best market in the world, and in time might be able to send their surplus products abroad, where none now go. This was the policy of the fathers of the Republic, and to it I would return.

POLITICS.

There are 401 votes in the electoral college; 153 of these are in the sixteen Southern States, which compose the solid South; 197 of them are in those Northern States in which there is no city where European influence is predominant; 51 of them are in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, which added to the vote of the solid South make 204 votes, which is a majority of the electoral college. The 51 votes in the three States last named are expected to be carried for the Democratic party by the overwhelming majority which will be given in New York and Brooklyn and their suburbs in New Jersey and Connecticut. If the President and his associates succeed in this scheme it will be interesting to inquire by what influence it is to be accomplished, and whether such influence is American or foreign, and who is to receive the benefits from the victory. During the twelve months ending June 30, 1888, foreign imports into the city of New York amounted to $470,426,774, while the total imports into all the ports of the United States was only $723,865,146, and during the same period the exports from New York City to foreign countries was $310,627,476, while the total exports of the United States from all the ports was only $695,971,619, showing a balance of trade against the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, of $27,890,527, which was increased on July 31 to $43,210,538. I do not give these figures in this connection for the purpose of showing the balance of trade, but to show the vast amount of trade which centers in New York and its surroundings.

The persons engaged in this trade must be very numerous and have command of vast capital. They are either agents of foreign merchants or foreign manufacturers. They are called "consignees," "brokers," "merchants," and "importers." Their enormous business gives them vast control of merchants, bankers, tradesmen, newspapers, and, in short, over all the people living or doing business in New York City and its surroundings. The value of the products of the manufacturers of the United States in 1880 was more than five thousand millions of dollars, and undoubtedly the value of such products during the past year was more than seven thousand millions of dollars. Nearly all of this vast product was consumed by American markets. The increase of foreign productions which would find a market in the United States under free trade can hardly be overestimated. If two or three thousand millions of dollars could be added to our imports by admitting foreign manufactures free of duty the business and profits in New York of these "consignees," "brokers," "agents of foreign merchants," "agents of foreign manufacturers," and "importers" would be enormously increased.

New York is the center of another interest equally powerful and important, which would be subserved by the election of Mr. Cleveland. He is a single gold standard contractionist. The people of the United States owe vast sums of money to England and other European countries for money borrowed for the construction of railroads and other enterprises. Most of the agents of these foreign creditors reside in the city of New York. The bonds and other evidences of indebtedness which they hold as agents for European capitalists have already been enhanced more than 33⅓ per cent. by the contraction of the currency resulting from the demonetization of silver.

The capital stock of the national banks of the United States amounts to the enormous sum of about $578,000,000. New York City controls the policy of the national banks and directs it in harmony with the schemes of the bankers, money-lenders, and bondholders of Europe. I do not intend to reflect on the patriotism of American bankers. They do not differ from the members of any other trust or combination organized to benefit themselves and draw money from the people. I simply desire to say that when the interests of bondholders and money-lenders are involved it is as natural for a banker to defend them as it is for a member of the sugar trust, the oil trust, the whisky trust, the cotton-bagging trust, or of any other trust, to defend the principles of the institution or organization which he represents and from which he derives large profits.

The good money of the banker means bad times for the community. No money is good in his estimation unless it is scarce and dear. The dearer the money the sounder the currency in the estimation of the banker. The more wheat or cotton it requires to procure a given quantity of money the more precious and desirable to the banker the money becomes. Quoting the opinion of bankers where their interests are involved to influence legislation is as absurd as it would be to rely on the arguments of the Cobden Club as to the benefits of free trade to the manufacturers of the United States. It is natural for the National Bank Association to advocate the repeal of the Bland act and contraction to the gold standard, because it will make money dearer and property cheaper. In other words, it will produce good money and bad times.

The National Bank Association also controls the indebtedness of the United States, the value of which they have largely increased, and desire further to increase, by contraction to the gold standard. The South and the West, by the demonetization of silver, are sorely depressed, both by the low price of wheat and cotton and other farm products, which are governed in foreign markets, as I have already shown, by the price of silver, and also by contraction of the currency which has involved them in debt and compelled them to mortgage their farms. This vast moneyed interest centered in the city of New York, and cooperating with the foreign influence which I have already described, threatens both the industrial and financial independence of the United States, and if not successfully resisted will destroy our manufactures, ruin our farmers, and render the United States dependent upon Great Britain.

It is easy to see why foreign manufacturers and foreign importers and all persons engaged in foreign trade should support Mr. Cleveland, because he is in favor of free trade. And it is also easy to see why the agents of bondholders, both foreign and domestic, and money-loaners and dealers in money should support Mr. Cleveland, because he is in favor of the gold standard and contraction, which will increase their wealth. But it is difficult to comprehend how any patriotic person who desires the prosperity of the United States can join in that support, and particularly how the South and the West, which are developing manufactures and desire good prices for their farm products, can support a candidate for the Presidency who would destroy their manufactures by free trade, and who is laboring to enhance the obligations of contracts, to increase the burden of debts, and reduce the price of all the productions of the United States by the demonetization of silver.

It is incomprehensible that anybody should believe that Mr. Cleveland was sincere when he suggested in his message that free trade and the surrender of our markets to foreign competition would enable the people of the United States to supply foreign markets and increase home production when he knew, or ought to have known, that the people of the United States were shut out from every foreign market by exorbitant foreign tariffs, by vast steam-ship subsidies to foreign vessels, and every device possible to exclude the products of this country from foreign lands; when he knew, or ought to have known, that it is necessary for the life and existence of manufacturing establishments that they shall have a secure and permanent market to justify investments and insure steady production, and that all other countries in the world have ample tariffs to secure their markets for their own establishments to enable them to manufacture cheaply and send their surplus abroad, and that it would be the extreme of folly and madness for the United States to surrender its markets to foreign countries without the possibility of reciprocal favors. The statesman who will compel the people of the United States to compete with the underpaid labor of Europe operating behind breastworks of protection is either incompetent or wicked.

In view of the depression of business in consequence of contraction, how could the President contemplate a reduction of the tariff in the present stringency of the money market which must be followed by a glut of foreign commodities, the closing down of our manufactures, and the withdrawal of our circulating medium in payment for foreign goods? Is it possible that he considered the inevitable consequence of his advice and the ruin and disaster which followed the free-trade tariffs of 1833 and 1857, which stand out as warnings to the American people against the commission of similar blunders? The necessity of the situation must have been pressing to have induced the President to have preferred the bankruptcy of his country to some more patriotic method of securing his re-election. How any representative of the people and particularly from the South or the West, can desire destruction of their new and growing manufactures, the contraction of the currency by the withdrawal of our circulating medium for the purchase of foreign goods, and its further contraction by the repeal of all laws for the coinage of silver and the continual decline in the price of wheat and cotton, is incomprehensible.

I appeal to every voter in the United States who is in favor of honest money and a steady and constant supply of the circulating medium, who is in favor of home production, who is in favor of employment for labor and wages sufficient to save the wage-workers of the United States from want and dependence, to avoid all entangling alliances with agents of foreign manufacturers and the representatives of money syndicates, money-loaners, and bondholders, and join in a patriotic effort to secure such legislation as shall protect the rights of labor, afford an honest measure of the obligations of contracts, and establish for the United States financial and industrial, as well as political, independence.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. PLUMB. Owing to the late hour of the day and the thin condition of the Senate, I prefer that the vote on the amendment to the bill creating the Agricultural Department should be taken to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to lay upon the table the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry proposing to strike out section 5.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 2 o'clock the vote shall be taken upon the amendment, and immediately thereafter upon the bill, without further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the vote upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay upon the table the amendment of the committee proposing to strike out section 5 shall be taken at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and that subsequent proceedings upon the bill shall be had without debate. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that there are one or two Senators, I think, who desire to submit some remarks upon the merits of the bill. Perhaps it would be best to confine the request to taking the vote upon laying the amendment upon the table or the final disposition of the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I will modify my request in accordance with that suggestion.

Mr. GEORGE. Let it be confined to the vote on laying the amendment on the table. I shall object otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been notified by two Senators of an intention to speak upon the pending proposition in the bill. They are not present. The request as modified is that the vote upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee be taken at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it proper that I should state to the Senator from Kansas that I have already consented, upon the appeal of at least one Senator who desires to address himself particularly to the merits of this amendment, that I would not insist upon my motion to lay on the table, so as to cut him off from the privilege of debating it? I am exceedingly anxious to come to a vote upon it, but I can not arbitrarily insist upon the motion when appealed to by a Senator who desires to discuss the merits of the amendment proposed to be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair then understands the request for unanimous consent to be withdrawn.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not withdraw it. I will prefer the request to the Senate. If it is not desired to have the bill disposed of in that way, I shall not prefer any other request, and will let the bill take its chances in the mêlée hereafter, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon the Chair one moment, the question would recur on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I make my request. I say I do not modify the request. I prefer the request to vote to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and leave it with the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he say 4 o'clock to-morrow. That would give everybody an opportunity to be heard who desires to be heard. Let us get a vote at 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Say 4 o'clock, and let the bill be open to debate until that hour, and take the question then upon the amendment and the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I make that suggestion to the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given notice of a desire to speak to-morrow at the close of the morning business.

Mr. BUTLER. He can speak after 4 o'clock, I should think.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not prefer to speak after 4 o'clock. If I can not commence before 4 o'clock, I shall not commence at all to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Would it be convenient to the Senator to postpone his notice until the day after to-morrow?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have very strong reasons why I should like to go on to-morrow, if consistent with the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. If there is to be no further debate except that suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, we ought to dispose of the bill within half an hour. A vote on the motion to lay on the table is practically a vote on the amendment. If that motion should be voted down, of course the vote on the amendment will go without anything except the ordinary viva voce division. As far as I know there are no other amendments to be proposed, and I do not see why the bill can not be disposed of to-morrow; but if it is not convenient to the Senate, I am willing to ask that it be postponed until the middle of next week and see if we can get a vote on it then.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that will not be done. We ought certainly to get a vote within three hours after we meet to-morrow. I ask the Senator from Oregon if it would be convenient to him to speak after 3 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. MITCHELL. I stated to the Senator from Kansas on my left, in answer to a request made by him to myself as to whether I would give way in case I got the floor to-morrow morning for a vote, that certainly I would, but——

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the request.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like very much for certain reasons to go on in the morning, but I am willing to give way if a vote can be taken at any reasonable time on this other question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay upon the table the proposed amendment of the committee to strike out section 5 of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to be kind enough to withdraw the motion to lay upon the table so that I may submit a few remarks on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if the Senator from New Hampshire desires to debate the merits of the amendment, I shall not cut him off by insisting on my motion. I suggest to the Senator if he proposes to discuss the merits of the bill that he can do so as well after the vote has been taken upon my motion as before.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to speak to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion in order that the Senator may be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from New Hampshire propose to proceed now?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would as soon proceed to-morrow, or I can go on now if there is no other business. I intend to speak but a little while.

Mr. VEST. I wanted to ask the Senate to pass a bridge bill, about which there is an exigency existing. I want to get it through now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside.

Mr. VEST. I wish to call up Order of Business 2024, House bill 9619. It will lead to no debate and will only take a few moments.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, before the word "point," to strike out "a;" and in line 8, after the word "assigns," to strike out the words:

Within 1 mile north of the mouth of the Kansas River, in the county of Wyandotte, in the State of Kansas, and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River, in the county of Wyandotte, in the State of Kansas, and in the county of Jackson, in the State of Missouri, to the county of Clay, in the State of Missouri, as shall best promote the public convenience and welfare and the necessities of business and commerce.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

In Jackson County, Missouri, within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of Kansas River, Kansas.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Missouri River and Land Improvement and Construction Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, or its assigns, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River at such point as may be hereafter selected by said corporation, or its assigns, in Jackson County, Missouri, within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of Kansas River, Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 25, after the word "receiving," to insert "such;" so as to read:

And also to construct accessory works to secure the best practicable channelway for navigation and confine the flow of the water to a permanent channel at such point; and also to lay on and over said bridge a railway track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroads that are or shall be constructed to said Missouri River at or opposite said point; and said corporation may construct and maintain ways for wagons, carriages, horses, or other animals, and for foot passengers, charging and receiving such reasonable toll therefor as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 3, before the word "obstructions" to strike out "material and substantial;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That Congress shall have power at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act so as to prevent or remove all obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge and its accessory works; and the expenses of altering said bridge or removing such obstructions shall be at the expense of the owners of or persons controlling such bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to call attention to the provision in section 3 with reference to the description of the court. The court is described as "the circuit court of the United States of the State of Kansas or State of Missouri." There is no such court.

Mr. VEST. That is a typographical error; it ought to read "circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas or for the district of Missouri."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 17, after "United States," it is proposed to strike out the words "of the State," and insert "for the district;" and in line 18, after the words "Kansas or," to strike out "State" and insert "for the district;" so as to read:

And should any change be made in the plan of the bridge or said accessory works, during the progress of work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War, and be made at the expense of the company making the same; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said Missouri River, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas or for the district of Missouri in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri to line 3 of section 7, and suggests that the word "within" should be inserted before the word "one;" so as to read: "be not commenced within one year."

Mr. VEST. That is also a mistake of the printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks will insert the word "within" before the word "one."

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VEST, Mr. COKE, and Mr. SAWYER were appointed.

POST-OFFICE AT ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 1574, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1574) for the erection of a post-office building at St. Paul, Minn.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 14, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one million two hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to accept, as a donation from the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, a suitable lot of land, and cause to be erected thereon a commodious and substantial building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office in that city. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the building complete, including heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, the sum of $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one million two hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the section read:

That the sum of $750,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POTTAWATOMIES OF MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 2176, for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill having been read at length in Committee of the Whole upon a previous occasion, it is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. One amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The Secretary read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SABIN. I ask that the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "Company," to insert:

Commencing at Duluth and running by the most practicable route to a point at or near Grand Rapids, on Mississippi River.

So as to read:

That there is hereby granted to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company, commencing at Duluth and running by the most practicable route to a point at or near Grand Rapids, on Mississippi River, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and its assigns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, to strike out the following words:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid to the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; and also to ascertain and fix the amount to be paid to individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That before said railway shall be constructed through any land, claim, or improvement held by individual occupants, according to any treaties or laws of the United States, compensation shall be made such occupant or claimant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railway. In case of failure to make satisfactory settlement with any such claimant, the just compensation shall be determined as provided for by the laws of Minnesota, enacted for the settlement of like controversies in such cases. The amount of damages resulting to the Fond du Lac tribe of Indians in their tribal capacity by reason of the construction of said railway through such lands of the reservation as are not occupied in severalty, shall be ascertained and determined in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, and to be subject to his final approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following amendment to be inserted just before the last section, the sections to be renumbered by the Secretary to correspond:

SEC. —. That there be, and is hereby, granted to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, for the purposes of station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, and other railroad purposes, and for the purpose of access to and egress from said station, the following-described tracts of land, being a portion of the Indian reservation in the State of Oregon known as the Umatilla reservation, namely: Commencing at a point 1,038½ feet north of the southeast corner of section 4, township 3 north, range 34 east, Willamette meridian, and on the east line of section 4; thence north 57 degrees west 250.3 feet to a point 314.8 feet from the main track of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's railroad; thence north 33 degrees east 1,050 feet in a line parallel with the main track of said railroad at this point; thence south 57 degrees east 414.8 feet; thence south 33 degrees west 1,050 feet; thence north 57 degrees west 100 feet to the center of the main track of said railroad; thence north 57 degrees west 64½ feet to the place of beginning, containing 10 acres. Also a strip of land 62.2 feet wide on each side of a line commencing at a point on the northwest side of said 10-acre tract, 100 feet from its northwest corner, and running thence north 10 degrees and 24 minutes west 700 feet to the center of Wild Horse Creek.

SEC.—. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such tracts of land and to provide the time and manner of the payment thereof, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company.

SEC. —. That said railway company shall accept this grant upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. —. The preceding three sections shall not take effect until the consent of said Indians to the provisions thereof shall have been obtained; which consent shall be expressed in writing, signed by a majority of the male adults on said reservation and by a majority of their chiefs in council assembled for that purpose, and shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Oregon to state to the Senate, so that it may go upon the record, just the scope of this amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company has constructed a road from Pendleton to Centreville across the Umatilla Indian reservation. The town of Adams is located near the reservation and on the line of the road between two tracts of land which were secured to the company by agreement with the Indians for depot purposes.

It is found necessary for the convenience of the public that there should be an additional station on the reservation near the town of Adams. The Secretary of the Interior is of the opinion that when the right of way was acquired of the Indians by agreement, as was provided for in the treaty with the Indians, the right of the company to acquire lands was exhausted, and it now requires legislation to authorize the company to secure the additional lands needed. The object of this amendment is simply to authorize the company to purchase lands to the extent of 12 acres for station purposes.

Mr. DAWES. Is there anything contained in the amendment except what was in the bill reported by the Indian Committee on that subject?

Mr. DOLPH. No; it is the bill reported by the Indian Committee, except that the last section of the bill reported by the committee, which provided that Congress might alter and amend the act at any time, is not in the amendment, because it is in the original bill to which this amendment is offered, and will come in at the close of the entire enactment.

Mr. DAWES. That is the way I understood it, but I proposed to have it so stated upon the record.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs as a separate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the bill by adding a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. That the act entitled "An act providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended by repealing so much thereof as limits the total quantity of the diminished reservation proposed to 120,000 acres, and the Secretary of the Interior shall set apart such further quantity of land of the existing Umatilla reservation, in addition to the 120,000 acres thereof required by said act to be selected, designated, and reserved for the uses and purposes of said Indians, as therein provided, as shall enable him to fix, define, and establish the metes and bounds of said reserved tract in a satisfactory manner, and to include therein such portions as he may deem advisable of certain lands in the eastern part of the reservation, which the Indians desire shall be reserved for them; and the said Secretary is authorized by order to establish such diminished reservation accordingly; and in all other respects said act shall continue and remain in force.

Mr. DAWES. I desire that the Senate shall put on record a statement of the character of this proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL. This amendment is taken from a bill introduced by myself some weeks ago and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably by the Senator from Massachusetts, who is chairman of that committee. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in a letter which I hold in my hand, but I will not have it read unless some Senator desires to hear it.

Mr. DAWES. Some five or six years ago, by a special act, there was an undertaking to set out in severalty a portion of the Umatilla reservation and offer for sale the rest of it. A commission was appointed for that purpose which was ineffectual. They were unable to make an agreement with the Indians. At the head of that commission was the late Senator from Oregon, Mr. Grover. Another commission was appointed with a like result. The Secretary of the Interior has recommended a new survey of the land so as to make the measure more acceptable to the Indians. That is the scope of this proposition which was reported by the committee as a bill and is now offered as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me a moment, I think the provision of the law was that after allotting lands in severalty to the Indians there should be reserved a tract of land for pasturage purposes. An amount was named, 120,000 acres. The Secretary of the Interior is of opinion that there should be a larger tract reserved for the use of the Indians in common and that there should not be as much sold as was provided for in the original act.

Mr. DAWES. The dissatisfaction of the Indians grew out of the character and perhaps the quality of the land that was reserved under the old survey.

Mr. DOLPH. This authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to reserve a greater quantity.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read again.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is in the interest of the Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why it is that this amendment is to go on a bill which is simply for the purpose of granting the right of way through an Indian reservation?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. I have got two or three bills that I want to put on if this is an omnibus bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been great delay in executing the law providing for the allotment of the land of the Umatilla Indian reservation to the Indians in severalty.

Mr. COCKRELL. So there has been in passing the bills that I want to put on.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Secretary of the Interior has written a letter stating the importance of early legislation so as to enable him to go on and finish what he is engaged in doing, and unless we get it in one of the House bills, as the Senator from Missouri will readily see, we are not likely to get the legislation during this session.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this specific amendment, now offered by the Senator from Oregon, recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MITCHELL. It was prepared in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and sent to me with an accompanying letter, which is now on my desk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the title be amended.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAWES. I move that a committee of conference be asked for on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SABIN, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

FORFEITURE OF MICHIGAN RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 858, Order of Business 2172, the regular order of business being laid aside temporarily for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Kansas to allow me the courtesy of making an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, and that is if it is convenient to him to proceed this evening to the consideration of the Army nurses bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I prefer not. I have not got the report that I expected, and I am expecting it every day. I will write again for it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, after "subject-matter," in line 9, to strike out "which are uncertified lands within the limits of the grant, together with all the lands, certified or uncertified;" after the word "Ontonagon," in line 13, to insert "including lands within indemnity limits;" in line 17, after the words "subject to," to strike out "sale and;" and in the same line, after the word "settlement," to insert "only;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the lands granted to the State of Michigan for the use and benefit of any railroad company or companies, whatever their corporate name, to aid in building and completing a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, by an act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, and by any and all acts of Congress amendatory or supplementary thereto that relate to the same subject-matter, which lie opposite the uncompleted portion of said road, extending from L'Anse to Ontonagon, including lands within indemnity limits, are hereby declared, by reason of the breach of the conditions upon which the grant was made, forfeited; and that all of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to settlement only under existing laws of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "settlement," in line 17, the words "and entry;" so as to read:

And that all of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to settlement and entry only under existing laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2157, being Senate bill 3431.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 3431) for the erection of a public building at the city of Kalamazoo, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITADEL ACADEMY AT CHARLESTON.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3486, Order of Business 2165.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3486) for the relief of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina if this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAMPTON. I think it is a unanimous report. I will explain to the Senator that a joint resolution was reported by the Military Committee, referring to the Secretary of War the question as to the proper amount of rent to be paid. He referred it to the Quartermaster-General, who fixed this rent at only one-half the amount that the State had asked. The Secretary of War has sent in his report, saying that the Quartermaster-General has fixed the amount and that he approved it.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. HAMPTON. To pay the rent of the Citadel Academy.

Mr. PLUMB. That item has been put on the deficiency bill by the Committee on Appropriations, if the Senator will observe that bill, and that therefore obviates the necessity of passing this bill.

Mr. HAMPTON. I do not care to press it, then.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], who is a member of the committee, will recollect the case, and so will the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. HAMPTON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition shall be made of the bill?

Mr. HAMPTON. I propose that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall it be returned to the Calendar?

Mr. HAMPTON. Yes, let it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will resume its place on the Calendar.

AGREEMENT WITH FORT HALL AND LEMHI INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1465, Senate bill 2992.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannacks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] submitted an amendment as a substitute for this bill which meets the approval of the committee, and I ask that that may be read instead of the original bill. I believe the original bill has been read heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was to strike out the preamble and the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Whereas certain chiefs of Shoshone, Bannack, and Sheepeater tribes of Indians have agreed and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior an agreement for the sale of a portion of their lands in the Territory of Idaho, their settlement upon lands in severalty, and for other purposes: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed. Said agreement is assented to by a duly-certified majority of the adult male Indians of the Shoshone and Bannack tribes occupying or interested in the lands of the Fort Hall reservation, in conformity with the eleventh article of the treaty with the Shoshones and Bannacks of July 3, 1868, (fifteenth Statutes at Large, page 670), and in words and figures as follows, namely:

First. The chiefs and head men of the Shoshones, Bannacks, and Sheepeaters of the Lemhi agency hereby agree to surrender their reservation at Lemhi, and to remove and settle upon the Fort Hall reservation in Idaho, and to take up lands in severalty of that reservation as hereinafter provided.

Second. The chiefs and head men of the Shoshones and Bannacks of Fort Hall hereby agree to the settlement of the Lemhi Indians upon the Fort Hall reservation in Idaho, and they agree to cede to the United States the following territory, namely: Beginning where the north line of township 9 south intersects with the eastern line of their reservation; thence west with the extension of said line to the Port Neuf River; thence down and with the Port Neuf River to where said township line crosses the same; thence west with said line to Marsh Creek; thence up Marsh Creek to where the north line of township No. 10 south intersects with the same; thence west with said line to the western boundary of said reservation; thence south and with the boundaries of said reservation to the beginning, including also such quantity of the north side of Port Neuf River as H. O. Harkness may be entitled to under existing law, the same to be conformed to the public surveys, so as to include the improvements of said Harkness.

Third. In view of the cessions contained in the above articles the United States agrees to pay to the Lemhi Indians the sum of $4,000 per annum for twenty years and to the Fort Hall Indians the sum of $6,000 per annum for twenty years, the same to be in addition to any sums to which the above-named Indians are now entitled by treaty, and all provisions of existing treaties, so far as they relate to funds, to remain in full force and effect.

Fourth. Allotments in severalty of the remaining lands on the Fort Hall reservation shall be made as follows:

To each head of family not more than one-quarter of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land, not exceeding one-quarter of a section.

To each single person over eighteen years and each other person under eighteen years now living, or may be born prior to said allotments, not more than one-eighth, with an additional quantity of grazing land, not exceeding one-eighth of a section; all allotments to be made with the advice of the agent of the said Indians, or such other person as the Secretary of the Interior may designate for that purpose, upon the selections of the Indians, heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the agent making allotments for each orphan child.

Fifth. The Government of the United States shall cause the lands of the Fort Hall reservation above named to be properly surveyed and divided among the said Indians in severalty and in the proportions hereinbefore mentioned, and shall issue patents to them respectively therefor so soon as the necessary laws are passed by Congress. The title to be acquired thereto by the Indians shall not be subject to alienation, lease, or incumbrance, either by voluntary conveyance of the grantee, or his heirs, or by the judgment, order, or decree of any court, or subject to taxation of any character, but shall be and remain inalienable and not subject to taxation for the period of twenty-five years, and until such time thereafter as the President may see fit to remove the restriction, which shall be incorporated in the patent.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed a sufficient quantity of land on the Fort Hall reservation to secure the settlement in severalty to said Indians as provided in said agreement. Upon the completion of said survey he shall cause allotments of land to be made to each and all of said Indians in quantity and character as set forth in the agreement above mentioned; and upon the approval of said allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue to each and every allottee for the lands so allotted, with the conditions, restrictions, and limitations mentioned therein as are provided in the agreement.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, set aside, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

For the expense of the survey of the land as provided in section second of this act, $12,000.

For the expense of removing the Lemhi Indians to the Fort Hall reservation, $5,000.

SEC. 4. That this act, so far as the Lemhi Indians are concerned, shall take effect only when the President of the United States shall have presented to him satisfactory evidence that the agreement herein set forth has been accepted by the majority of all the adult male members of the Shoshone, Bannack, and Sheepeater tribes occupying the Lemhi reservation, and shall have signified his approval thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I now ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the statement of facts, which do not appear on the face of it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. This is for the payment of the sum of $126 due to Mrs. Kennerly here, and has been passed by the Senate and favorably reported from the War Claims Committee of the House. A reference to the Committee on War Claims will simply bring it back in its present shape.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the character of the claim?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. There is no doubt of the justice of the claim.

Mr. FORNEY. Regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let this bill go through.

Mr. FORNEY. I call up the conference report on the sundry civil bill. It will take only an hour, and then gentlemen can have an opportunity to dispose of such matters as this.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent, then, that this bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. I call up the conference report, but pending that I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports from committees may be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the conference report which he has indicated. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] in calling up this report for consideration, stated that the appropriation to continue work on the new Library building was the only part of it to which objection was made in the House. I consider it a matter of great public importance that a reasonable amount of money shall be appropriated by Congress at this session for that purpose.

The sum proposed of $500,000 is certainly not too large, and the plan of placing its expenditure and the entire charge of constructing the building in the hands of the Chief of Engineers of the Army meets my hearty approval.

A library at the seat of Government, worthy of our nation, is so desirable, and the immediate urgent need of a building suitable for its accommodation so apparent, that I did not expect it would be necessary to consume time in discussing the general proposition. The debate, however, to which we have listened makes it plain that there are members here who feel no great interest in such a library. Some, I trust the number is not large, are wholly opposed to it, whilst others have so little friendship for it that they are willing to risk the entire defeat of the project in tedious, profitless discussion of opinions about details if it shall enable them to renew their professions of economy.

Under these circumstances I consider it proper to urge upon Congress the duty of making this appropriation, and to state some of the many reasons that can be given why we should make liberal provision for a national library.

Mr. Speaker, the collection of books in the Capitol known as the Library of Congress was commenced by authority of Congress in the year 1800. It was destroyed with the Capitol in 1814 by the British army. After this it was replenished by the purchase of the library of ex-President Jefferson, and additions annually made by appropriations made by Congress for the purpose. In 1851 it contained 55,000 volumes, but by an accidental fire in that year all were destroyed except 20,000 volumes. Congress at once made an appropriation of $75,000 to replenish the loss and has since made annual appropriations for the same purpose. In 1865 it contained 92,450 volumes; in 1881, 390,000 volumes, and it has now reached the magnificent size of 590,000 volumes, besides 180,000 pamphlets.

The collection is rich and valuable, and has grown far beyond the capacity of all the rooms in the Capitol that could be appropriated to its use. Vast quantities of books are stored in piles, inaccessible to readers, whilst maps, charts, and pamphlets that could not be replaced if lost are exposed to destruction for want of even safe storage rooms. The rooms used are unfit for the purpose, are disconnected, some on the main floor and others in the basement.

It is safe to say that no such valuable library in the world is so poorly housed and cared for as this one. In addition to this, the scant room furnished is taken at the great inconvenience of Congress, which has use for it all for legislative purposes.

For many years the need of a separate building to accommodate this growing Library has pressed itself upon Congress. Committees of both House and Senate, at different times, have given full and careful consideration to the subject. There were differences of opinion as to whether the building should be made an addition to the Capitol or built separate. Then the question of location of a separate building was the source of a long contention.

Finally, some two years since, in the Forty-ninth Congress, all conflicting opinions were so far united that the law was enacted which fixed the location on ground east of the Capitol, adopted a plan for the building, and appropriated money to purchase the land and commence the work of construction.

The matter seemed to be finally settled, and from all parts of the country came congratulations on the prospect of our having at no very distant date a library worthy of the name.

Since then the ground has been purchased, excavations made, and the foundations of the building commenced.

Mr. Speaker, I stop now to inquire what objection is made to this appropriation to continue this desirable work. Has it been discovered that the location is not a good one? Not at all. It is evidently a wise one. Is the general plan of the building unsuited for the purpose? Not by any means. With scarce a dissenting voice it is conceded to be an admirable design, uniting beauty with strength and utility. What, then, again I ask, is the objection? Judging by the long debate to which we have listened there is but one avowed objection, and it is a most remarkable one. It is this: The building will cost when finished more than certain members of Congress supposed it would when they voted in the Forty-ninth Congress to authorize its erection. It is not even claimed that the building is too large for the future uses of the Library or that there is any useless expenditure as to plan or material.

These objections, Mr. Speaker, we have been surprised to hear coming from gentlemen who allege they are in favor of a suitable building for our great Library. If they are sincere in their statements their objections have less substance than any I have ever heard offered to a great public work. I can scarcely refrain from expressing the opinion that there is somewhere concealed in these trifling objections a design to defeat the erection of a Library building.

The arguments to support these trivial objections are only applicable to the side of those who are opposed to the whole project. The best that can be said of them is that they are contests over matters of detail that are usually confided to subordinate officers of the Government. As to the complaint made against the architect that members of the Forty-ninth Congress did not know that this building would cost near as much as it is now apparent that it will and that he is responsible for their mistakes, I have but little to say.

There is not much evidence if any of statements of cost being submitted to Congress by the architect, and there is at least room for honest belief that the estimates referred to in the Forty-ninth Congress were for only a portion of the building. One thing the records of that Congress do disclose, namely, that gentlemen then opposing the whole measure made the same charges of probable great cost against the plan of the architect that are made now. These charges of extravagance were used then to defeat the bill and failed; they are now renewed for the purpose of stopping work on the building.

If it be true that some gentlemen now on this floor who were members of the Forty-ninth Congress voted for the Library bill because they did not know how much it would cost, I can not see how they can gain much credit by the statement. We had the plans before us in that Congress; a very little investigation would have satisfied any one that the building would, when entirely finished, cost more than two or even three million dollars, as some now allege they expected it to cost. We ought to build a building worth two or three times that amount, and how gentlemen were expecting to get a building for one-third of its value it would be difficult to explain.

With all the light I have been able to obtain on the subject, I regard my vote in favor of the passage of the original bill in the Forty-ninth Congress with great satisfaction. I consider it a great honor to have had the opportunity to aid in the passage of that bill by my vote, for the very reason that I think it provided for the erection of a suitable building for the Library—one none too large, but of a size sufficient to accommodate the growing requirements of the Library for many years to come.

If any gentlemen were induced to support the original measure by want of knowledge of the cost, I ask to be allowed to suggest to them that it would be good policy to say nothing about that now and enjoy the full credit of having supported a most worthy measure.

Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that the proposed plan of this building is conceded to be suitable for the purpose of the Library. I understand that Mr. Spofford, the most eminent librarian in the country, gives it his hearty approval. Other gentlemen competent to judge, who have examined it, are well satisfied with it. I am not unmindful that some criticisms have been made upon it, but so far as I have observed these criticisms can be traced to either jealous or aspiring architects or their immediate friends. This is nothing more than might be expected. No one would say that it is unusual.

I feel confident we can go on with this building with the full assurance that it will well answer the purpose for which it is designed. The discussion has been so entirely taken up with collateral matters and questions of detail in architecture that we are perhaps in danger of losing sight of the main question.

I consider the main question to be what is necessary, and what is the best plan to hasten the construction of the building. On minor matters I am ready to yield to the judgment of others if necessary to secure agreement.

It is a subject of regret with me that my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who is, as we all know, so zealous, earnest, able, and conscientious in everything he advocates, has allowed himself to be carried away from the main question. He has made a very plausible address on what I consider the contest between the different architects, and which I think is an issue that should not have been raised at all. Of course in that issue it is to be expected that he will take the side of the architect who lives in his own Prairie State. It is at most but a difference of opinion, and, I may add, a question that but few members of Congress are competent to pass upon. He devoted himself so faithfully to this question that he has not given any of the very liberal time that has been accorded to him to urging upon Congress its great duty of providing for the prompt construction of the Library building, this being, in fact, the real and main question.

But I still more regret that he seems to have felt himself compelled in the line of argument he undertook, in order to support his position, to belittle the objects, purposes, and designs of the Library. He utterly opposes the construction of the whole building, and then attempts to ridicule the appearance that a part of the building will make, comments on the cost, and says all this is to be expended to "cover some books."

When pressed on the proposition that money will not likely be wasted, that is expended under charge of the Chief of Engineers, he is compelled to admit it, but adds, "This is not a question of honest expenditure." If he is in favor of a building for a Library I should like to know what more can properly be in it than to see that money for the purpose is expended by competent men honestly.

In the last position which he assumed on yesterday he undertook to compare the wisdom of the construction of this building on the plan proposed with the library in a little province of Europe, the library at Munich in Bavaria. He certainly does not suppose that the people of the United States, and the Government of the United States of America, are to model their institutions, their improvements, and their public buildings upon the buidings of a small country composed, I believe, of less than 5,000,000 people, whose whole annual revenue does not exceed some $20,000,000 or $30,000,000.

That is not a model on which the people of the United States ought to shape their institutions, and I should regret very much, sir, if we allowed ourselves to be so far drawn from the main question here that we could not do justice to our own country and to ourselves, but would allow the subject to be obscured by such arguments as that. It is not sufficient that gentlemen say they do not intend to defeat the Library; that must be the effect of these attacks if a sufficient number persist in them. We all know who have looked into this matter and examined the records on the question, so as to become familiar with its beginnings and growth, that it took a great many years to formulate a plan upon which the Senate and the House could agree at all in regard to the construction of this building; that its consideration was repeatedly set aside and delayed by other matters; that whilst it is a most worthy project it had no particular locality or interest to press it.

To reopen the question now means indefinite delay and would leave it harder to settle than at the first. It means to pull down and destroy all that has been accomplished. It is always easy to obstruct legislation. At this late day in the present session every one knows that it is the very easiest thing to stop, delay, or even prevent legislation. There is not much credit to be gained in doing it. Any man can pull down. It is one of the easiest things in the world to destroy, but it requires a great mind to create, to build up, to encourage, and originate plans that shall make better and happier his fellow-men.

Mr. Speaker, I would be better pleased if we had before us a proposition for the construction of the entire building according to the original plans. But as the committee have concluded for the present to proceed with a part of the building which can be erected by itself, and which it is believed will be sufficient for the immediate use of the Library, I am satisfied to do this.

Whilst agreeing to the present proposition, I think it would be still better to proceed with the whole building, and that it shows wisdom in the architect when he planned a building the size of this one. It would not be very many years until the Library would need it all, and it would be considered a proper investment of money and a wise measure in the end.

Let me call the attention of the House to the rapid rate at which the Library has grown. Recollect it has done this without suitable room and when there has been little to encourage parties to make donations. In 1851, after the fire, there were but 20,000 volumes in the Library; in 1865 the number had risen to 92,450; in 1881 it had reached 390,000, and in 1888 it has reached 590,0000 volumes, besides 180,000 pamphlets. This has gone on notwithstanding it has been known for years and years that we had not sufficient room to house them. Every gentleman who has given the subject attention knows that the most important means by which libraries are increased is by gifts and donations.

To secure these you must first provide adequate and suitable room. Then you may expect liberal gifts and additions year by year, such as have been made by Dr. Joseph M. Toner and others. It would be reasonable and proper to plan and erect a building now with a size and capacity at least two or three times larger than the present Library requires. The British Museum was erected in 1823 for a library of 200,000 volumes. It has now grown to 600,000. To accommodate the increase additions have been from time to time built, so that it is badly planned and very defective in light and ventilation.

The general history of library buildings shows that they have nearly always been found too small. I have never heard of one that proved to be too large.

Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the House to the fact that the Government buildings in this city, and, I believe, generally over the country, have been complained of always as being on two small a scale. There is not to-day a single Department of the Government that is adequately provided with room, unless it is the Pension bureau. And so much are the others crowded that there are numerous propositions to transfer other business to that building.

Those buildings that have been planned within the last thirty or forty years are wholly inadequate to-day for the business of the Government. You know very well that there is not a single department of the Government but is seeking additional room to properly transact the public business. This year we are paying thousands and thousands of dollars rent within the city of Washington for buildings for the use of the Government. If to-day the Library building was completed, and only one-half required for use of the Library, the Government could to a great advantage use the other half for other purposes and save rent it is now paying. We could well use part of that Library building for years until it could be gradually absorbed by the increase of the Library, as it certainly would.

Our forefathers, far-seeing and wise as they were in laying the foundations of the Government, never anticipated fully the great and glorious future that was before them. No ordinary man consulting the history of other nations could have anticipated such marvelous growth as ours has had. Indeed, we who are now in active life can scarcely comprehend it when we look backward and try to study its causes.

When the corner-stone of this Capitol was laid, September 18, 1793, the Congress consisted of thirty Senators and one hundred and five Representatives. Each of the Representatives in the House had a constituency of 33,900 people.

To-day Congress is composed of seventy-six Senators and three hundred and twenty-five Representatives. Each of these Representatives had by the apportionment a constituency of 151,912 people. This was based on the census of 50,155,783 taken in 1880. But our population is to-day estimated at 62,000,000, so that each one of the three hundred and twenty-five members of Congress represents on this floor 190,000 people.

I have not time or I would reply to some of the arguments used by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] why we ought not to complete this building. He spoke of the cost of the British Museum. He tells you that the aggregate cost was nine millions; but the gentleman knows very well, for he shows that he has examined the statistics, that the British Museum would not be a model for us to-day; that it is altogether different from what it was intended to be in the beginning, and that it was wholly inadequate for the purposes which it is now used for; that it is a piece of patchwork, increased by additions from time to time like a Pennsylvania farmer's barn built in the olden time; these additions having been added to as required, and that it would not be a suitable pattern for us at this time at all. In fact, as I before mentioned, we ought to learn by their experience to build a large building at once.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. I simply alluded to the cost, as the gentleman's colleague [Mr. KELLEY] had stated to the House that he was surprised that there should be on the part of any member of this House a disposition to curtail the expenses; and he told of what he had seen abroad of these great buildings which were put up in Europe as patterns for us, and I came to the same conclusion as the gentleman now addressing the House, that Mr. KELLEY was mistaken about their being any criterion for us to go by, and the distinguished gentleman coincides with me. And the fact that they had erected buildings costing from five to six millions is no reason why we should erect a building costing fifteen to twenty millions to produce the same results.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] now gives a very different conclusion to his illustration than I supposed at the time he intended us to draw. When he referred to the eloquent and masterly description of the interior arrangements of the British Museum given us by Judge KELLEY, and then told us that this grand and gorgeous institution only cost seven or eight million dollars, and feelingly spoke of what plain people in Illinois where he lived would be satisfied with, I supposed he meant that for the Congress of the United States to spend seven or eight million dollars on a library would be reckless extravagance.

I trust the gentleman may conclude to explain all he has said on the same plan. Now, if it be true that the British Museum is not good enough for us, we ought not to hear any more on the subject of the present Library building being extravagant. I am free to say that I think we ought to build a better building than the British Museum.

It seems, then, that the principal objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to making this appropriation is the general one to which I at first referred, namely, that in the original adoption of the plan the House was deceived and did not know what it was getting. I undertake to say, sir, that it does not make any difference now whether the House was deceived in regard to the plan or not. The question now is, is this a reasonable and proper plan, one which we ought to carry out? If we settle this in the affirmative, as I think we should, the matter is ended. All further debate is superfluous.

The gentleman from Illinois said yesterday that he would not vote any money for any public building the plan for which he did not understand or did have an opportunity to carefully examine and consider. Why, sir, that is a very remarkable statement. Every year we vote large sums of money to be spent under the direction of others without attempting to consider the plans of expenditure in detail. It is not within the province of Congress to do such work, and I am surprised that this body should undertake to examine and pass upon details of this character. There are matters which can be passed upon intelligently only by those who are especially skilled in the science and art that is involved.

This very session Congress voted over twenty millions of money to be expended upon our rivers and harbors and similar public improvements, but in all the discussion on the subject I did not hear the gentleman from Illinois, nor any other member, speak of prescribing the details of the plans of those improvements. The details of all such expenditures are left to the Engineer Department of the Government. Every session Congress votes millions of money to build Government buildings and the plans, materials, and contracts are all subject to the approval of officers of the Government. We intrust all these things, and properly so, to men we believe to be honest and capable, men who are specially trained in that direction.

In my judgment we are wasting our time in discussing the details of this building. As I said before, it is not within the province of Congress to consider such matters. Having determined that we ought to have a Library building suitable for the greatest nation on earth, a nation that prides itself on a government founded on the general intelligence of its people, we ought to go on and provide liberally for the work, place it in what we consider proper hands, and then trust to the honesty, skill, and ability of those men to expend the money wisely. We will never succeed in building a suitable building any other way.

Let it be remembered that this is not a library for the city of Washington alone, although its free use should be one of the attractions of this growing and now beautiful city of more than a quarter of a million of people.

It is and should be the distinctive library of the nation. The best furnished, best equipped, and largest in the United States. It ought in its buildings and surroundings to be a model that the cities of the country so far as necessary might copy.

We owe it to the nation and to ourselves to make liberal appropriations for this purpose. It is unfortunate that the work had not been commenced sooner. The intelligence, virtue, and character of a nation has always been estimated by its care of books and archives. None of the other great reading nations of the earth are to-day as deficient in a great national library as we are. This is justly a reproach to us.

We should have the greatest library in the world. With fair treatment of the subject by Congress we soon can have. We should recollect that we are building for a nation that will soon be a hundred million of people; that our present form of government can not long exist without general education and intelligence among the people. This Library should be a national repository, the great collection of the literature of the people of the United States. More than this, it should be enriched by the treasures of all lands and of all generations of civilized men. It is to-day worthy of the best building proposed for it, but with that building a few years will more than double it. It is a library for all the people of the United States, and it should be such a collection and have such a safe and convenient building for its accommodation that it would be inquired for by visitors when they come here next after the Capitol itself.

Under our laws the copyright fees paid to the Library amount to $20,000 yearly, and copies of books deposited for preservation and in pursuance of law are worth $25,000 more each year. These are additional reasons why we should make a liberal appropriation.

If there be any one who thinks we can temporarily suspend work on this building and omit the appropriation for this session and provide for it again without danger to the whole project, I fear he is greatly mistaken.

If the appropriation to continue the work fails this session, that fact will be used as a reason for omitting it next session. In the succeeding Congress objecting economists will find increasing reasons for delay, and there is but little doubt that the hopes of having erected a suitable building for the Library will be deferred for many years. This would be a great national loss. The only safe plan is to agree to the conference report and make an appropriation now, which I most sincerely hope will be done.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, there are only two main points involved in this question. One is whether we shall go on with this building or not, and the other is whether we shall disgrace the architect who has designed the building. These, I say, are the two main points for the consideration of the House; and in the little time allotted to me I will devote myself to those points exclusively.

In the first place, sir, is there any good reason why we should hesitate to go on with this building? We have already commenced it, we have accepted the plans, and the work is in progress. If any one will take the trouble to go over to the ground that has been purchased for the erection of this building, he will see the great excavations that have been made there for the main foundation and the central walls; he will see the filling up that has been done with the finest kind of Portland cement. The trenches are filled with this cement 6 feet deep and 3 or 4 or 5 feet thick. Then if he will look around the yard he will see the great blocks of granite ready to be placed on that foundation, provided Congress will say, "Go on with the work." But we are asked to hesitate about continuing this work. Sir, this is not the time to hesitate. If such hesitation would have been proper at any time, it would have been at the beginning, and not now, in the middle of the work. Half a million dollars at least has already been expended on the building, and now, when we have come to a point where we ought to go on and complete it, we are asked to stop, upon the ground that we were deceived as to the extent or the cost of the work. That is the main argument of the gentlemen who are antagonizing this project. Deceived by whom? What object has this architect in deceiving Congress? Can any man give a satisfactory answer to that question? Certainly not.

The architect was simply instructed to draw a plan for a Library building, and he did it in competition with twenty or twenty-five others, and his plan was selected. When he furnished his plan he did not agree that he would construct the building. That was left to Congress. Suppose a client should consult an attorney, and the attorney should advise him to go into a suit, because he believed the case was a good one, and suppose that after the litigation had been prolonged for years at great expense the client should finally lose the suit, what would you think of him if he should go around denouncing his attorney as a rogue and a scoundrel upon the ground that he had deceived him into beginning the lawsuit? This is just the position of the architect.

There is no deception about it. An attorney simply tells his client that he thinks he has a good case and that he will win the case for him if he can, and, to the credit of the attorneys, members of the grandest profession under the sun, that is their highest aim in life. They do not deceive the parties who employ them. They are, as a rule, high-minded men, and so the architects as a class are high-minded scientific men who have no object in deceiving those who employ them. I know an instance of a building that is going on now for which the architect made an estimate of $12,000, but in the face of that estimate the man for whom the building is constructing let the contract for $17,000. There is an increase of five thousand on an estimate of twelve thousand, a difference not much greater in proportion than that which is charged against the architect here.

Architects are not, as a rule, familiar with the business of building. They are not contractors; they do not know how to manage labor; they do not always know the price of the materials that go into a building. They simply make an estimate and then it is for the party who undertakes to construct the building to protect himself against the architect's estimate if it is wrong. Will any one say that this House had not an opportunity to do that in this case? Is there a member on this floor who will say that this House, or the committee in charge of this building, had not full opportunity to protect themselves against any mistake which this architect may have made, if he did make any mistake? Could they not have advertised for bids, and would there not have been a hundred builders from all over this land looking at their plans and specifications and bidding upon the work and upon every part of it from the cellar to the turret?

In that way we could have found out exactly what it would cost to construct the building, and then if we found it would cost too much we might have hesitated. But, sir, as I have already said, it is too late to hesitate now; it is almost a scandal to find this great Congress hesitating upon the paltry sum of a few million dollars for a great work of this kind. Furthermore, sir, there has been nothing brought out in this whole debate to show that this architect really made an incorrect estimate. Gentlemen charge that he made an estimate lower than his present one, but that is in dispute, and I say there has been no proof produced here to show that whatever estimate he did make is wrong, or would be wrong if the builders of the country were permitted to bid upon it. It is quite possible that if this plan which is now before us was put into the market, so to speak, to be bid upon by the builders of this country to-day, the result would show that the work could be done for five millions. We have no assurance that it could not.

It is true that members here say that it will cost from twelve to fifteen millions, but how do they know that? Where do they get the evidence of it? Do they get it from their talk? There is no evidence except talk. It is probably true that some disappointed architects, not having this job thrown into their hands, and their friends not having the contracts to furnish the material, may have interfered in this matter; and I believe that is where the trouble is. What is it proposed to do? To stop the erection of a great public building at the behest of these gentlemen; and at the same time the attempt is made to degrade and disgrace a man against whose character there is absolutely no charge which can be plausibly sustained. If there were any evidence here to show this man guilty of malfeasance, to show that he had been in any way corrupt, I would say he ought to be removed. But on the contrary there is nothing whatever to impeach his character. He is charged with having deceived this Congress, which is a very trifling way of getting out of our responsibility.

I assure this House (and I am in earnest—I will be bound by my statement) that, taking that plan there (I do not know what the estimate is), I will give my bond to find a builder who will construct that building in keeping with that plan of the architect for $7,000,000, and I should make a million dollars by the undertaking. These people should stop their talk about this building costing twelve to fifteen million dollars. Without leaving the Eastern coast, I will find a builder who will construct that building from top to bottom for $7,000,000. This attempted scare about the great expense of the present plan ought to be stopped. We do not want any of this pretended economy. It is not economy; it is parsimony. Economy is a virtue, and is a proper thing to exercise, but parsimony is not. It is looked upon with contempt as a vice. A parsimonious person is never admired or respected. Neither is a parsimonious government.

It is our duty in a matter of this kind to consider what is right. This question has been considered for years. It is no hasty step that Congress has taken. This matter has been under consideration for fifteen years; and now when the building is under way we have these fault-finders, who, under pretense of economy, insist that we must stop the work on this building. Why should you stop it? Suppose you do stop it; suppose, as now proposed, you advertise again for bids; suppose you advertise to the world that you want bids for a new building. Architects come down here in great numbers with their plans, which they submit. Your committee agrees on a certain plan. The architect says the building on that plan will cost $5,000,000. You adopt that plan, and the work begins anew. You discard entirely the old plan and go to work on this new one. Six months after the work has progressed under this new plan some other architect or some disappointed contractors make the statement the building will cost you $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. You then stop the work and consider the question of recommencing it upon a new plan. Where are you? Just where you commenced. You will have to advertise for new plans, get another architect. In this way the work may be delayed indefinitely, and incalculable expense entailed on the Government and no assurance of ever getting a building.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] five minutes, and more if he desires it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in a few days my colleague from the Fort Wayne district [Mr. WHITE], who has just spoken, will, I hope, be able to meet his constituents and talk over matters with them. He will take with him to Fort Wayne, I have no doubt, a copy of the speech delivered yesterday by my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and will read to his constituents that gentleman's arraignment of Congress for excessive appropriations of the public money. When my friend looks his constituents in the face and calls attention to that exhibit I want him to add to that speech the following language he has just used, which will be a suitable commentary upon it: "It is disgraceful for the Congress of this great nation to cavil over the paltry sum of a few million dollars;" and let him add that it was in this spirit the Senate of the United States, my colleague himself, and his political associates, as a rule, ran up those excessive appropriations to which my friend from Illinois referred on yesterday. I trust my colleague will not forget this. If he should forget to call the attention of his constituents to the spirit which has inspired this appropriation of excessive millions, I certainly would be justified in calling their attention to the spirit in which he himself has voted for the appropriation of the public money, voting for the largest sums, the largest number of officers, and the largest salaries, during the period that he has honored this House with his presence.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that the committee appointed by this House some months ago to inquire into the construction of this Library building has not been able up to this time to submit its report, with the testimony taken, to the House. The absence of a member of the committee—the only member who found it convenient to attend its meetings, except myself, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL]—has prevented that report from being submitted. I wish to state in a word what that report will be, in substance, when presented.

The committee will report that the whole history of the period demonstrates the fact that Congress passed the act of 1886, authorizing the construction of this Library building, with a distinct understanding that a proper and careful estimate had been made, and that the building to be erected, the plan of which was then exhibited to the House, as it is to-day, would cost, when completed in all its parts, $3,262,600; that the House acted on that information; that the estimate was before the House not only by two successive reports of the Committee on the Congressional Library, but also in the elaborate speech made by the able and distinguished gentleman, then a Representative from the State of Mississippi, General Singleton, who was chairman of that committee—a gentleman of the highest standing, and who was himself undoubtedly deceived by the estimates which had been made; that as soon as that bill had passed and proper steps had been taken to begin the work, the commission, under the supervision of which the building was to be erected, entered upon the construction of the entire building, and that while the work is only fairly commenced it is now known that the building will cost at the lowest estimate $7,000,000, and in all human likelihood nearer $15,000,000 than $7,000,000.

As soon as General Vilas, as Secretary of the Interior, became the presiding officer of that commission he suspended the work upon the gigantic plan which was then in progress, and believing the commission possessed the power under the act of 1886 to modify the plan, a plan was adopted to construct only a fragment of the building, and the cost even of that is estimated at $4,000,000; but that effort will fail, as all such efforts fail, because where a part is entered upon it will be absolutely certain Congress will find it necessary, having spent millions on the work, to go on and finish it in its entirety—the most gigantic structure, in cost at least, this Government has ever entered upon, not excepting even the National Capitol.

If the report of the committee was before the House it would recommend the work be suspended, that the House owes it to itself and to its sense of honorable legislation to suspend the work until the facts can be more carefully considered, and then further on we can begin the erection of a structure on the foundation already secured, and on a plan the cost of which shall be known in advance. I think, Mr. Speaker, the original proposition of the House Committee on Appropriations was the correct one, to suspend the work where it is and place the property under the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, advertise for new proposals for the structure to be erected, and it appropriated $10,000 for that purpose. When Congress meets in December next it will then, for the first time in the history of this long controversy, be able to legislate intelligently on this subject. I trust that line of policy will be adopted, and the House having proper regard for the integrity of our legislation will not hesitate to suspend this work, and will not carry out a law now known to be the result at least of misunderstanding and misrepresentation whether excusable or not. The enormous sum involved, if nothing more, demands this. I have said all I desire to say on the subject. The able speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has exhausted the subject. I ask the House to non-concur in the conference report, and to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to insist on the proposition adopted by the House, suspending this work until Congress, fully informed, can safely legislate on the subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. How many minutes have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I remember distinctly the feeling with which I supported the Library bill two years ago. I think many gentlemen voted for that bill almost under protest. My protest, my hesitation about the bill, was due to a doubt I had whether the plan adopted for the building was a good one. Other gentlemen who supported the bill had some objections either to the plan of the building or to the commission which was to have charge of it. Yet we voted for it, and I, for one, am not sorry that we did so.

Why did we support the bill in spite of some objections we had to some of its provisions? The reason was undoubtedly this: We wanted a national library worthy of this great and enlightened nation. We thought this was the only chance to get it. We found that there were many gentlemen in Congress, some of them of national reputation and great influence, who we thought were opposed to the project of having a national library at all. In view of that fact we voted for that bill in spite of our doubts as to some of its provisions for fear that if the bill failed we should not only not get such a library as the American people ought to have, but we should not get a national library at all.

I remember distinctly that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who has just addressed the House, was in favor of a small library to be located in the Capitol. He wanted a Congressional library in the strict and original sense of the term. It was to contain only such books as would aid Senators and Members of Congress in the discharge of their Congressional duties. He proposed that all the books now in the Library of Congress not required for that purpose should be given away to some municipality which was willing to take charge of them and make them the basis of a circulating library.

Mr. HOLMAN. My plan was a Congressional Library and a District Library, the surplus books not required by the Congressional Library to be deposited in the latter.

Mr. ADAMS. Very well. It was the impression that many gentlemen in the House were like the gentleman from Indiana, opposed to a national library, properly so called, which induced many of us to vote for that bill as the best thing we could do. I know I voted for it under that impression, although I had some doubts as to the wisdom of adopting the plan of the building which was then before us.

Now, what is the proper thing to do? I am as anxious to see a proper building started as I was two years ago. The considerations which prevailed on me then to vote for the bill regardless of objections or doubts as to some of its provisions no longer exist. It is no longer a matter of doubt that a building suitable for a national library for this great Republic will be favored by a majority of the members of this House. The site is already purchased and I believe will not be changed.

The passage of the bill and the discussion that has taken place make it certain that if a reasonable plan is presented a majority of this House will favor its adoption. Now, what is the quickest way to reach the result? We can not do it by the mere adoption of this conference report. We shall need large appropriations year after year for several years. Will Congress appropriate liberally for this purpose when suspicion has been cast, justly or unjustly, on the plan proposed two years ago? I do not believe it. If we go on under this plan upon which some suspicion has been cast, Congress will appropriate in a niggardly way and with hesitation. If we wait three months and allow full investigation to be made and other plans to be presented, we shall lose no time whatever. Whether the present plan prevails or some other plan prevails, I am convinced that we shall make real progress by means of this short delay. At the end of five years we shall find ourselves nearer to the completion of such a Library building as we ought to have than if we adopt the conference report.

I am in favor of refusing to adopt the conference report because I am in favor of having a national library in the best and most beautiful library building in the world, whether it cost $3,000,000 or $10,000,000, and because I believe that at the end of five years we shall find that we have made more real progress in that direction than if we follow this line on which suspicion, just or unjust, has been cast.

I do not believe that a proper building will cost $10,000,000. I was struck by the figures presented by my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] in regard to the cost of the British Museum and other great library buildings abroad. I was surprised that they cost so little. Whatever a suitable building honestly and thoroughly built may cost, I am willing to vote for, for the sake of having a national library in the United States such as the people of this country desire and ought to have.

Mr. ROGERS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to question the line of policy adopted by a former Congress as to the construction of a Congressional Library building. I will assume that question has been already settled; and I think we ought to assume that another question has been also settled, that is, that the cost of whatever building may be erected shall not exceed the sum of three or four millions of dollars.

The estimates made to a former Congress in regard to the cost of the building certainly did not exceed the sum that I have named; and the action of Congress was doubtless influenced by that estimate. The most correct figures that I have been able to obtain indicate that between three and four millions of dollars was understood to be the total cost. We have already expended in regard to that matter, as I understand, the sum of $500,000 for a site.

Mr. HOLMAN. Five hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars for the site.

Mr. KERR. Five hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars, the gentleman reminds me; and about $400,000 for excavation and foundations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Five hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars for the site, and nearly $500,000 up to this time for work.

Mr. KERR. Five hundred thousand dollars for the excavations and foundations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The expenditures up to the present time, including the existing contracts, cover nearly $500,000.

Mr. KERR. So I understood. Now, it seems that the sums already expended, with the exception of the foundations, have been properly expended in the line understood to be adopted by the House; but I do not think the foundations are laid in accordance with what was the understanding of the country, and especially of the House, when the building was begun. I do not think the plan proposed, at the cost now indicated, was what the House understood it was to be when the building was started. It was not the understanding of the House that this nation was about to expend in the erection of the Congressional Library building from ten to sixteen millions of dollars. And I think the architect who furnished the plans, and who published a circular stating to the House that the building could be erected for less than $3,000,000, deceived the country and the House to the extent of $13,000,000. I would not, therefore, expend one dollar—one other dollar—in the erection of that building under his supervision.

I think we owe it to the people, we owe it to the tax-payers of this country to see to it that the men who make estimates for our public buildings shall be required to tell the truth in regard to the sums of money that are to be expended in the consummation of the plans they propose; and I think when the estimates they make deceive the country to the extent of ten millions of dollars, where an appropriation was originally only proposed for three millions of dollars, they should not expect, and certainly we should not undertake to grant them, a dollar more to be expended under their control in the construction of the building. It does not add any weight, in my mind, that men whom we all honor and admire stand on the floor of the House and say that these architects are their friends; that they were distinguished men from foreign countries and patriots thirty years ago. The question is whether they have faithfully, as architects, made recommendations in regard to the building intrusted to their charge that we could rely upon and say to our constituents, "You are to expend, you who pay the taxes, the sum named in this estimate, which is the sum we contemplated expending when the original appropriation was made." If that is not done, if we are not sure that is to be the cost, then we ought to stop the building just where it is. I do not believe in going on with the work under such circumstances. Let us find out where we stand. There can be no great harm in waiting for a few months. The winter will be on us in a month or six weeks, so that this work would necessarily be stopped for a time, and no harm can accrue from stopping it now. The whole matter can then be settled by competent architects and experts in whom we have confidence before any great delay will occur in the construction of the building.

I therefore favor the proposition to pause and find out where we are and understand what we are doing before another appropriation is made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. I do not desire to occupy the floor at this time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the object which prompted me in the beginning to seek the floor to submit certain observations in regard to this conference report has been in a great measure removed by the able presentation of the subject in the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. I will, however, present two or three additional points which suggest themselves to me now, and to which I desire to invite the attention of the House.

As an original proposition, how many members of the present Congress, or how many of the last Congress, would have voted for the construction of a public library at a cost of $15,000,000? I have not fully investigated the subject, but I have heard no expressions, except from one source, that indicated more than one gentleman on this floor would have voted for that proposition. Secondly, as an original proposition, how many gentlemen now in this Congress would vote for the building now proposed to be constructed, which has been designated as a ten-pin alley by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]? I undertake to say that if it were to come up as an original proposition for the building to be constructed on that plan for a library for the people of this country it would be ridiculed and hooted out of this body. It would not have received respectful consideration. What, then, is the conclusion, and the logical and inevitable conclusion? It is that if we proceed with the erection of the west wing of the Library, ultimately this entire building, as was intended by the original Smithmeyer plans, shall be constructed.

That is the proposition. So that it makes no difference what this report says; it makes no difference what this committee of conference may say; it makes no difference who draughted this report which has been read. It leads to the ultimate question of the expenditure of ten or fifteen millions to construct this Library building on the original Smithmeyer plan It is not contended, so far as I can ascertain, that anybody except Mr. Smithmeyer has offered to this House any opinions even approximating the cost of this building. Nobody has attempted to deny—or, if so, it is demonstrated beyond all controversy and beyond all reasonable doubt—that there has been a miscalculation made upon his part of from seven to ten million dollars on the cost of this building on the original plan. And will the Congress of the United States, the representatives of the people, with these facts staring them in the face and confronting them, proceed with the construction of a building of this kind, based upon an estimate which has been demonstrated to be so far at variance with the real facts, and upon that estimate alone? I take it that the statement of the proposition is all the argument that could be required against it. And if for any reasons that could be assigned you would not construct this west wing as an original proposition, what reason can be assigned for the construction of it now?

I have been unable in the scope of my inquiries to find any more than two reasons. One is that we have sunk a large amount of money in that excavation—say, $40,000; I do not know how much more in foundations, grouting, and things of that sort. Is it possible that having embarked in a scheme to construct a library upon estimates so false as to be at variance from seven to fifteen millions of dollars, and having ascertained that fact after we have spent forty or fifty thousand dollars in it, we should go forward on this plan and spend $15,000,000 ultimately in the construction of the building? It does seem to me that the mere statement of that fact is all the argument required on that point. That reason does not justify it. In the second place, it is said that the Government will be sued by Mr. Smithmeyer for these plans; and it is very true the courts are open to him to bring his suit. But, Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States, after a full and thorough investigation of this subject, will be enabled to deal with any judgment that Mr. Smithmeyer may recover in this matter. It will be enabled to do him justice and enabled to do the people whom we have the honor to represent justice when we come to pay him for any judgment he may recover.

And in this connection I submit this question: In view of this investigation and in view of the statement of facts made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as to what the report must be from the investigation already made, in view of the argument and the conceded and demonstrated facts shown here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] yesterday, is it wise even to submit to a non-judicial investigation the ascertainment and payment of his claims or equities in this controversy without having it reported back to Congress? Yet that is one of the propositions embraced in the conference report now under consideration. I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the construction of the west wing of this building as determined upon by the conference report is not the real proposition presented here. The proposition presented is the construction, at a cost unknown and unestimated for, except by Mr. Smithmeyer, of the original building which he first said would cost three millions, but which, I understand, he now admits must cost at least ten millions, and, it is said, even as much as $15,000,000.

That is the proposition, and it is the only proposition. That is the proposition that is to be read between the lines of this conference report, and the question presents itself now, as it did in the Forty-eighth Congress: Are we willing to construct in the District of Columbia, for a public library, a building that shall cost more than the Capitol of the nation? I think, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of that proposition—and it is the real proposition presented—is all the argument that can be required. Can we defend it before our constituencies?

But, again, what guaranty have we in this conference report that if we shall surrender the future management and construction of this building to the War Department we shall not have a repetition of the same thing?

In putting this question I put it upon the broad assumption of the perfect integrity, of the great ability, of the architectural capacity, of everything that is complimentary to the present head of that Department. But, as was said upon yesterday, in a day he may be under the sod, his hands may be folded across his breast, and his eyes closed, and another may take his place. That other may be his equal in every regard, or may be infinitely his inferior. So when we intrust to the Department this building, without estimate, without plan, with the power to alter, with the power to do everything that the commission had originally power to do, what guaranty have we that when Congress shall assemble on the 4th of next December we shall not have upon our hands the same white elephant that we have to-day? I insist, therefore, that it is the part of wisdom, the part of business sense, the part of representatives of the people who are charged with the proper and correct appropriation of the public money, that before we take another step in the direction of the construction of this building we shall know what we are going to build, we shall have reliable and just estimates as to the cost of what is to be built, so that the Congress of the United States, when it is called upon to assume that responsibility which belongs to it, can demonstrate to the country, what it is now unable to demonstrate, that it has taken all proper precautions and thrown all proper safeguards around the expenditure of public money.

It was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] that this was a contest between architects. That may be true in his mind, but it is absolutely untrue in mine. I do not know Mr. Smithmeyer. I do not know any other of the architects that have had connection with this building. With me it is solely a practical business question which presents itself, a question which would present itself to the mind of every member of this body if he were engaged in the construction of a building for his own use, to be paid for from his own bank account. From this point, and this point alone, I view it. It was the pleasure of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in his place yesterday to express his friendship and his gratitude toward the distinguished gentleman who has been engaged on that work. Mr. Speaker, the most unwise, the most unsafe standpoint from which any legislator can view a business proposition involving the expenditure of ten, twelve, or fifteen millions of public money is the standpoint of strong personal friendship and profound gratitude.

We can not consider business propositions from that standpoint; and even the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the long personal friend of this architect, and who, as he says, is under the obligation of gratitude to him, is unable on this floor to meet the facts as developed by this investigation, which, as said by the gentleman from Illinois, and as I repeat, unless they can be overturned, would be sufficient to warrant the verdict of a petit jury—facts which demonstrate this architect's incapacity or his bad faith toward the Congress of the United States. The highest principle of equity and good conscience required this man to speak when he ascertained that Congress was laboring under a misapprehension which had grown out of his estimates. If he stood by in that hour and remained silent when good conscience required that he should speak, every principle of common justice and equity denies him the right to be heard now, when he seeks to speak.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been developed in the progress of this investigation (I have personally made no examination so far as the facts are concerned) it would be the height of absurdity, it would be the extreme of injustice toward the people of the United States, if we did not now temporarily suspend the work on this building until we can get plans and estimates, and determine approximately the cost of construction, so that we may then go forward in the discharge of public duty with such reasonable light as will enable us to do justice to ourselves and those whom we represent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the rest of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, there was an understanding that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] should have fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Outside of the hour?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir. He will now occupy those fifteen minutes.

[Mr. SMITH, of Arizona, withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. FORNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress, and as one who paid some attention to the pending matter when it was then discussed, permit me to say that I am sorry to find in this debate some remarks which seem to cast doubt on the fidelity of General Singleton, the chairman of the Library Committee, as well as upon the good sense of the two-thirds of the members of that Congress who voted for the passage of the bill.

My recollection of that debate, which began on the 24th day of March, 1886, and finished on April 5, is that there were two main features discussed; and in the debate the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and others made the chief contention that there was a "job" involved in the amount of money appropriated for the purchase of the site. It was contended at that time (while $550,000 was named as the sum to be paid for that purpose) that no one could tell, considering the valuable buildings to be torn down, whether or not in the end it would not amount to a million of dollars or over. Well, time has proved, sir, that it did not cost more than the estimate at that time made by the Library Committee.

The other feature of the debate was as to whether the Library should be an extension of the present Capitol building or an entirely new structure; the contention being on the part of members of this House that the present Library was not fire-proof. It was also contended that it would be marring the present architectural beauty of the Capitol to add the new building to it.

Now, I wish to refer simply to General Singleton's position, because I believe it is due to an absent member that he should be placed right on this question, and to show that not one member of the Forty-ninth Congress was hoodwinked as to the action proposed to be taken on the cost of the building.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It never was intimated on this floor at any time that this building was to cost $10,000,000. If it had been, I do not believe, with all the job that was in it, that it would ever have gone through.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In response to the gentleman from Tennessee let me quote the closing remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who gave as much care and attention to the subject as any member of the House. He used this language:

> This bill makes an appropriation, but it is only for the purchase of the site or possibly for the purchase of a part of the site and for the beginning of the building, without any statement in the bill as to what the Library building is to cost. We have had estimates all the way from two millions and a half to eighteen million dollars for the construction of the Congressional Library.

[Applause.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. There was no estimate.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And not one word was said in opposition to that statement. Let me state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I was looking at the record of this debate, because my recollection ran back to it, and that the gentleman himself said on the floor of the House that while they named $2,000,000 as the sum, no man in the world knew whether it was going to cost six, eight, or ten millions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I said then, as I say now, that it was an enormous job; and that the amount was not properly stated by those in charge of the bill. But it never was intimated that this building was going to cost anything like $8,000,000.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have just read the statement of Mr. REAGAN, and now I wish to read from General Singleton's own speech when this matter was presented to the House in the Forty-ninth Congress. He says:

> The appropriations asked for will be $500,000 to begin the work, $1,000,000 at the next session to continue it, and $823,600 at the succeeding session to complete it. This, of course, does not embrace the purchase of the site. It is confidently believed that these sums will finish the building so far as needed at present and for many years to come.

[Applause.]

And I pretend to say that no man, independent of the pamphlet or otherwise, can prove but what in the Forty-ninth Congress we voted blindly of the ultimate cost, or voted the exact amount that was believed to be necessary to complete the building. In view of the statements made I am satisfied that the exact amount was not known, and I think any man who will look at the debates will be satisfied of the fact. I think, therefore, the Library Committee ought to be freed from any taint of suspicion, or Mr. Smithmeyer either, in having hoodwinked any member of the House in regard to this question of cost.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] will yield me a single minute that I may ask a question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FORNEY. I would like to have this letter read. I will say, Mr. Speaker, I made a statement yesterday that the building under Plan No. 1 would hold a million and a half volumes. Since that time Mr. Pelz, one of the architects, has made an estimate. He says that instead of holding a million and a half volumes it will hold 1,778,592 volumes, when that building is completed under Plan No. 1 which is now before the House; and it will be sufficient for thirty-four years to come. I ask that the Clerk read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ARCHITECT OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., September 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In my verbal statement to Hon. LEWIS E. PAYSON, of Illinois, regarding the amount of space in the reduced plan of the Library building, designated as Plan No. 1, I had made no detailed computation, as I was uninformed of the actual uses to which the various spaces in the reduced plan would be applied.

I had supposed that the original design for a large gallery for the exhibition of works of the graphic arts belonging to the Library would be preserved, and that the corner pavilions would be applied, not to the storage of books, but to the copyright records and other uses.

I now find that your design upon which you based your testimony before the Senate Committee on Appropriations contemplated the devotion of all the space in Plan No. 1 to the uses of a library proper, except the large rooms immediately adjoining the rotunda, which are fitted for the copyright business and for reading-rooms for Senators and Representatives, the art gallery also being postponed in the reduced design.

Upon a careful computation now made I find that the actual accommodation for books in Plan No. 1 will be as follows:

	Volumes.
Interior of reading-room	260,000
Four book repositories connected with rotunda	388,592
Two corner pavilions	350,000
Two curtains or corridors connecting pavilions with main Library	780,000
Total	1,778,592

On the basis suggested by you of 600,000 volumes for the existing Library, and fifteen years' growth at the rate of 36,000 volumes per annum, you will have a total of 1,140,000 volumes at the end of fifteen years, giving room in Plan No. 1 for the storage of 668,592 volumes more than the computed increase.

Yours, very respectfully,

PAUL J. PELZ.

Hon. A. R. SPOFFORD,
Librarian of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate has expired.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendments to the Senate bill 2851, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. ANDERSON, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. O'NEILL.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was put, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 48.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope my friend from Georgia will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will for the present withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Pending the count,

Mr. BLOUNT said: I ask for the yeas and nays. I think it is for the interest of this House to have a yea-and-nay vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the result of the vote as reported by the tellers. The ayes are 63, the noes 65.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew my request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FORNEY. I hope the yeas and nays will not be ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that if the yeas and nays be ordered it will disclose the want of a quorum and prevent any business being transacted.

Mr. BLOUNT. That would not be hurtful.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that twenty-one gentlemen had arisen in support of that demand, not a sufficient number.

The other side was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after a count). Seventy-five gentlemen have arisen, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker pro tempore appointed the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report—ayes 22, noes 17; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 77, not voting 179; as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FRYE. I present resolutions in the nature of a petition from citizens of Bath, Me., which read as follows:

Whereas that fearful scourge and dreaded disease, yellow fever, has again attacked a portion of our land, and rendered large, populous, and thriving cities and towns helpless; and

Whereas the pestilence bids fair to spread to other sections of our country, with sorrow, pain, and death following in its wake: Therefore,

Resolved, That the citizens of Bath, in mass meeting assembled, believing that private aid will fail to fully meet the exigency, are earnestly of the opinion that the strong arm of the National Government should be promptly extended to the relief of a suffering people.

Resolved, That we most respectfully urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts in securing a generous appropriation by the National Government that may be expended under wise and prudent direction in alleviating the suffering of our fellow-citizens of the South.

J. W. WAKEFIELD, Chairman.
CHAS. F. HOLBROOK, Secretary.

I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. President, I have had occasion to ask many indulgences of the Senate in regard to bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but this bill comes to the Senate under peculiar circumstances, and I should like to state what it is and ask further indulgence that it may be put on its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive formal morning business, if there be no objection, and recognize the Senator later.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2407) to authorize the conveyance of certain Absentee Shawnee Indian lands in Kansas, to report it with certain amendments in the preamble. CIRCUIT COURT POWERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, together with an amendment proposed by the House of Representatives, to report the same back with a recommendation that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, and request a conference thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the motion of the Senator from Vermont, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, will be regarded as agreed to, and the managers of the conference will be appointed by the Chair if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call up at this time the bill (S. 2356) to provide a pension for Mrs. Adeline Couzins, for the purpose of moving to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, before the word "dollars," strike out the word "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Adeline Couzins, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3574) for the relief of the Potomac Steam-boat Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3575) for the relief of the Norfolk County Ferry Committee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CALIFORNIA CLAIMS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the allowances heretofore admitted by the several accounting officers of the Treasury in behalf of the State of California, and certified in settlement No. 3249 of 1888, on account of reimbursement to certain States and Territories for expenses incurred in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, act June 27, 1882.

PURCHASE OF SEEDS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I present the petition of D. Landreth & Sons, of Philadelphia; J. M. Thorburn & Co., of New York City; Crosman Brothers, of Rochester, N. Y., and eight other firms and individuals of the American Seedsmen's Protective League, praying that a committee be appointed to ascertain and report the facts concerning the purchase of seed by the seeds division of the Department of Agriculture.

I offer also a resolution, to be, with the petition and sundry papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture is instructed to inquire and report concerning the purchase of seeds for distribution by the seeds division of the Department of Agriculture, and for that purpose it shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. The expenses of said inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad, if the Senator from Connecticut would have no objection, that the scope of the resolution might be enlarged a little, and that the committee be also instructed to report as to the advisability of abolishing the purchase of seeds by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a very serious business, as gentlemen will find if they undertake it. I prefer that the investigation shall be confined to this matter, and that so great a change in the Agricultural Department shall be left for independent consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, under the rules, will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and the petition will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate an order coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the order reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations September 19, 1888, by Mr. EDMUNDS, as follows:

Ordered, That the President of the Senate be directed to withhold the transmission to the House of Representatives of the act (House bill 11336) entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States" until the further direction of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that that may be laid aside for a moment, that I may ask for the consideration of the bill I reported this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that I understand the Chinese restriction bill has left the possession of the Senate in due course and has gone to the House of Representatives. The resolution of the Committee on Foreign Relations reported yesterday is, therefore, no longer applicable, and for aught I see we must leave the bill to take the fate there or elsewhere which I think it deserves. This resolution, therefore, may be laid upon the table.

Mr. TELLER. We do not hear in these back seats what the Senator says.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was saying that, for the reasons I stated, as the bill has gone out of the possession of the Senate, the resolution reported yesterday is not applicable to the present state of the case, and therefore, so far as I am concerned, it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, under the order of the Senate yesterday, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], on the 17th instant, directing the Committee on Finance to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that an understanding has been had between those who are interested in the resolution and its discussion that it shall lie over for the time being.

Mr. MORGAN. Until Monday.

Mr. PLUMB. Until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall it then be called up as current business under the call for resolutions or go to the Calendar?

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be called up then as current business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that be the understanding, that order will be made.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the bill I reported this morning from the Committee on Indian Affairs may be considered at this time. I will state to the Senate, if it is desired, the reason why I ask action now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to inquire if it will take any time.

Mr. DAWES. No longer than to read the bill, I am confident. If it should, of course I would not press its consideration now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3557) to ratify and confirm certain agreements with the Upper and Middle bands of Spokane Indians, the Cœur d'Alene Indians, the Lower Pend d'Oreille or Calispel Indians, and the confederated bands of Flathead, Pend d'Oreille, and Kootenay Indians, in Washington, Idaho, and Montana Territories, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. The purpose of the bill is to provide for the immediate relief of these Indians. The Department of the Interior has information that they are in a very destitute and starving condition at this moment. The bill provides for their removal to the Cœur d'Alene and Colville reservations, where they will be abundantly well taken care of. The agreements made for that purpose were made two years ago, but have failed to be brought to the consideration of Congress for ratification until now.

A special messenger, an exceedingly intelligent Catholic priest, has been sent here on purpose to bring to the attention of the Department the destitute condition of these Indians at this moment. The Department sent him to the committee this morning. The bill has been reported unanimously. To pass it will take no longer time than to read it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1995, a bill (S. 3348) for the relief of George K. Otis.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me for a moment. If he is to speak according to the previous notice given, I desire to say that at the conclusion of his remarks I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the bill creating the Department of Agriculture, with the hope and expectation that it will be disposed of before adjournment and in fact very soon after the consideration of it is resumed.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] referring the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. However widely the people of this country and the two great political parties may differ on some financial and political problems, there are certain propositions upon which in a great measure all are agreed. For instance, it is agreed on all sides by all political parties that such tariff and other revenue legislation should be enacted by Congress, as speedily as may be consistent with the importance of the subject, as will tend, first, to the reduction of our revenues and of the surplus in the Treasury; and second, that will remove existing inequalities in the tariff, and by the reduction of internal-revenue taxes reduce and equalize the burdens of taxation so far as possible. Furthermore, all must concede that constitutionally the Senate of the United States could have no jurisdiction of this subject, could make no legislative suggestion whatever by any bill, nor report any measure relating to it, until the House of Representatives had first taken the initiative by passing a bill and sending it to the Senate. This is, as we all know, fundamental, as clause 1, section 7, Article I, of the Constitution provides that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

All bills providing for a reduction or reform of the tariff are revenue bills. The two Houses of Congress as at present organized are divided politically, the Senate being Republican in majority, the House, Democratic. The present Congress convened on the first Monday of December last, now nearly ten months ago. Notwithstanding the fact that the President of the United States had on the second day of the present session, by an annual message in which no reference was made to any other subject, called attention to this question, making such recommendations as he deemed wise, and which, by the way, were directly in the line of the doctrines and theories of a tariff for revenue only, which is but another designation of free trade, not until July 24 last, a period of seven and one-half months after the convening of Congress, did the House of Representatives present the Senate with a revenue bill.

Then, although the dog-days were upon us, although we had been in continuous session for nearly two-thirds of the entire year, although a great Presidential election is being waged and to be fought out before the American people and determined in the next three months, and in which it was expected by constituencies Senators and Members would give a helping hand in the shape of campaign work—although all these circumstances so patent to all would have more than justified the majority of this Senate in postponing even in committee a consideration of this important subject until the beginning of the next session, three months hence, it was determined by the Republican majority to waive all these objections, weighty as they are, and in the interest of good government meet and in so far as possible proceed with the investigation of this great question here and now before an adjournment shall take place; and in pursuance of this determination the subcommittee of the Finance Committee of the Senate have held sessions continued almost uninterruptedly by day and by night sessions with open doors, where not only Senators and Representatives of all political parties, but also the representatives of all the great industries and occupations of the country could be heard—where the laboring man and the artisan, as well as the manufacturer, the wool and cotton grower, the lumberman, the miner, the agriculturist, the fruit-grower, the ship-builder, the hop-producer, and the importer as well, had full opportunity to be heard. Those hearings are still progressing as rapidly as possible, and it is expected that at no distant day the full Committee on Finance will be ready to present, as they constitutionally may, an amendment in the shape of a substitute to what is known as the Mills or House bill. This House bill and the Senate substitute when reported, as we are already advised by that committee, will be each complete in and of itself and independent of the other.

The one—the House bill—following in the main the recommendations of the President, is a measure based in the main, except as to certain Southern products, upon the theory of a tariff for revenue only, or in other words, free trade pure and simple, clean cut and absolute, in so far as the principle upon which it is based is concerned, and absolutely in so far as very many of the great industries of this country are involved, and which in that bill are placed upon the free-list. It is free trade also professedly as to every article upon which a duty is exacted, inasmuch as it is publicly insisted by the friends of the measure that no duty, except just so much as may be necessary to raise sufficient revenue to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, should be exacted. While this is the theory of the Mills or House bill, it is however a noticeable fact that the principle of protection is applied in the House bill as to duties on certain importations, mainly, however, as it will be seen, to those that come in competition with the productions of the Southern States, and for this reason I should not be surprised to hear it defended by some Senators who are not yet ready to swallow the doctrine of free trade, as a bill based on the principle of protection. The House bill, therefore, may very properly be regarded as a bill in the interest of the importer, a bill in opposition to American labor and American industries, a bill in the interest of free trade, and one which secures the hearty and enthusiastic approval, not only of every professed free-trader in the United States, but also of every free-trader and every free-trade journal throughout the domain of the British Empire.

On the other hand, the proposed Senate substitute will, we are assured, be one based from beginning to end, every schedule and every line, on the American doctrine of protection to American labor and American industries. While this substitute, if enacted into law, will, we are assured, reduce the annual revenues of the Government very materially, perhaps from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, and will thus tend materially and rapidly to all necessary reduction of the surplus now in the Treasury, the amount of which has been fearfully misrepresented as we shall see later; while it will remove opportunities for frauds by false classifications and undervaluations, and reduce and equalize all irregularities in existing tariff laws; while it will largely reduce internal revenue taxes, it at the same time will do no injustice to any of the great industries of the country; it will nowhere bear down on either the laboring man, the agriculturist, the miner, or the manufacturer; it will strike at no struggling industry, either great or small; it will protect alike the interest of the producer and consumer, and give to each and all encouragement, support, and cause for future hope.

The Senate and the country therefore, to use a borrowed term, are to-day confronted with a question more important still, a question of more vital interest to the people of this country, a question that more nearly, and seriously, and vitally affects the general welfare and the present and future prosperity of the American people than can possibly in any possible event the condition of the national finances which the President in his annual message stated confronted Congress at the threshold of their legislative duties in December last. And that question is, as will be and as is virtually now, fully and fairly presented in the issue joined by these two bills—the House or Mills bill and the Senate substitute to be soon reported, and the general character of which all now fully understand—whether or not the Congress of the United States shall abandon the American doctrine of protection to American labor and American industries—a doctrine that nearly every government on earth except England has recognized, or is rapidly coming to recognize as the correct one, a doctrine which England herself practiced for hundreds of years, until she became so great and strong and powerful that she could compete successfully with all or any of the nations of the earth.

The great question is, shall we now abandon this theory and practice and adopt the free-trade policy of not only our greatest rival but our greatest and most formidable enemy? The question is, shall we turn our laboring men, our artisans, our producers, our manufacturers, our agriculturists, over to the tender mercies of a competition that lives and thrives and flourishes on the pauper labor of Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, and the islands of the seas? In other words, shall the Cobden Club of England and other free-traders of that country, dead and alive, dictate our policy, or shall we legislate in the interest of our own people without dictation from any foreign power or any foreign people? This is the great issue of the hour. This is the issue that must be fought out and determined, not alone by the American Congress, but by the people, the twelve million of voters of these United States of America at the approaching election in November next.

The question is not any longer what party is or is not in favor of readjustment. That is a dead issue, because it is favored by all parties. It is no longer a question which party is or is not in favor of reducing the surplus. That is obsolete for the same reason. The question is not now who is or who is not in favor of reducing taxation. This we all favor. The great financial problem, however, the overshadowing issue of the hour, is, how shall all this be done? Shall we accept the Mills bill and thus abandon the great fundamental doctrine of protection, a doctrine admitted, advocated, and urged by George Washington, Ben Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and others of our illustrious men, or shall we reject the Mills or House bill and by the adoption of a Senate substitute, such as has been indicated, adhere to a policy approved and supported by these great founders, builders, and defenders of the Republic, and under which it has bounded forward in the grand race of nations with such marvelous rapidity that in the great contest it has outstripped them all?

Under ordinary circumstances, Mr. President, I should have remained silent while the subject of the revision of the tariff was under consideration leaving the discussion to those whose experience and financial education as well as position on the Committee on Finance more thoroughly equip them for such duty. In view, however, of the very emphatic free-trade policy urged upon Congress by the President, and of the substantial adoption of that policy by the national House of Representatives, and of the absolutely blighting effect of such a policy, were it adopted, upon nearly every important industry of the Pacific coast, no Senator or Representative rom that section of our common country can, in justice to himself or his constituency, remain silent when this subject is under consideration. To remain mute at such a time would be to trifle with duty; to dodge responsibility would be cowardice; to fail to protest would be little less than criminal.

It is to be regretted, Mr. President, that in a great nation such as ours, first in wealth and in the greatness and grandeur of its institutions and the elevated plane of its public thought and political action, if not in population, there can not come to the assembled Congress from the pen of the Chief Executive recommendations upon this as upon all subjects, which, though in other respects might be subject to criticism, might be so essentially American in their nature, so pregnant with the vitalizing influences of American thought and American policy, and so distinctly opposed to all that is un-American or in any degree in sympathy with the thought or policy or interests of foreign powers, or in any respect in antagonism to our own, as to have commanded, without distinction of party, the co-operation of the American Congress.

To expect that much, however, is perhaps more than can with any reason be hoped for in a country divided into two great political parties, each struggling for the mastery, especially when the head of the administration is the nominee of his party for re-election, and hence we are divided here, and as we can not agree, the great controversy resolves itself into a gigantic inquiry, a great national, political inquirendo before the American people as the jury, as to whether the policy upon the subject of the tariff recommended by the President in his annual message and adopted by the national House of Representatives is one founded in justice to and in the interest of American labor, American industries, American development, and American progress, or whether it is not, upon the contrary, one calculated to depress and degrade labor, reduce wages, repress development, hinder progress, discourage enterprise, dwarf individual effort, paralyze capital, discourage friends at home, and encourage enemies abroad; and, in a word, a policy that will benumb the energies and arrest the development and progress of our nation.

This, Mr. President, is the vital question which the Fiftieth Congress is called upon to determine. And in this connection, it may be premised, it is once more, and more clearly than ever before, defined the old conflict which has so often in the past engaged the attention of the American people, the conflict between the doctrines of free trade and the principle of protection to American industries in all their varied forms and American labor. Upon one proposition we can all agree, and that is that the great object in the administration of any government is, or at least should be, especially in a republican government, to bring the greatest possible good to the greatest number. We must all agree, furthermore, that whatever policy will bring the greatest strength to our national energies, that will more thoroughly infuse vitality into the great arterial ducts of the nation, that will more effectively animate the country's industries and promote their development, and thus equip our nation and our people for vigorous, prolonged, and successful effort in the great contest for supremacy among the nations of the earth, is the policy that should receive the approbation of each and every American citizen; and whenever a policy the reverse of this is proposed to the people of this country for their adoption, and it is sought to ingraft it upon national legislation, whether that course is suggested by a President elected to his high position by our votes or in spite of them, it should be met with our stern, resolute, united, and vigorous opposition. And it is a fact, moreover, that the great masses of the people of this country never have been in the past, and will not now be, slow to comprehend the effect upon their individual interests, and upon the general welfare, of any suggested legislation; and if it is deemed to be of a nature hostile to their interests, they will not hesitate to oppose it by their voice and votes, even although in so doing they may come in conflict with the views, policies, and recommendations of the head of an administration who succeeded to power in part by their influence and their votes.

Party ties are strong, I admit, but there are ties of national and individual interests that are stronger still. Great party leaders may, for the sake of sustaining the standard-bearer of their party, suffer their party ties to lead them unwilling captives in one direction, while their better judgments are all the while pointing in the opposite direction not only as the proper, but also the more politic, course; but the great masses of the people—the individual, intellectual, patriotic voters of this great country—never have been and never will be led into an indorsement by their votes of any policy which their educated judgments disapprove.

The history of the past furnishes many instances of the verification of this statement and of the operations and effects of combination in the interest of individual and national interests and by which administrations have been ruthlessly and sometimes mercilessly hurled from power. Thomas Jefferson was not by the American people elected to the Presidency so much on any distinctive principles or policy of his own, as by a combination of those interests and opinions which were opposed to the administration of Mr. Adams and to the measures of his administration, chief among which were the alien and sedition laws.

The administration of Martin Van Buren went down in the election of General Harrison, not so much because of any distinctive policy on the part of either personally, but rather by a combination of those in favor of a more rigid economy, of a protective tariff, and by those favoring the rights and interests of the soldiers of the war of 1812. So, also, in the case of Mr. Polk. The Democratic party had in the campaign of 1844 inscribed upon their banners in Pennsylvania and other manufacturing States, "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of 1842;" in Pennsylvania it was "Polk, Dallas, Shunk, and the tariff of '42," and when power was reached they violated their pledges and enacted the free-trade tariff of 1846, and the result was that hundreds and thousands of the men who had voted to elevate Mr. Polk to the Presidency combined with the Whigs and hurled him from power by the election of Zachary Taylor. But in turn, four years afterwards, a great portion of the Whigs, becoming dissatisfied with the administration of Mr. Tyler, who succeeded General Harrison by death of the latter, and who apostatized, combined with the Democratic party, and the result was the dethronement of the Whig party by the election of Franklin Pierce. And so it is, and so it ever has been, and so it always will be, that by the power of combination of intelligent, patriotic men, personally and politically opposed to each other on many questions, the equilibrium of things has been maintained, fundamental errors have been arrested, the general welfare has been promoted, and the interests of the nation and of the people for the time-being have been advanced.

This idea which I have thus briefly hinted at was illustrated most beautifully more than a quarter of a century ago by one of the purest as well as one of the ablest of our now departed statesmen, when he said:

> The battle which perhaps decided the fate of most of Europe was won by the force of allied powers, and the chaplet that decked the brow of the world's mightiest hero was torn away by the power of combination. The tyranny and despotism of the mother country was overcome and destroyed by the flowing and fusion of French and American blood. Without this power of combination the sun of England might have set at Waterloo, and the reverberation of the last feeble echo of liberty might have been heard upon the hills of Yorktown. Side by side in these great struggles were commingled the voices of soldiers speaking different languages, the blood of patriots of different nations struggling for the attainment of one common end—the disenthrallment of millions then and yet unborn.

Possibly, Mr. President, that combination of dissatisfied Republicans with the Democratic party in 1884 may have in a certain sense and in a certain direction been productive of some temporary good to the country, although it must be confessed it is difficult to define at this time just in what respect, except it be the more perfect unification of the Republican party to-day. But now for the first time in the history of the present Administration a great fundamental proposition has been submitted for the consideration of the American Congress and American people. This recommendation of the President of the United States is entitled to respectful consideration; the views expressed in the last annual message of the President must not be brushed aside without examination, or with no more than a mere perfunctory investigation, as unworthy of careful consideration; upon the contrary, they must be met and considered fully, carefully, intelligently, from every conceivable standpoint and from all their different bearings, and if upon examination found to be reasonable, proper, and just, in harmony with the best interests of the Government and the people, then they should receive the cordial, hearty indorsement of every Senator upon this floor, whatever our political views have been or may be, and also by the great masses of the people of this country; but if, on the other hand, they are, after this careful investigation, found to be fallacious, un-American, and opposed to the true interests of our country and our people, then there should be no hesitation in resisting them to the extent of our power, irrespective of the question as to how we may have voted heretofore.

And speaking in part for the constituency west of the Rocky Mountains, and more especially for the people of the State of Oregon and the adjacent Territories, I submit through this instrumentality to them—Democrats, Republicans, and Prohibitionists alike—whether it is not a fact that the suggestions and recommendations of the President, and which have been practically adopted by the national House of Representatives in what is known as the Mills tariff measure, now here under consideration, is not absolutely destructive of almost every industrial interest on the Pacific coast; that whatever may be its effect elsewhere, that there its effect on the wool, the lumber, the wheat, the barley, the fruits, the lead, and nearly every other industry that can be named, is absolutely paralyzing and destructive in every sense of the term. And if this is so, if in this we are not mistaken, if the adoption of the free-trade doctrines recommended by the President and incorporated in the Mills bill, only with such modifications as to give protection to certain great industries of the South, such as rice, sugar, etc., will, in our judgments as a people, tend to prostrate our industries, discourage agriculture, prohibit mining, paralyze our business energies, destroy our independence, and place us on a level with European and Asiatic prices, and drive us, especially our laboring classes, in direct competition, not only with the pauper labor of European countries, but with that of Australia, China, South America, and the islands of the sea, then I assume that, no matter how we may have voted in 1884, no matter what we may have been denominated then—whether Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists, or Mugwumps—we will now, in defense of our interests, assert our personal and political independence and protest individually and collectively against the adoption of such a policy—a policy that will close our mines, will lay waste our orchards of figs, and grapes, and prunes; that will destroy our herds; that will close our mills; that will shut down our collieries; that will destroy our every industry; that will paralyze labor: that will reduce wages; that will roll backward the wheels of our prosperity, and reduce us to a state of vassalage dependent upon the will of foreign powers. However we may have voted in 1884, we will not submit to a policy that undermines our prosperity, that compels us to enter the unequal race and unjust competition with the cheaply-paid labor and the cheaply-wrought productions of foreign countries.

I shall assume, as it seems to me the facts justify, that the President is an advocate of the doctrines of free trade; that he is, therefore, opposed to the policy of protection to American industries and American labor through the medium of the levying of custom duties on foreign imports. Or, in other words, if revenue sufficient to meet the requirements of the Government can be collected without any resulting protection whatever to any of our industries or to American labor, then he favors that policy to the adoption of one that will give this protection. He certainly recommends that wool, lumber, lead, vegetables, brick, and some over one hundred other articles, be placed on the free-list, and these are the great industries in which the people whom I in part represent are so vitally interested. To place these articles on the free-list would be to virtually destroy these industries. The States and Territories of the Pacific coast are yet a new country; all their industries are yet in their infancy and only partially developed. The most strenuous advocates of free trade that have ever lived admit that the application of the doctrine of free trade to either a new country, or an old country with its industries undeveloped, would be ruinous. The great English free-trader, G. Smythe, the co-operator with Sir Robert Peel, in his scheme of free trade in England, in an address at Canterbury in 1847 said:

> I can not quit this subject of free trade without expressing my opinion on its abstract principle. I by no means hold that the principle of free trade is absolutely true or that it is of universal application. If I were an American, the citizen of a young country, I should be a protectionist; if I were a Frenchman, the citizen of an old country with its industries undeveloped, I should equally be a protectionist.

Here, then, we have the testimony of one of the ablest and most earnest English advocates of the doctrine of free trade publicly admitting that its application, either to a young country like the United States or an old country like France with its industries undeveloped, would be ruinous.

In arriving at a correct conclusion as to the intentions of the leaders of the Democratic party we must consider the character of the bill as originally reported from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and before the various concessions and surrenders that were subsequently found necessary to be made in order to obtain enough votes to secure its passage were indulged in. An examination of that bill will show that nearly two hundred articles on which duties more or less are now collected, were placed by that bill on the free-list. On the bill as it passed the House there are about one hundred and fifty articles, and upon which it is asserted the aggregate duties now collected amount to $19,773,599.34. But it is a noticeable fact, as stated in the minority report of the committee, that "more than one-third of the free-list is made up from the products of the farm, the forest, and the mine." It is a further noticeable fact that considerably over one-fourth of the whole proposed reduction resulting from those additions to the free-list arises from the one article of wool—the revenues derived from wool during the last fiscal year being $5,899,816.63, the next largest item being tin-plates, $5,706,433.89.

WILL THE HOUSE BILL REDUCE THE SURPLUS?

True, the Mills bill as it passed the House placed upon the free-list articles which during the last fiscal year contributed revenues to the amount of $19,773,599.34, and it is also true that internal-revenue taxes will by that bill be reduced, it is claimed, to the extent of about $24,000,000, making as a starting point to be either increased or diminished by either a reduction or increase of revenues in the further modifications of duties contained in the bill about $43,000,000. But after this point is reached you enter at once on the domain of prophecy and uncertainty, or rather whatever of certainty there is in reference to the matter points directly and emphatically in the light of past history, where largely reduced duties have resulted in largely increased importations and consequently largely increased revenues, to an absolute increase, rather than diminution, of the surplus.

And while Mr. MILLS claims that the bill will save $30,000,000 more in the reduction of duties on other articles, to any one conversant with the history of the reduction of duties in its effect in increasing importations rather than reducing them, and thus increasing rather than reducing the revenue, the prediction must seem wild in the extreme, and unsupported by either past history, reason, or common sense. It is, therefore, a matter of very serious doubt whether the duties received under the Mills or House bill, were it now a law, would not by reason of vastly increased importations be equal to the amount collected under existing law, in which event there would by that means be no reduction in the surplus whatever.

FREE TRADE IN WOOL.

It is my purpose to discuss, in so far as I may be able in the limited time in which it may seem reasonable to detain the Senate in one speech, after nearly ten months of continuous session, the effect on some of the great industries of our country of the application of the free-trade doctrines tendered by the Mills or House bill. And I will first attract attention to the subject of wool. The House bill places wool on the free-list. The effect of such action, were it adopted would, in my judgment, and I believe it is susceptible of demonstration, be to destroy that industry in the United States.

THE EFFECT OF THE REDUCTION OF TARIFF ON WOOL BY THE ACT OF 1883.

The great increase of importations in foreign wools and the consequent disastrous effects upon the interests of the wool-growers of this country even by the small reduction of duties on wool made in the tariff of March 3, 1883, will be seen by a comparison of importations in the three years subsequent to the passage of that act with the importations for the three years preceding its passage. I submit the following table of statistics computed from official statistics of the Treasury Department by the Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association:

Imports for three years previous and three years subsequent to the reduction in the tariff of March 3, 1883.

Total increase in revenue on these six articles in three years					$11,465,503.27

From this it will be noticed that the effect of that reduction in the tariff on wool and woolen goods was, first, to vastly increase foreign importations; and secondly, an increase of the revenue in the three years subsequent to the date when duties were thus lowered, of $11,465,503.27 over the duties collected for the three years prior to the reduction in duty.

While for the three years preceding March 3, 1883, the total number of pounds of worsted cloths imported were but 2,939,226, the importation of worsted cloths for the three years subsequent to the taking effect of the act of March 3, 1885, reached the enormous sum of 12,966,493 pounds, and upon which there was an increase of revenue in duties collected over that raised on the importations of the three prior years of $4,910,863.62.

While but 1,259,784 pounds of woolen yarns were imported in the years 1881, 1882, and 1883, there came in under the reduced tariff of March 3, 1883, in the three years of 1884, 1885, and 1886, 6,427,278 pounds, or over 500 per cent. of an increase, and upon these importations there was an increase in the revenue for the three years over that of the three prior years of $1,657,563.50.

On knit goods we find a similar result. The total number of pounds of knit goods imported during the three years preceding the date when the tariff of March 3, 1883, went into effect was 1,318,807 pounds, while for the three subsequent years the importations increased over 250 per cent., and reached a total of 3,433,480 pounds, and the revenue on knit goods was for the latter period increased from $1,722,483.68 to $3,617,364.71, being an increase for this period of $1,894,881.03.

In the matter of clothes, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments for ladies' and childrens' apparel and goods of similar description or used for like purpose, but 330,908 pounds were imported during the three years preceding the date when the tariff of March 3, 1883, went into operation, whereas for the three years following, the importations of this class of goods advanced over 700 per cent. and reached the enormous sum of 2,407,605 pounds, while there was an increase of revenue on this class of goods of nearly 500 per cent., the total revenue for the three prior years being only $502,103.45, and for the three latter $2,401,930.61. But what was the result in reference to raw wools? It is equally emphatic and significant in the lesson it teaches. Of class No. 1, or clothing wools, the importations for the last three years of the higher rates of tariff duties (the tariff of March 3, 1867), were 45,646,160 pounds, on which a revenue of $5,737,712.96 was collected, while for the three succeeding years the importations were 57,498,033 pounds, on which was collected a revenue of $5,905,430.42, or an increase of importations of 11,851,873 pounds and in revenue of $167,717.66. On class No. 2, or combing wools, the importations for the three prior years were 8,113,274 pounds, with a revenue of $1,065,814.12, while for the three succeeding years the importations were 13,239,048 pounds, upon which was collected duties to the amount of $1,337,340.02, or an increase in pounds of 5,125,774, and in revenue collected of $271,525.90. On class No. 3, or carpet wools, a like lesson is taught, as the importations for the three years preceding the reduction in tariff rates by the act of 1883 were 129,724,266 pounds, bringing a total revenue of $5,086,569.72, while there came in under the reduced rates the three succeeding years 193,024,049 pounds, with a revenue of $5,570,459.69, or an increase in importations of 63,299,783 pounds and an increase in revenue of $483,889.97.

On woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flux the comparison stands thus: Two million four hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-eight pounds imported during the three years of high rates, with a revenue of $291,857.37, while during the next three years following 4,710,917 pounds were imported, on which a revenue of $471,091.80 was realized, or an increase for this period of 2,278,779 pounds in our importations and of $179,234.47 in our revenue; or, in other words, or to state the case in a different form, under the higher rate of tariff on wools and woolen goods (that of 1867) in existence prior to the date when the act of March 3, 1883, went into effect, our imports for three years reached only 191,764,463 pounds, on which was collected a revenue of $17,964,907.52, while during the three subsequent years, or the first three years of the operation of the lower tariff of 1883, our importations reached the enormous figure of 293,706,903 pounds, or an increase over the importations of the three preceding years of 101,942,340 pounds, or more than 150 per cent., and on which a revenue of $29,430,410.79 was collected, or an increase in the latter period of three years over the former period of same length of time of $11,465,503.27.

But coming down still later in considering the ill effects on this great industry of the reduction of the tariff on wool by the act of 1883, we find that in the year 1887, ending June 30 of that year, our importations of wool from foreign countries amounted in value to over $18,000,000, upon which we swell the surplus in the Treasury by collecting duties to the amount of $6,390,055.

But the effect of the reduction of the tariff on wool by the act of March 3, 1883, was not only a large increase in imports of wool and woolen goods, and a large increase in the revenue, as has just been shown, but its tendency to the absolute destruction to a certain and indeed a very alarming extent of the sheep industry of this country is clearly manifest by the decrease in the number of sheep and of course in the yield of wool.

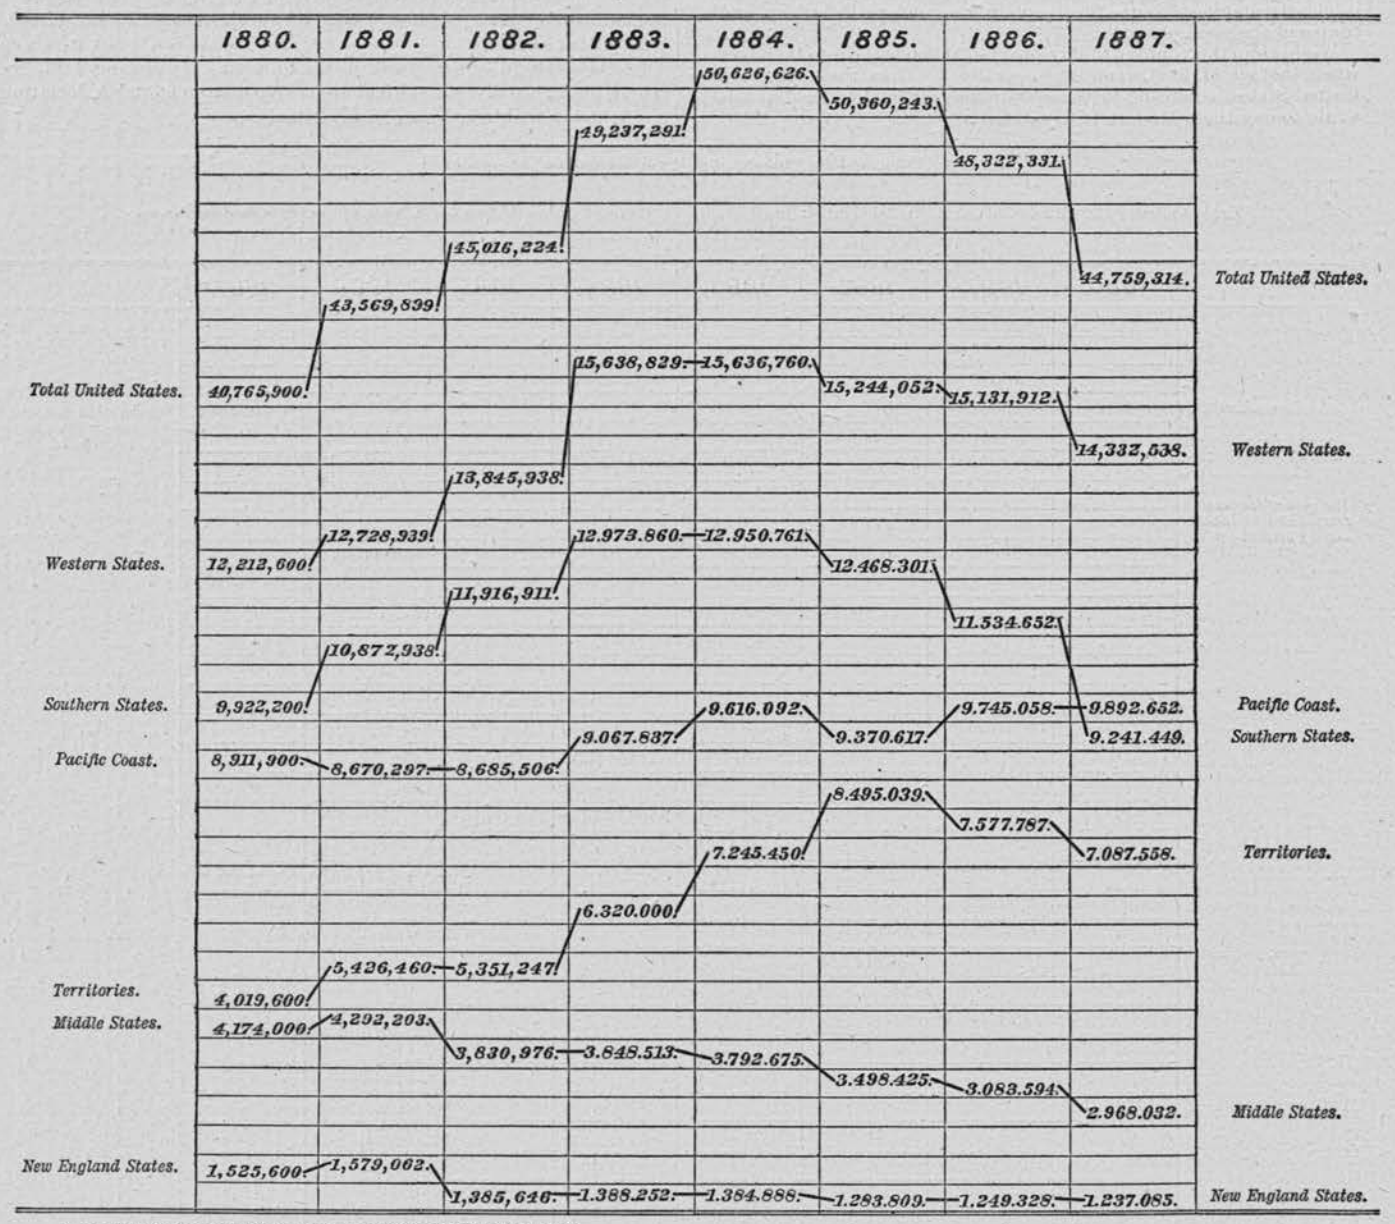
We have in this country to-day over 5,500,000 less sheep than we had when the act of 1883 went into operation. Then there were in the United States, according to these statistics, 50,360,243 head of sheep, while to-day there are but 44,759,314.

Had our sheep industry in the United States in the matter of the number of sheep increased since July 1, 1883, when the wool tariff of that year went into operation, in the same ratio it did during the increase under the former protective tariff of 1867, there would be to-day in the United States 64,000,000 head of sheep, instead of but 44,759,314, in that event a gain to the country of 19,240,686 head of sheep. These facts are fully illustrated in the following interesting table, recently published by the Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association, and which I will incorporate in my remarks:

[Published by Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association.]

Table showing the number of sheep in the United States, with estimate of probable number if rate of increase had continued.



The reduction in tariff on wool went into effect July 1, 1883.

Another table is given in which its effect on groups of States and the Territories is shown, as follows: Western States, Southern States, Pacific Coast States, Middle States, New England States, and the Territories. While it shows that the number of sheep in the Pacific States as a group did not decrease, the number in 1887 being 276,560 more than the number in 1884—the number in 1884 being 9,616,092, and in 1887, 9,892,652—yet the proportion of increase over that of the immediately preceding years was most materially lessened, as the increase alone in 1884 over that of 1880 was 704,192, while in every other one of these groups, including that of the Territories, the decline in number of sheep after 1884, when the tariff of 1883 had come to have full effect on this industry, was marked and uniform, as will be seen from the following table, prepared by the same association, and which I make a part of my remarks.

Notwithstanding all the superior facilities for sheep-raising in Oregon, California, and Washington Territory, the ruinous effect in this section, while not so marked as in other groups of States, is made clearly apparent, while in the groups of Territories it will be seen there were in 1887 only 7,087,558 head of sheep as against 8,495,039 in 1885, a decrease it will be seen in two years of 1,407,481.

The reduction in tariff on wool went into effect July 1, 1883.

As further showing the effect on its price that would necessarily follow the placing of wool on the free-list, attention is attracted to the following table, showing a comparison of the scoured value and the value in the grease of competing grades of American and foreign wools on the basis of the scoured value in London in December, 1887. This table was prepared by Justice, Bateman & Co., 122 South Front street, Philadelphia. That the table may be intelligent to all and fully comprehended, I repeat the explanation by its author as follows:

The first column of figures on the left contains the average price for each grade of American wool at this date (January 2, 1888) in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

The second column contains the percentage of shrinkage in scouring the various grades of American wool, and the third column shows the scoured cost of the same to the manufacturer here. The fourth column the free-trade price for each grade of American wool, or in other words, it shows the price which would have to be accepted for domestic wool on the basis of the present values in London if the duties were taken off. The fifth column shows the decline, in cents, per pound in fleeces, which must occur to domestic wool to reduce it to the free-trade level. This column also shows the actual amount of protection, in cents, per pound, which the different qualities of domestic wool now have.

The list of foreign wools on the right-hand side of the paper enumerates some of the qualities which compete with domestic wools named on the same line on the left-hand side. The first column of figures to the right of the foreign list is the foreign price in cents in London. The last column on the extreme right shows how much decline would have to take place in the value of domestic scoured wool to reduce it to the London basis of value to-day.

This last, or ninth column, is also the difference in cents per pound between the scoured cost of American wool and the scoured cost of the corresponding grade of foreign wool in London, and is the actual amount of protection which the American wool-grower now gets on scoured wool when it is imported in the unwashed condition.

The following is the table referred to, and the key or explanation to which has just been given:

This table comprises a comparison of prices and shows conclusively to the intelligent student how it is that "protection protects" the wool-grower, and how without adequate protection the American wool-growers would be driven from their business. It will be observed from this table the Philadelphia price in 1887 of Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory X fine and above heavy was in the grease 16 cents per pound; if there had been no duty this wool must have sold at 10½ cents per pound in order to compete with similar wool from Buenos Ayres. A scoured pound of the Oregon wool was then worth, it will be seen, 55 cents; a scoured pound of the Buenos Ayres wool, if there had been no tariff, could have been sold, as shown by this circular, for 36 cents. In other words, the Oregon and Washington Territory wool-grower got 19 cents per pound more for his scoured wool by reason of the tariff, or that much more than he would have obtained had wool been on the free-list.

I recently received a communication from a very intelligent constituent of mine, a Democrat residing at Long Tom, Lane County, Oregon, in which he propounds to me certain interrogatories touching the subject of the tariff on wool, and I take this occasion to answer them publicly.

The first inquiry is:

How are wool-growers protected by the tariff?

This general question, it seems to me, has already been answered in what has just been said.

My correspondent next remarks:

Wool under 32 cents per pound, when imported, has to pay 10 cents per pound specific and 11 per cent. ad valorem duty; or on wool at 16 cents per pound the duty would be a little more than 11½ cents per pound; on wool rated at 23 cents per pound it would be nearly 12½ cents duty. This is a very complex style of tax and hard for the sheepman to understand.

This, to a certain extent, may be true, and, as a rule, had I my way all ad valorem duties would be abolished and specific duties only would be imposed, although in the matter of wool, if we are to have an ad valorem duty, then it should be accompanied also by a specific duty, as will be shown later on. Many frauds on the law would, in my judgment, be avoided by having a simple and specific duty. Still the law as it stands, and it has been correctly quoted by my correspondent, is not difficult to understand. The average intelligence of those engaged in this great industry, which has been regarded so worthy and honorable since the days of our Saviour, when, as we are told, "shepherds watched their flocks by night," must not be underestimated. The sheep-owners of this country understand the law thoroughly and its operation and effect. The officers charged with the duty of executing the law understand it, and my correspondent, it is quite apparent from the general intelligence exhibited in his letter, understands it. There is a reason for the complex or double system, part specific, part ad valorem. If an ad valorem duty alone were charged it would open the door to immense frauds. The specific duty is higher on more valuable wool and lower on cheaper wool, because the finer grades require greater protection to encourage their production.

Again, my correspondent calls on me to answer this conundrum:

If our wools sell for 23 cents per pound, and the tariff adds 12½ cents of that price to us, its real price without the tariff would be 10½ cents, would it not? and at 15 cents per pound, the price we received in 1886, the real value of our wool was 3½ cents per pound, if figures do not lie and if I know the meaning thereof. Now, sir, if you can explain these discrepancies I will be obliged to you.

In the first place, my correspondent, as is the President in his last annual message on this subject, is in error in assuming that the value of wool is always, at all times, and under all circumstances, ascertained and fixed by deducting the amount of the tariff from the selling price. Suppose, for instance, the tariff were $1 a pound, wool would not be increased in price $1 per pound, as we all know. Such a tariff being prohibitory, would simply shut out all importations; but our price would be fixed by the relative value of wool as compared with other products of the farm.

A tariff of even 20 cents per pound on wool would be just as protective, no more, no less, as would be a tariff of $1 a pound, because either would shut out the foreign wool and give the American wool-grower the exclusive American market. While this is true, while it is certain that the value of wool is not always measured by taking the selling price and deducting therefrom the amount of duties imposed, yet it is true that a tariff gives to the American producer an advantage over the foreign producer in this—if the foreign producer can raise wool and ship it to Boston and sell it for 10 cents a pound and there is no tariff, then the American producer must sell for 10 cents or go out of the business. This, it seems to me, is plain to every one. But if the foreigner is met at the custom-house with a duty of 10 cents on his foreign product, then he must sell his wool for 20 cents per pound in order to get 10 cents for himself—10 cents going to the United States through the custom-house; and thus it is the American wool-grower will get 20 cents for his wool and thus have an advantage of 10 cents per pound over the foreigner. South American merino wool can be raised at Buenos Ayres for 6 or 7 cents a pound, and the country is so vast and pasturage so plentiful and cheap and the wages of herders so low that without a tariff our people can not raise wool in free-trade competition with them. It is simply out of the question, and to me it seems absurd to insist that they can.

President Cleveland in his recent letter of acceptance reiterates in these words this statement, which is substantially the declaration contained in his last annual message:

I suppose that it is needless to explain that all these duties and assessments are added to the price of the articles upon which they are levied, and thus become a tax upon all those who buy these articles for use and consumption.

I suppose, too, it is well understood that the effect of this tariff taxation is not limited to the consumers of imported articles, but that the duties imposed upon such articles permit a corresponding increase in price to be laid upon domestic productions of the same kind, which increase, paid by all our people as consumers of home productions and entering every American home, constitutes a form of taxation as certain and as inevitable as though the amount was annually paid into the hand of the tax-gatherer.

From this proposition I most emphatically dissent. It does not follow that because a duty of 10 per cent., or 20 per cent., or any other amount is levied on any foreign product, this amount is necessarily added to the price of the article to be paid by the consumer; much less that the effect of such tariff laid on the foreign product is to increase correspondingly to the amount of duty the price on the domestic or home product of the same kind. Possibly where the article imported is not produced at all in this country there may be some reason for concluding that the tariff duty imposed is added to the price that is paid by the consumer, as in that case there is no competition, nothing whatever to regulate the price; but where the imported product is one produced here, and there is competition between the home and the imported product, then it does not follow that the amount of duty imposed is added to the price to be paid by the consumer, even for the imported product, much less has a tariff duty levied in such a case the effect of adding an equal tax on the like home product to be paid by the consumer.

But suppose the President is right in his position; then it follows, absolutely, logically, and necessarily, and there is no escape from it, that for every cent of tariff that is imposed on each pound of imported wool, then the domestic product is increasad in price to the wool-grower to just that amount; if the tariff on wool is 10 or 12 cents a pound, then clearly, under the President's reasoning, the price of wool would under all circumstances be just 10 or 12 cents per pound higher than it would be otherwise. And so with wheat. There is under existing law a duty of 20 cents a bushel on all imported wheat. So, according to the President's theory, there is just 20 cents added to the price of every bushel of domestic wheat raised and sold in the United States, and the producer of wheat is just that much better off by reason of the tariff, according to the President's theory, although the man who is purchaser and the consumer of wheat would in such a case be compelled to pay 20 cents per pound more for his wheat than he would in the absence of a tariff on wheat. And so it would be all through the list on every domestic article where the foreign article of the same kind is subject to a tariff.

But the President is wrong. The philosophy of a protective policy does not operate in this manner; while its effect is highly beneficial to the home producer, while it upholds prices both of labor and product, its operation is not on the scale or regulated in the manner indicated by the President; but the effect to be produced by an import duty is controlled and regulated by a variety of circumstances and economic conditions as indicated by me in the answer given to the interrogations of my constituent.

But another great historical fact in connection with the constant decline in the price of cheap clothing, since the enactment of the tariff of 1867 is worthy of note. Clothing can be purchased to-day in any of our great Eastern cities, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, for about one-half its cost twenty-five years ago; and not only is this a fact, but actually cheaper by from 10 to 20 per cent. than the same kind and quality of goods can be purchased in Liverpool or London. While therefore under the operation of our protective tariff the past twenty-one years our flocks of sheep have vastly increased in numbers, our wool and mutton have improved in quality and price, clothing has become materially cheapened. But since the Democratic party insists on placing wool on the free-list, and the House of Representatives has passed a bill to that effect, what has been the effect on the Pacific coast? Simply this: The price of wool has dropped from 25 cents to an average of 8 to 12, while the price of clothing is in no wise cheapened.

Already have the wool-growers in the West suffered immensely on account of the proposed repeal of the tariff on wool. Wool is selling to-day in Michigan, we are told, for from 15 to 17 cents per pound, a reduction of 10 or 12 cents per pound from last year. The highest price paid for wool in the interior of Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory this year until very recently was 12 cents per pound, while much, it is said, has been sold as low as 8 cents per pound. Recently since it has become known that the Republican Senate will maintain present rates on wool and perhaps advance the rates somewhat, wool in Oregon is selling from 13 to 15 cents per pound.

Again, our wool product is to-day less by 33,700,000 pounds than it was under the tariff of 1867, or when the act of 1883 went into force; then it was little if any more than 300,000,000 pounds; now, according to the best statistics, it is only about 265,000,000 pounds. These are the figures of reliable statisticians—although I am aware the wool merchants' figures differ materially, some placing the present product as high as 333,000,000 pounds. This is not all nor yet the worst effects by any means of the reduction in the tariff on wool by the act of March 3, 1883. A further ruinous effect of this reduction was in bearing down the price of wool in the United States; a decline in the price of wool immediately followed of over 5 cents per pound, and the sheep-owners of the United States suffered the first year of this reduction a loss of between fifteen and sixteen million dollars.

THE BENEFICIAL EFFECTS OF THE WOOL TARIFF OF 1867.

How different and beneficial was the effect of the tariff of March 2, 1867! Under the stimulating influence of the protection afforded by that tariff the number of sheep in the United States rapidly increased, the yield of wool increased, and the quality was improved. In 1850 there were in the United States but 21,723,220 head of sheep, yielding only 52,516,959 pounds of wool. In the ensuing ten years but small protection was given to this industry and the increase in the number of sheep and in the yield of wool was comparatively small, as in 1860 there were only 22,471,275 head of sheep, or an increase in ten years of only 748,055 or about 3½ per cent., while the yield of wool in 1860 was but 60,264,913 pounds, an increase in ten years without adequate protection of only 7,747,954 pounds. The decade from 1860 to 1870 had in it three years of protection under the act of March 2, 1867, and the result was an increase in that decade in the number of sheep of 6,606,675, or an increase of 27 per cent.; while the yield advanced during the same period from 60,264,913 pounds to 100,102,387 pounds, while in the next ten years, from 1870 to 1880, during the whole of which time the tariff of March 2, 1867, was in operation, the increase in the number of sheep was 12,287,949, or 44 per cent.; in the four succeeding years, from 1880 to 1884, when the tariff of 1867 was modified by that of 1883 going into operation, the increase in the number of sheep in the United States was 9,594,703, making a total of 50,360,243, since which time under the less protective duties under the act of 1883 there has been a decline in the industry, and the number of sheep has been reduced as has also the yield of wool. The statistics are taken mainly, but found to be entirely correct by comparison with others, from an address delivered by Hon. William A. Lawrence, of Ohio, November 11, 1887, before the Farmers' National Congress at Chicago, and they are authentic.

True it is a Republican Senate consented to the reduction in the tariff on wool made by the act of March 3, 1883, not, however, because of any belief that such a policy as to wool was the correct one, but simply because the clause in the tariff bill of that year making this reduction was part and parcel of a general act which contained many other provisions whereby the revenue could be reduced and yet do no injustice to the industry taxed. No one believes for a moment that the majority of this Senate, then more evenly divided politically, would have voted a reduction of the tariff on wool had it been presented as a separate and independent proposition. The alternative was presented of either voting this modification in the wool tariff or refusing to vote a reduction of taxes on a variety of imports upon which the duties were admittedly too high, the removal of which would not only do no injustice to the industries taxed but effect a large decrease in the surplus. And what seems most remarkable, if not indeed somewhat amusing and indeed ludicrous, is the fact that the Democracy, especially of the Pacific coast, denounced this reduction of the tariff on wool as an unjust discrimination against a great industry, declaring it to have been the result of the recommendations of a Republican commission appointed by a Republican President, and yet we are to-day greeted with the sublime spectacle of a Democratic President demanding not merely that the tariff of 1883 be retained, not merely that a further reduction in the tariff on wool be arranged, but that wool be placed on the free-list; a Democratic House of Representatives seconds that demand by an almost solid party vote, and Democratic leaders throughout the country—not by any means all of them, I am gratified to say—are crying out at the top of their voices: "Great is Allah! Give us free wool!"

As a forcible illustration of what has just been stated and of the humiliating subserviency to the behests of party leaders, I desire to attract attention to a plank in the State platform of the Democratic party of the State of California of 1886, and on which two of the present members of the national House of Representatives of that State were elected. It read as follows:

The present tariff on wool, prepared by a Republican commission appointed by a Republican President, is an unjust discrimination against a great industry, and we denounce the same and demand the restoration of the tariff of 1867.

The recent vote elsewhere on the Mills bill indicates pretty strongly that the Democratic representation in the national House of Representatives from the State of California have changed their minds if they ever indorsed their own platform on that subject, otherwise their votes have been cast contrary to their convictions.

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE INDUSTRY ASSAILED.

And what is the extent in value and importance of the wool industry in the United States thus assailed by the President and by the Mills or House bill? Only five of the great agricultural industries of the country exceed it in value. These are corn, hay, wheat, cotton, and oats, in the order named, wool coming sixth. It is estimated there are in the United States 1,020,728 owners of flocks of sheep. Of these over 700,000 are engaged almost exclusively in the business of sheep-raising as an industry. These give employment continually on an average to more than half a million of men. The value of the wool crop last year was $75,000,000. But not only so. Mutton is a choice and cheap food. About 15,000,000 mutton sheep are sold annually in the United States for home consumption and export. These, while furnishing an excellent and cheap food to the consumer—the laborer, the mechanic, and others—bring to the producer or sheep-raiser annually an average of at least $3 per head, or an aggregate in coin of about $45,000,000, thus making the annual aggregate value of the wool and mutton crop of the United States over $120,000,000.

A writer of ability and accuracy, Mr. Washington Belt, of New York, in a recent article on this subject, foots up the damage that will ensue in the destruction of values by placing wool on the free-list in this wise:

These 700,000 farmers engaged in the wool industry will average to own at least 160 acres of land each, making a total of 112,000,000 acres; devoting the more desirable parts of their farms to the raising of grain and hay, and selecting the poor, rough, and hilly portions for the pasturage of their sheep, thus putting to profitable use their entire farms. If you remove the duty on wool, and so make the growing of it an unprofitable business, it would render almost valueless the portions of their farms devoted to sheep-raising, and would thereby decrease the average price of the whole farm at least $2.50 per acre, making a loss from this source alone of $280,000,000. Sheep would also decrease in value 50 cents per head, making another shrinkage of $25,000,000. Wool would decline from 7 to 8 cents per pound at least from the average price of the last fifteen years, adding another loss of $25,000,000, and the farmers would be so impoverished by the low prices obtained for their wool that out of actual necessity they would be compelled to reduce the wages of 500,000 persons employed to assist in the growing of their flocks to the extent of at least 15 cents per day, or about $50 per year, making a still further loss of $25,000,000 from this source alone.

This writer concludes with the following very pertinent remarks:

Now, for the sake of reducing our revenue between five and six million dollars we must virtually impoverish this vast number of persons engaged in this industry, and those dependent on them as employés and their families, and those dependent on this industry, numbering one-fifteenth of the entire population of the United States, as a majority of these flock-masters, as well as their employed help, are heads of families, and so force this large body of people to follow a business that will yield no profit, and compel them to raise wool in competition with all the poor and poverty-stricken nations of the earth, where land and labor are fully one-half less than in this country; and in doing this we inflict upon this most honorable and respected American industry the following losses, namely:

Shrinking in value of land	$280,000,000
Shrinking in value of labor	25,000,000
Shrinking in value of flocks	25,000,000
Shrinking in value of wools	25,000,000
Total loss to the wool industry	355,000,000

The fallacy of the argument advanced by the promoters and defenders of the Mills bill proposition to place wool on the free-list is made manifest by the very contradictory reasons given in favor of it and the diversity of prediction as to the effect the placing of wool on the free-list will have on its price. For instance, it is asserted confidently by the President and by Mr. MILLS and others that the effect of placing wool on the free-list—and, in fact, this is given as the main, if not the sole reason for placing it there—will be to reduce the price of wool and thus cheapen, as they claim, the cost of clothing to the people. But while this is so, in the great debate recently held elsewhere, Representative SPRINGER, one of the leading Democrats of the national House of Representatives, and other leading advocates of the Mills bills, declared, and supported their declaration by various arguments, that the effect of free wool would be to advance the price of wool for manufacturing purposes. Surely both of these propositions can not be true, and, in fact, neither is absolutely true. It is true, however, as stated by the President and Mr. MILLS, that the effect of placing wool on the free-list will be to reduce the price of wool to the wool-grower, but it is not true, as it is believed, that the effect of such reduction will be to cheapen manufactured woolen clothing.

THE SHEEP INDUSTRY IN OREGON.

The sheep industry in Oregon is in its infancy. Prior to 1867 there were less than 150,000 sheep all in the State of Oregon. In 1860 there were but 86,052, and in 1850 only 15,382. Stimulated, however, by the protection afforded by the tariff of March 2, 1867, this industry made gigantic strides until checked in a great measure by the reduction made in tariff by the act of 1883. For instance, there were less than 150,000 head of sheep in 1867; the number in the next three years had increased to 318,123; in 1880 the number reached 1,083,182, while in the next three years, to 1883, the number more than doubled, reaching the limit of 2,403,157. Then, under the depressing influence of the tariff of 1883, there was in the next three years, down to 1886, an average annual increase of only about 18,000 head, as the statistics show the number in 1886 to have been but 2,469,533, while in 1887, according to the reported statistics, which by the best judges are estimated as being too low by 20 per cent., the number was 2,593,029.

It may be safely stated, therefore, that there are now in the State of Oregon in round numbers about three million head of sheep. These represent a capital of not less than $6,500,000, irrespective of capital invested in outfits, teams, horses, etc., for each flock, besides necessary land and improvements. It is but safe to estimate that these give constant employment to at least three men for every one thousand head of sheep, thus giving employment to about nine thousand men as herders and shepherds, not including shearers, etc. And this is the character of the wool industry alone in the State I in part represent here, which the President of the United States, and the present candidate of the Democratic party for re-election, would strike down and forever destroy by placing wool on the free-list. To this industry perhaps more than that of any other, and, indeed, I might perhaps with propriety say, as much as all others combined, is our State to-day indebted for the marvelous development and the rapid settlement of its eastern section.

For many of these statistics and comparisons I am indebted to Col. Thos. S. Lang, of the Dalles Oregon, who is thoroughly informed on the subject.

Prior to the act of March 2, 1867, the destruction of the wool industry of this country was threatened by the rapidly increasing flocks in Australia, the Argentine Republic, and other foreign countries. Then our wool production was but 168,000,000 pounds annually, while that of South America and the African colonies alone reached over 300,000,000 pounds. Then it was the American Congress, becoming alarmed at the peril to which this great American industry was being subjected, sought by wise legislation contained in the act of March 2, 1867, to stay the flow of foreign importation and give protection and encouragement to the wool-growers of the United States by an increase of duties on foreign importations of wool, and what was the result? Our yield of wool generally rapidly increased in the succeeding sixteen years, as follows:

	Pounds.
1867	168,000,000
1870	182,000,000
1875	195,000,000
1883	300,000,000

And not only so, but the average price of wool under this tariff during the years it was in force was 47 cents per pound, New York and Boston prices, notwithstanding the immense increase in the number of pounds in this country. It must be further borne in mind that the wool-growers of the United States did not obtain the full legitimate benefits of the act of 1867 for some three years after its passage, from the fact that importers, anticipating an increase in duties, flooded the country with foreign wool and woolen goods under the low-rate tariff of 1864. Another reason operating against the wool industry about that time was the fact that our markets were glutted with the immense amount of army clothing thrown on the markets in the first few years succeeding the close of the war. But all the beneficial effects of the act of 1867 were, as I have already stated, checked by the act of 1883, as will be further conclusively shown by two significant facts: First, that since 1883 our yield of wool has decreased from 300,000,000 pounds to 265,000,000 pounds, although, according to McCarthy, statistician, the product reached high-water mark in 1885, when it reached 308,000,000 pounds, while the average price of wool at New York and Boston has decreased from 47 cents per pound, the average price from 1867 to 1883, to 33 cents per pound, the average price since 1883 to the present time—a falling off, as will be seen, of 14 cents on each pound of wool. These rates are those of Ohio washed fleece.

If a reduction, therefore, in the duty on wools from 2½ to 3 cents per pound by removing the ad valorem duties, as was done by the act of 1883, has been followed by such disastrous effects, what may we expect in the shape of calamity and absolute destruction to this great industry which now contributes annually to the wealth of the country over $75,000,000—I make no mention of flocks valued at $90,000,000 more—if all duties are removed and wool, as is proposed by the pending House bill, be placed on the free-list? The result in such an event is not difficult of divination. England, free-trade England, has herself furnished ample evidence of the effects of free trade on the wool industry in her own country. Less than eighteen years ago England produced over 250,000,000 pounds of wool, while to-day, under the baneful influence of free trade, her product is less than 100,000,000 pounds.

WOOL AS RAW MATERIAL.

Those who speak of wool as the raw material should remember it costs money, first for sheep, for pasturage, for salt, for herders, for shepherds, for doctoring, and for general care. The average expense of keeping a sheep in Eastern Oregon is about 5 cents a month or 60 cents a year, while at present rates each sheep will perhaps net him from 65 to 70 cents, which leaves the owner under existing duties from 5 to 10 cents a head on which to pay interest on money invested and support his family; and in this estimate no account is taken of the risks of destruction from dogs, wild beasts, winter storms, and sheep epidemics. It costs about 10 cents a head, as I understand, for shearing, or over 1½ cents per pound. For hauling it to a point of shipment it costs from one-half to 2 cents a pound, depending on location. Another high tax must be added to the Eastern Oregon shipper or the purchaser of wool to get it to Chicago; and yet wool is said to be the raw material.

FREE TRADE IN LUMBER.

The Mills or House bill places lumber on the free-list, and it is asserted by the advocates of that measure that if this is done the cost to the consumer will be reduced. But is this so? If the placing of lumber on the free-list would in no wise tend to crush out the manufacturer of lumber in this country, if our mill-owners could afford in such a case to compete with the cheaply obtained timber and cheaply manufactured lumber of the Canadian provinces, and could keep up their annual product to its present figures, then it is reasonable to suppose that the price of lumber to the consumer would be materially reduced, although in such event the profits to the producer would of necessity be materially lessened.

But is it not a fact that if an open, free market is given by us to the lumbermen of our northern neighbors they will have such an advantage over the mill-men of this country, and especially those of the Pacific coast, that the first and ruinous effect will be to cripple and finally close American mills, thus driving the millions of capital now invested in that great industry into other avenues that will warrant better returns; and in the next place, will it not inevitably follow that, having a market all to themselves, our British neighbors along our northern boundaries engaged in the lumbering business will at once advance the price even beyond what it is now, so that in the end the last condition will be worse than the first and the price of lumber to the consumer, instead of being reduced, will be higher than it is at present?

It is a conceded fact that everything necessary to produce lumber in British Columbia and throughout Canada is at least 25 per cent. cheaper than in the United States. The Crown lands, covered with magnificent forests, are leased to mill-owners for long terms at merely nominal rentals; Chinese labor is employed almost exclusively in the mills of British Columbia, and the wages for this character of labor is now being reduced still lower than heretofore, since thousands of Chinese laborers are arriving every month over the subsidized line of British steamers running between Vancouver, the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific, and the British port of Hong-Kong, in China. Again, freights from British Columbia to California are as low, and perhaps lower than, from most ports in Oregon and on Puget Sound, while by reason of the necessarily higher freight rates from Alaska (by reason of its distance away) the British mills would, in case of free trade, have a monopoly as against Alaskan lumber.

Again, the Canadian lumber mills, which line the whole Canadian border, being located so much nearer the markets of the Eastern States than are the mills of the pine-producing regions of the United States, have here again a most decided advantage in the matter of freights, amounting at present to more than one-half the present duty on lumber. If, therefore, lumber were made free, the effect would unquestionably be to give the Canadians control of the markets of the Eastern States, and thus keep out the products of our lumber regions from our home markets.

A continuing duty, therefore, equal to that imposed by existing law, and which will doubtless be recognized by the Senate substitute for the Mills or House bill, is absolutely essential, in order that Western pine lumber may be able to reach Eastern markets, and to the end that the lumber industries of Oregon, California, and Washington Territory may not be crushed out by the mills of British Columbia.

But aside from the fact that free lumber would tend to crush out the mill-owners and lumbermen of this country, without any resulting benefit to the consumer, if not, indeed, a positive injury by an increase in its price—that price, moreover, going into foreign lands instead of our own people's pockets—there are other interests of great magnitude, as we all know, depending on the maintenance of this great industry. Three hundred million dollars in capital and over 1,000,000 men are engaged in this business in the United States. Thirty million dollars annually go into the pockets of the farmers of the United States for supplies for men and animals engaged in the lumber industry of the United States. On the Pacific coast, for instance, the lumber industry is the largest and most important manufacturing interest of that region of country; the capital invested is enormous, and more than in any other manufacturing interest. There are in Oregon, California, and Washington Territory nearly 200 saw-mills, employing over 35,000 men, while a fleet of more than 200 vessels, with crews numbering in the aggregate 8,000 men, are constantly engaged in freighting lumber, mostly coastwise.

Some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the lumber interests of the great Pacific Northwest by an examination of the following table, showing the lumber exports, board measure, to foreign countries in the year 1886 from the port of Puget Sound:

Destination.	No.	Feet.	Destination.	No.	Feet.
Sydney	32	25,082,342	Hong-Kong	2	1,210,000

In addition to the above, three cargoes of lumber, aggregating 2,576,432 feet, were shipped to Boston; 289 spars, equal to 300,000 feet, to New York, and 323 spars, equal to 200,000 feet, to Bath, Me., all shipped the same year; while in the State of Oregon the sawing capacity of the mills in operation in 1886, according to the latest official statistics in the Department of Agriculture, amounted to over 500,000,000 feet, board measure.

The chief of the division of forestry in his latest annual report, in speaking of the lumber trade of Oregon, says:

> Already the lumber traffic between Oregon and the southern markets of San Francisco, Mexico, and South America has reached large proportions, and shipments are made even to China and Australia. The rapidly diminishing supply of pine in the district embracing Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, together with the increased railroad facilities, have recently led to the sale of Oregon lumber in the Eastern markets. This inland trade began in 1885, and shipments were made last year (1886) at the rate of 5,000,000 feet a month, the lumber going as far as Denver, Omaha, and Chicago, most of it in the form of timber. Much of it was used for railroad and bridge construction.

It requires no argument, therefore, to make it perfectly clear to all that upon the success of such an industry depend for their existence numerous other, although less important, yet in themselves very important industries not only to those engaged in them and to the men they employ, but to the community at large, and all of which combined are engaged on the Pacific coast in the great work of the development of our many resources. To weaken, therefore, or strike down the former by bringing it into a ruinous competition with British mills is simply to lay a heavy hand on many other important industries dependent for their existence on this larger and still more important one. The effect would be to reduce wages, throw men out of employment, bring stagnation on our shipping interests, paralyze trade, benumb the prosperity, retard the development, and check the progress of our coast.

The protection of our magnificent forests against the destroying agency of incendiary and accidental fires is worthy the serious attention of the General Government, but the protection of these grand forests as against legitimate industry and the necessities of domestic and foreign commerce may not thus early in our history be urged with propriety as a reason for abolishing the duty on lumber. It is alleged upon what seems to be reliable data that not one hundredth part of the forest lands of Oregon, California, and Washington Territory have yet been touched, while in the great timber districts of Alaska the sound of the millman's ax has never yet been heard. Moreover, it is true that the Douglas spruce, or red fir, as it is locally called; Lawson's cypress, or cedar, pine, hemlock, and other coniferous trees of the Pacific coast are reproducing in their nature, and where but a few years since these forests have been hewed down there are to-day magnificent young forests coming forward rapidly in their stead.

This same report, in speaking of the destruction by great forest fires in Oregon and Washington Territory and of the rapid reproduction of the Oregon forests, says:

> The forests of Washington Territory have been subject to very destructive fires. The mountains are often invisible for weeks if not for months together, on account of the enveloping smoke of the consuming forests. Owing to the moist atmosphere, however, which pervades the western portion of the Territory, a young growth rapidly springs up to replace the trees which are burned, and thus the forest character of the region is preserved, as it is not and can not be in the drier regions east of the mountains.

In speaking further in reference to this matter in regard to the Oregon forests, the report says:

> Forest fires have been even more prevalent and destructive in Oregon than in the neighboring Territory, 132,320 acres having been reported as burned in 1880. The forests, however, reproduce themselves here as they do there and for the same reason, and with a little care this Pacific coast region might be preserved as a source of wealth more continuous and valuable than the mines, which are so highly estimated, while the worth of the forests is so generally overlooked.

In considering this question, moreover, it must not be forgotten that Canada is the largest exporter of timber of any country in the world. Her exports last year were 160,028,850 cubic feet, being 18,418,895 cubic feet more than that exported by Russia, the next largest exporter of timber in the world, and 46,062,830 cubic feet more than that exported by Sweden, which stands third on the list of exporters of this product; she exports 53,954,480 cubic feet more than the United States, the fourth on the list; she exports within a fraction of three times as much as Norway and Germany, the fifth and sixth, respectively, on the list of exporters of timber; four times more than Finland, the seventh in importance as an exporter of timber, and over three hundred times as much as Italy, the eighth and only remaining country that sends out exports of this character—and these in the case of Italy are limited to oak staves. The world's greatest competitor, then, as an exporter of wood and wood products, stretches her timber-decked forests the entire length of our northern frontier from sea to sea, only separated from us by an artificial boundary line.

It is to the United States, moreover, Canada and her several provinces look for their best market for their timber and lumber. Of the 300,000,000 feet of Canada spruce exported last year, 170,000,000 feet of the amount found a market in the United States, while only 130,000,000 feet went to Great Britain. This should not be so. The United States with her vast forests and her mill capacity, estimated at 200,000,000 feet board measure daily, and not Canada, should be not only the largest manufacturer and our people the largest home consumers of these wood products, but also the largest timber and timber products exporter in the world; and yet her unmanufactured timber export trade in 1887 was but 114,074,370 cubic feet, while Canada exported 168,028,850 cubic feet. Of the 275,451,000 cubic feet of hewn and sawn wood, exclusively of staves and furniture wood valued at $6,555,733, imported into Great Britain in the year 1887, the United States furnished but 6.7 per cent., while Canada furnished 21.5 per cent., Germany 4.4, Russia 22.3, Norway and Sweden 36.8, and all other countries 8.3 per cent.

Canada to-day, according to the recent report of the United States Department of Agriculture (annual report of Division of Forestry for 1887, B. E. Fernow, chief of division), sends 45.7 of her total export of raw material to the United States, while 46 per cent. goes to Great Britain. But not only so. In our trade with Canada of wood and its manufactures and of forest products for the year 1887, in reference to which there are exchanges between the two countries, Canada has in all respects a most decided advantage. The term "reciprocity" can in no sense be properly applied to this trade between the two countries. While our imports from Canada of these products amounted in value to $9,790,892, our exports to that country of like articles were only worth $2,607,438, leaving a balance of trade against us in respect of these exchanges of $7,183,454. Of lumber and timber that are dutiable we sent Canada these products in the year 1887 to the value only of the mere bagatelle of $95,616, while Canada sent into our market the same year like products to the value of $7,630,431. The following statement from the official document just quoted will show the articles exchanged and their respective values:

It is true, taking our total export and import trade in wood and wood products, with all the wood-producing countries of the world with which we have exchanges, the balance for the year 1887 is largely in our favor, as our total imports of these products for that year was, in cubic feet, 87,796,860, and in value $13,341,609, while the total of our exports for the same year was, in cubic feet, 120,749,725, and in value $28,842,881, making a balance in cubic feet in our favor of 32,952,865 and in value of $15,501,272.

It may be a matter of public interest to know the precise articles and amount and value of each product that constitute these exchanges respectively, and also those articles of our imports of these productions on which duty is paid, and they will appear from the following tables for the two years, respectively, of 1886 and 1887:

While, therefore, the general balance is in our favor, should there be such balances of trade against us in respect of our exchanges with Canada, when our forests are comparatively unlimited, and when we have milling establishments in which are invested hundreds of millions of dollars, with a capacity of turning out 200,000,000 feet board measure of lumber daily?

As showing the number and capacity of the saw-mills and shingle-mills of this country, attention is attracted to the following table found in the annual report for 1887 of the division of forestry, Agricultural Department. This table may or may not be entirely accurate, but probably is not very much out of the way:

Again, the value of all imports from Canada into the United States for the year 1887 of wood and wood products, both dutiable and free, was $13,341,609. Besides, it is a fact that Canada protects herself by tariff legislation by imposing higher import duties than those imposed by the United States on forest products. She has an import duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem, which is on a general average about 10 per cent. higher than our present duty, as it is on an average only about 15 per cent. when reduced to ad valorem. But not only so, instead of giving us free lumber from her extensive forests, she has put an export duty on her products, not confining it by any means to such articles as are subject to duty under our laws, but including also logs, shingles, and stave-bolts, which are by us admitted free of duty.

If, therefore, Mr. President, I could be convinced that free lumber would not have the effect I have indicated of destroying, not only our great lumber industry, upon which a million laboring men depend for their daily bread, and the other many important industries depending on this, and would bring cheaper lumber to the consumer, or if I believed, as many honestly do believe, that the farmers of the land, the tillers of the soil, the producers of wheat, and corn, and barley, and vegetables, and fruits, and butter, and cheese, were to be benefited by placing lumber on the free-list, then I would hail with joy the day of free trade in lumber, and would gladly co-operate with those who formulated and passed the House bill; but conscientiously holding to the views I have just indicated, I must, in what I conceive to be the true interests, not merely of the manufacturer and consumer of lumber, but of the farmer and laboring man as well—believing the maintenance of these great industries tends directly to foster and build up a great diversity of other important industries, and thus to create home markets for the surplus products of the farmer, a ready and convenient market for the merchant, and home employment at good wages for the artisan and the common laborer as well—protest at present and until the conditions shall seem to me to be changed against free trade in lumber. And holding to these views I am gratified in the assurance that the Senate substitute for the House bill will take direct issue with the latter on the lumber question, and the existing duties on lumber will be retained.

As bearing upon this general subject I submit the following communication, received by me in December last; also a copy of the petition referred to:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 6, 1887.

SIR: By to-day's mail is forwarded to your address a petition asking that the present tariff on lumber remain unchanged; and by authority of the many signers to it, we are authorized to further address you on the subject.

The signers earnestly request that you will not allow yourselves to be deceived by representations made by owners of timber lands in Canada, in order to belittle the magnitude of the interests at stake.

We have in California, Washington Territory, and Oregon one hundred and ninety saw-mills, employing 35,000 men, without counting the crews of over two hundred vessels engaged in freighting lumber. Are not these men, who are contented in the receipt of good wages, interested in the protection of the industry to which they owe their livelihood? Are not the farmers who furnish the supplies for all these men and mills also interested in the protection of this industry?

If lumber is placed on the free-list, it will at once and most unfavorably affect the prosperity of this coast, and by just so much increase that of British Columbia, where timber lands are given to mills at the rate of 20 cents per acre, and which are now more accessible to water, and where labor is cheaper, owing to the large employment of Chinese.

In fact, many of our mill-men would in such case at once move their "plant" across the border to avail themselves of better facilities of manufacture.

The duty now imposed on lumber is low indeed in comparison with that which protects iron, woolen goods, and other manufuctured articles, and its repeal is asked by no class or interest on this coast.

The argument for abrogation of the duty, because only a certain part of our people are directly protected, is entirely applicable to any other industry asking the protection of a tariff.

A protective tariff is demanded as a whole because it protects so many industries that all combined include, as it were, the nation itself.

One thing is certain, if the duty on lumber is taken off all citizens in the trade on this coast, employers and employés, will demand in justice that the duty on iron, cordage, sugar, and other things making up the cost of lumber be also repealed in order that, if the lumber interest is to be placed in full and open competition with mills in Canada, the conditions of cost and manufacture may also be equalized.

In conclusion, a statesman, looking beyond the mere interests of the hour, would shape our policy and legislation so as to give us a continuous shore-line from Mexico to Behring's Straits, and thus connect our immense outlying territory of Alaska with the rest of the Republic.

You can judge if such a policy would be furthered by throwing open to British Columbia our home markets, without asking her people to bear any of our burden of tariff or taxation.

The sentiment and desire of annexation to the United States, known to exist and to be on the increase in that province, would quickly disappear, and with reason, were we to pursue this latter course.

Yours, truly,

A. D. MOORE,
W. J. ADAMS,
Committee.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

[Copy of a petition, the original of which has been sent to the Pacific coast Congressional delegation, Washington, D. C.]

To the honorable the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to the Congress of the United States from the Pacific States and Territories:

The signers hereto are citizens of the State of California engaged in the manufacture of lumber in said State, the State of Oregon, and Washington Territory (an industry that, having experienced the vicissitudes inseparable from pioneer operations, is now becoming the most important on this coast), and viewing with extreme apprehension the current efforts made in other sections to abrogate the existing "tariff" on lumber, beg most earnestly to solicit your votes, your influence, and your every action to oppose any disturbance of the present import duty on said commodity. In support of such solicitation the following presentation of reasons for the maintenance of such duty, so far as the Pacific coast section is concerned, is most respectfully made; reasons so manifest and weighty as to remove the entire question from the domain of party politics, and this appeal is made regardless of the party affiliations of your petitioners.

First. In proportion to population the State of California has yearly added more to the customs revenues of the General Government than any State in the Union, New York alone excepted; its manufactures have been few, and since its settlement and continuing until the present time it has been a large consumer of the protected products of the older States. and now, when its own infant industries are struggling to their feet, it demands for them, as a right, the same fostering care at the hands of the Government that has brought those of other sections to full growth.

Second. The forest growths of this State, Oregon, and Washington Territory, the smallest fraction of which has only been touched by the ax, offer to generations to come the fullest supply of their most lavish needs of lumber and without the supplement of the extensive virgin tracts of Alaska. There is not, and can not be, any justification on the score of scarcity or monopoly in offering to adjacent British Columbia the trade this coast is abundantly able to supply.

Prices of this product have been for years, and are now, low, compared with those ruling in other parts of the United States, and despite the higher cost of labor here must remain low by reason of local competition.

The recent phenomenal growth of this coast has stimulated additional investments in the manufacture of lumber, and consequently increased competition, and with such further lowering of margin of profit that any attempt at meeting the foreign product of cheap labor would be futile.

Third. Vigorous, manly labor is required for and stimulated by the prosecution of the lumber industry; mechanical trades find employment in the construction and repair of its "plants;" the needs for transportation of this product on land stirs to progress that great "civilizer," the railroad, and by sea bids fair to save to our country the fast dying industry of ship-building, once its pride, and restore to it on this timbered coast the lost "American merchant marine."

Admit to our State free of duty the lumber of British Columbia, produced by "Chinese labor," from exhaustless forests donated to its mills by a willing Government, and all these industries will be throttled to their death; hosts of laboring men from mills and woods will be idle; skilled trades will lack employment; our ships will rot at decaying wharves, for the carrying trade of the principal product that now keeps our flag afloat will inevitably be by foreign bottoms if the production of their cargoes be in foreign hands; vast milling plants will be made valueless, and the capacity of our forest growths to add to the national wealth dwindle into insignificance.

Fourth. The timber lands of this coast, both red-wood and pine, are reproductive, and like those of Norway, when denuded, are soon recovered with a new and rapid growth of the parent species; this power itself were a sufficient heritage for posterity, did the fear of obliteration of standing supply within the limits of following generations have any force; but with practically inexhaustible present and prospective forest wealth, is it meet that a Government deemed paternal should ignore its existence and give to alien lands and alien labor the trade its own people might and should derive from such possessions? Better would it be for this nation's good and gain that the alleged lumberless denizens of the fractional fringe of its northern border should appease their cravings from the vast timber tracts of the south and southwest for a brief time, or until the infant lumber industries of this coast attain a fuller growth, and by decreased cost of production and increased means of transportion with coincident reduction of "rates" be able to lay at their doors at seductive prices the superior products of this unlimited lumber region.

Finally, from a sectional standpoint, in the interests of the capital invested in the lumber business of the Pacific Slope, the large number of workmen engaged therein in woods and mills, on sea and land, the collateral industries dependent thereupon, and stimulated by its continuance, and from a national one, that this great item of our country's possessions may continue to augment her wealth in resources, we therefore most respectfully beg of you that your every effort will be used to the end that no change shall be made in the existing duty on manufactured lumber.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

LEAD.

The House or Mills bill, while it does not place lead on the free-list, does that which is equivalent in so far as striking a deadly blow at the silver and lead mining industry of this country. The present rates of duty under existing law and the rates proposed by the Mills bill and the difference between the two will be seen and appreciated by the following table:

Lead.	Present rates of duty.	Rates of duty by Mills bill.
Molten and old refuse lead run into blocks and bars, and old scrap lead fit only to be manufactured	2 cts. per lb.	1¼ cts. per lb.
Ore and dross	1½ cts. per lb.	¾ cts. per lb.
Pigs and bars	2 cts. per lb.	1½ cts. per lb.
Sheets, pipes, and shot	3 cts. per lb.	2½ cts. per lb.
Manufactures not specially enumerated or provided for	45 per cent.	40 per cent.

It requires no argument to convince the intelligent that such a policy would strike an almost fatal blow to the silver and lead mining industries of this country, and this in the great Pacific Northwest is one that adds much of the life-blood that goes to swell the business arteries and promote general prosperity in that region. Without adverting to the enormous silver and lead industries of Colorado, Utah, Montana, Dakota, Wyoming, and other silver and lead producing sections lying along the base of either side of the Rocky Mountains, and of the millions of capital invested therein, and of the employment at fair wages this great industry gives to thousands of the laboring people of this country, men and women, it may be said the silver and lead mining industry in the Pacific Northwest—Oregon, Idaho, and Washington—is, although of immense importance prospectively, comparatively in its infancy.

Millions of dollars have been recently invested in that section of our country in prospecting and developing mines, in bringing in and placing machinery, and a new mining era is about to dawn upon our country in that direction that will develop untold millions of wealth in the near future, if the industry is not strangled or obstructed by legislations, not only from that industry alone, but from various others that will be fostered by it. The greater portion of the mines in the far West are what are known as low-grade silver-lead mines. So long, therefore, as the price of lead is not brought lower than it now is by importation from England, Germany, Spain, Mexico, the Central American states, and other lead-producing countries, lead and silver mining, and they go together, can be carried on with a fair profit and with magnificent results in the general development of the country and in the promotion and advancement of the material interests of the whole people. Flood this country, however, with the cheaply-produced lead of foreign countries, and a staggering blow, one from which it may not hope soon to recover, is struck at the great silver and lead mining industries of this country, especially in the Pacific Northwest, where transportation rates are exceedingly high. Now why should this be done? As a means of reducing the revenue and bringing down the surplus it amounts to nothing. Even according to the estimate of the Mills bill the reduction in duties on lead proposed by that bill would only reduce the revenue to the amount of $6,000 annually. As a matter of fact, however, this proposed reduction in the duties on lead would unquestionably increase the revenues, as it would vastly increase the importations.

Our importations of lead in 1887 were less than one-twelfth in pounds than in 1870. In the latter year the importations were 85,897,720 pounds, while in 1887 the importations of lead upon which duty was paid were only 12,016,694 pounds. The price of lead has been reduced nearly $2 per 100 pounds, the price in 1870 being $6.30 and last year only $4.50 per 100 pounds, so there is no room for complaint on the part of the consumer. Reduce the present duty as proposed by the Mills bill so as to enable the foreign importer to bring in his lead at a profit, and we may expect as a natural result there will be a vast increase in the importations. In that event this industry, which has in the past fifteen years increased over 400 per cent.—the value of the lead production in 1872 being only about $3,000,000, while in 1887 it was $14,463,000, estimated at $90 per short ton—would cease to expand and would at once retrograde.

This industry has been, and will continue to be, if not throttled by applying to it the doctrine of free trade, or a tariff for revenue only, which is the same thing in substance and effect, one of the most powerful and influential agencies extant in developing the vast areas of the almost inaccessible portions of our public domain, and in tapping and penetrating the mountains of the Pacific Northwest with shafts and tunnels from which flow streams of wealth which increase the business of transportation to the common carrier, furnish a ready and inviting home market for the surplus products of the farmer, which presents favorable facilities for the employment of labor at fair wages, while trade and commerce generally are stimulated, new and varied industries called into existence in every city, town, and hamlet, and the prosperity of the people generally promoted.

The truth is, there should be no importations of lead permitted into this country. The tariff should, in my judgment, be a prohibitory one. The average wages paid lead miners in Spain are less that 50 cents a day, those in England and Germany do not average 40 cents a day, while those of the United States average about eight times the latter amount, or from $3 to $3.50 per day, while the freight rates from Europe to New York are only about one-fifth on an average of the transportation rates from Colorado, Montana, Utah, Idaho, Washington Territory, and Oregon to the same point. Although there has been a large annual increase in this country and will be in the future in the consumption of lead, the increase in our production in the past few years justifies the statement that with reasonable protection we will not only be able to supply our home demand for lead and its products, including the chemical products from lead, such as white lead, carbonate of lead, oxide of lead (litharge), red lead, orange mineral, sugar of lead, nitrole of lead, etc., but should become an exporter to foreign countries to a large extent.

Fifty years ago there were not 2,000 tons of lead produced in the United States. Sixteen years ago our product was only 25,800 tons. In the eight years succeeding 1872 the increase in our lead productions nearly quadrupled. In 1872 it was 25,800 tons; in 1880 it reached 97,800 tons, while in 1886 it was 135,000 tons, and in 1887 160,700 tons. In 1887 the home consumption of lead was about 164,000 tons, a fraction perhaps, or only about 3,300 tons, less than our total product for the same year. If this industry, therefore, is not affected by this proposed adverse legislation as set out in the House bill, there is no reason why the United States should not only be able to meet the home demand at fair and reasonable rates to the consumer, and in fact at largely reduced rates over those prevailing a few years since, but, like our wheat and cotton growers, supply a portion of the demand from non-lead-producing countries.

The Senate substitute for the Mills bill will, I am confident, not only not reduce the tariff on lead below the rates prevailing under existing law, but it will correct an evil and gross injustice caused by a ruling of the Treasury Department to the effect that imported silver-lead ore if it is more valuable in silver than in lead shall come in free—this notwithstanding the fact that all lead ore is by existing law made dutiable. Under this construction of the law, the soundness of which may be seriously doubted, thousands of tons of lead are coming in annually from Mexico and other lead-producing countries free of duty. This practice will be longer impossible under such a substitute as it is believed will be reported by our Committee on Finance should it become a law.

Mr. David T. Day, chief of mining statistics and technology, in his summary of report for 1887, in speaking with reference to this matter says:

> The heavy increase of "desilverized" lead from 114,829 short tons in 1886 to 135,552 in 1887 was probably due to the importation of Mexican lead-silver ores. The large product of non-argentiferous lead of 25,148 short tons is due chiefly to the development of the St. Jo district in Missouri. The production of white lead and the silver oxides from pig-lead increased to a total of about 75,000 short tons.

This statistician in speaking of our present lead production, that of the year 1887, says:

> The production of lead was 160,700 short tons, valued at $14,463,000, at $90 per short ton.

Hon. B. Goldsmith, late chairman of the Democratic State central committee of the State of Oregon, correctly and intelligently voiced the sentiment of the people of the Pacific Northwest, irrespective of party, in opposition to the proposition of the Mills bill to reduce the tariff on lead, in a speech made by him last spring before the Portland (Oregon) Board of Trade, and while he was still chairman of the Democratic committee, in which he is reported as follows:

> Mr. B. Goldsmith said that foreign countries should not be allowed to drive American lead from the markets of the world. The main lead producing countries of Europe are Spain, England, and Germany. The duty is 2 cents per pound. The price of lead in New York is about 4½ cents per pound. Lead miners in Europe earn on an averave 40 cents a day. The freight from Europe to New York is $3 to $5 a ton. Lead miners in America earn $3 to $3.50 per day. Freight on base bullion and lead from Idaho, Montana, and Colorado is $15 to $18 a ton. It would be destruction to the mining interests of the North Pacific coast if the duty on lead is repealed. Such an act would close three-fourths of the mines now operated. It would throw out of employment thousands of men directly engaged in the mining industry and thousands indirectly interested.
> Mr. Goldsmith moved that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the question and report to the board a memorial to Congress asking that the duty on lead be not repealed.

General Kapus, a prominent German citizen of Portland, and at present an elector on the Republican Presidential ticket in Oregon, is at the same meeting reported as follows:

> Mr. William Kapus heartily favored the motion. He was a protectionist. He wanted not only to protect the mining industries of the country, but the great lumber and the wool interests of the State. The free-traders were making an especial fight on wool. Mr. Kapus moved an amendment to include wool and lumber in the investigation by the committee.
> The motion as amended prevailed, and Messrs. Goldsmith, Kapus, and Cameron were appointed as such committee.

THE FARMER.

It is customary in free-trade circles to proclaim that the farmer—the grower of wheat, oats, barley, and other cereals, the producer of cattle, horses, hogs, dairy products, hops, vegetables, sheep, and especialy the producer of wheat—is injured by a protective tariff; or, in other words, that while existing laws extend protection to the manufacturer, no such protection is guarantied the farmer. It is a common thing to declaim that the interests of the farmer and the consumer are sacrificed to those of the manufacturer, and that the interests of the former are subordinated to those of the latter. Never was a more stupendous fallacy uttered. On the direct contrary, it may be asserted without fear of successful contradiction that no class of people in this country, all things considered, are any more interested in the maintenance of the protective principle, as applied in the United States, than are the farmers.

This is capable of absolute demonstration; the history of the past in this country attests the fact. All will agree that whatever tends to increase home demand or a home market for wheat or any other farm product tends directly to benefit the farmer. If our population and home industries were suddenly doubled the home consumption of wheat would necessarily be largely increased, if not doubled; the establishment of a great variety of industries, giving employment to millions of men, tends directly to increase the home market and to induce better prices; and while the employé may be compelled to pay an increased price for a barrel of flour, he is by reason of steady and profitable employment at good wages better able to purchase a barrel of flour for himself at a fair price to the farmer and producer than in the absence of manufactures and other industrial enterprises, and consequently lack of employment, or if employed, at low wages, he would be to purchase a single bag, though flour could be had at cheaper rates.

John C. Calhoun, in the early days of the Republic and before he became a convert to the heresy of free trade, in a speech then made by him, correctly stated the question as to the effect on the farmer in securing him a good market and a ready and cheap supply of those articles he is compelled to purchase by a policy that would foster our manufacturing industry. He said:

> When our manufactures are grown to a certain proportion, as they will under the fostering care of the Government, the farmer will find a ready market for his surplus produce, and what is of equal consequence a certain and cheap supply for all his wants.

This sentence from the lips of John C. Calhoun is a perfect answer in and of itself to the charge so often and glibly repeated to the effect that the farmer is not benefited by the policy of protection. Calhoun saw the cotton and cotton fabrics of South Carolina brought into ruinous competition with those of India, where 4 pence bought a pound of cotton, and the weaver's wages did not exceed 4 pence a day; and hence it was that he while a member of the national House of Representatives boldly and ably advocated a protective tariff on imported cotton and cotton fabrics equal to 75 per cent. of the cost of production at that time in India. But did time warrant, arguments both innumerable and convincing might be produced.

But the farmers of this country are not only interested in creating and building up a home market for their wheat and other products; they are also interested in keeping out of this country, out of that home market, so far as possible, the cheaply produced agricultural products of foreign countries which, under free trade, would to a very large extent flood this country in ruinous competition with our farm products. In that respect the interests of the farmer are, under our present tariff laws, in the main, and by the Senate substitute, will, I have no doubt, be still more, carefully guarded and protected. And notwithstanding the present duties imposed on foreign agricultural products, there were of these brought into the United States last year to the extent in value of nearly $150,000,000; of this amount were breadstuffs, including wheat, flour, rye, oats, and barley—10,355,594 bushels of the latter—to the aggregate value of $6,640,228; fruits—and the most of which we can raise here in abundance—including figs, to the value of $500,000; lemons, to the value of $3,835,147; oranges, to the value of $2,408,140, and prunes to the value of $2,999,645, making an aggregate in value of fruits imported of $15,840,827; hops, to the value of $3,404,000; animals, including sheep, to the value of $1,187,847; horses to the value of $3,464,303, and cattle to the value of $1,085,000, aggregating in value $5,737,150; raw wool of the value of $16,424,479; vegetables, including beans, pease, potatoes, pickles, and other articles, of the value of $7,333,749; dairy products, butter, cheese, and milk, of the value of $1,806,239; flax, hemp, jute, and sisal grass, of the value of $12,312 833. Suppose there had been no duties on any of these products; can any one doubt that the importations, instead of being but $149,254,784, would have reached many times that amount, and all of which would have come in direct competition in our home markets with the produce of the farm?

The Mills bill proposes to place most of these on the free-list, and it must not be forgotten that most of these agricultural products thus placed on the free-list by the House bill are produced in abundance and very cheaply just across our northern boundary line, at our very door, in the Canadian provinces. Even under existing duties Canada sent into the United States in 1887, and sold in our markets in competition with our farm products, Canadian agricultural products of the aggregate value of about $18,000,000. Included in that list we find in the reports of the Bureau of Statistics 10,331,895 bushels of barley, of the value of $6,170,660; 59,653 head of cattle, of the value of $1,086,645; 25,525 head of horses, of the value of $3,430,594; 450,175 head of sheep, of the value of $1,215,437; 13,682,914 dozens of eggs, valued at $1,930,844; 1,228,406 bushels of potatoes, valued at $339,163; and 1,610,123 pounds of wool, of the value of $357,142.

Nor is the farmer in any portion of the United States more interested in the protective policy than are those residing in the Pacific States and Territories. It is to the protective policy we must look for the establishment and building up of manufacturing industries in that section of the country. Who does not know that every factory in whatever industry erected in Oregon, or California, or Washington, or Idaho is a direct benefit to the farmer? Suppose the magnificent water-power of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho were utilized to its full capacity; suppose ten thousand wheels were set in motion in the utilization by mechanical processes in working up in manufactures our home products of wood, iron, lead, wool, fruits, and other products, converting our timber into every variety of farm implements, our iron mines into bars of iron and steel and foundry products of every description, our wool into blankets, clothing, and hosiery, and other articles into the manufacture of which wool enters, our fruits into brandies and wines and jellies, our hides into leather, our flax into linen and bags and rope. In that event would not only the interest of every farmer in that section, but every laboring man, artisan, merchant, and every other class be immensely benefited? Would not the consumer, moreover, be benefited in being able to secure all these necessaries of life free from the tremendous tax he is now compelled to pay on each and all of these in the shape of transportation charges across the continent? And would not such a state of things retain among our own people millions of dollars that are annually sent from the Pacific coast to the East and Europe to pay for those articles of home use, every one of which should be manufactured at home? And it is toward such a consummation a protective policy, with an economic force that is invincible and grand, directly tends, while to open our doors by the key to free trade which England places in our hands would tend directly and with an irresistible force in a directly opposite direction and toward the prevention of such a consummation. The farmers of this country can not depend with any degree of certainty on a foreign market for their wheat.

The great increase in the production of wheat in India and Russia, especially the former, where the labor of the Indian farmer's ryots can be had at from 6 to 10 cents a head, and wheat can be put down in London and Liverpool at a clear profit at from 65 to 70 cents a bushel, is gradually crowding out American wheat from European markets. While for the year ending June 30, 1887, our total exports of wheat were but 101,971,949 bushels, India alone for the year ending March 31, 1887—substantially the same period—exported 41,558,250 bushels of wheat, while Russia during the twelve months ending July 1, 1888, exported 113,000,000 bushels, or 9,000,000 bushels more than she ever exported in any one year before, which was in 1878, when her exports were 104,000,000. In occasional years like the present perhaps, where there has been a great falling off of crops in other wheat-growing countries, there may be a liberal demand abroad and at fair prices for our surplus wheat, but this all must agree is exceptional, accidental, and not stable, and consequently it is to the building up of a great diversity of industrial pursuits at home, thus reducing in a measure the number of our farmers, multiplying the various industries of the country, and extending them into every State and Territory of the Union, and thus creating a permanent home demand for our surplus wheat, that our farmers must direct their attention.

The present advance in the price of wheat in this country is purely the result of accidental, unusual, and abnormal conditions in the Old World, such as grasshoppers in Algiers and storms and other climatic causes in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, and Hungary. France, generally a large exporter of wheat, will, it is said, be an importer the present year of from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels. But while the failure in these European countries will bring down this year the aggregate foreign product, thus giving us temporarily better prices for our American wheat, it must not be forgotten that the acreage, number of bushels, and quality of wheat are all vastly increased even this year in both Russia and India. The increase in Russia over that of 1887 is estimated at nearly 50,000,000 bushels, and in India about 23,000,000 bushels over that of last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from Oregon, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a short time. I shall move to open the doors again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; insisted upon its amendments to the one hundred and nineteenth amendment of the Senate; still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 105, 106, 107, 110, 118, 121, 127, 128, 221, 222, 223, 233, 234, 236, 238, 239, 240, 242, 243, 244, 248, 254, 255, 256, and 257; and asked a futher conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after fifty-three minutes spent therein the doors were reopened.

PURCHASE OF SEEDS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire and report upon the advisability of suspending the purchase by the Commissioner of Agriculture of seed for distribution by members of Congress and Senators.

JAMES ALBERT BONSACK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. DANIEL. By the consent of the Senator from Oregon, I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 593) for the relief of James Albert Bonsack.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that. I want to be heard about twenty-four hours on that bill when it comes up. I have some statistics and data that I think will consume at least that much of the time of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Of course I withdraw the request.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives; which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 20, 1888.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its amendments to the one hundred and nineteenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and still further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill numbered as follows: 105, 106, 107, 110, 118, 121, 127, 128, 221, 222, 223, 233, 234, 236, 238, 239, 240, 242, 243, 244, 248, 254, 255, 256, and 257, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN be the managers of the further conference on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its prior action, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to give notice that on Monday morning, immediately at the conclusion of the formal morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3504, Order of Business 2189, being a bill to restore certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to settlement. I shall ask the Senate then to indulge me in the time necessary to make some remarks upon the bill, and upon the general subject of land grants, land-grant forfeitures, and the land system of the country generally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon what day?

Mr. PLUMB. On Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what hour?

Mr. PLUMB. Immediately at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to suggest, in regard to the bill just referred to by the Senator from Kansas, that if there is no other business before the Senate more important he modify his notice so as to take up the bill for consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. That is what I said. I should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, and I shall ask the Senate then to indulge me while I make some remarks, my purpose being that the bill, so far as I have any control over the action of the Senate, shall be pressed to its passage.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election, and if no Senator at that time desires to speak on the same, I shall ask unanimous consent that an hour may be fixed for taking the vote upon its passage.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance, on which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has the floor.

TRUSTS.

Mr. MITCHELL. But advocacy of a protective tariff on lumber, or wool, or wheat, or fruit, or hops, or lead, or vegetables, or barley, or oats, or any other of our great industries, must not be confounded or in any manner construed into an advocacy of trusts. The protective principle prudently and properly applied to any industry, so far from giving aid and comfort to those engaged in promoting or perpetuating trusts, has precisely the contrary effect. The fewer associations of persons or combinations of capital there are engaged in any great industry, the easier it is, as must be apparent to all, to create a trust in respect of such industry, and thus control the market and increase the price of the article produced to be paid by the consumer.

If there were but three or four persons or firms or corporations engaged in manufacturing lumber in the United States, how easy a matter would it be for them to create a trust and run up the price of lumber to an extortionate figure, and so with iron, coal, petroleum, lead, cordwood, grain, or any other great industry. Now, the effect of a protective tariff, as conclusively shown in all the past history of this and other protective countries, is not only to lead to a great diversity of industrial pursuits, to a multiplication of business industries, but also to a great diversity of capital, or rather the investment by a great number of capitalists in the same industry, while the effect of free trade is to crush out all small concerns, compel capital to flee to other pursuits not affected by competition from abroad that free trade invites, thus leaving but few engaged in the business, who in turn will readily enter into great trust combinations not only with themselves, but with the importer of the same product, and thus practice an imposition on the consumer.

A protective tariff, therefore, is the friend of the people as against trusts and every other kind of monopoly. Trusts, moreover, in my judgment, so far from receiving encouragement in legislation, should be held in check, and their acts subordinated to the true interests of the people to the full extent to which Congress may constitutionally go in the premises; further than this will receive the advocacy of none. And in this connection I must not be understood as implying that the Congress has not the constitutional power to control these enormous combinations of capital in the interest of the people, especially and particularly where they affect interstate-commerce or enter into it, because I believe it has. I can not believe that the legislative power of a great nation, whose fundamental law was ordained by the people of the United States for the great purpose, among others, of promoting the general welfare, and which by the express authority of that fundamental charter is endowed with plenary power, not only to "establish justice," and "promote the general welfare," but also "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States," is in any respect deficient in power to enact such legislation as will protect the sixty-four million of its people against an injurious conspiracy and combination of the other one million of our population to rob them. So much for trusts.

THE SURPLUS.

It may be conceded that an abnormal surplus in the United States Treasury is in some respects fraught with danger as tending to improvident legislation in the matter of appropriations. But after all a plethoric purse is better than an empty one; a full, or even overflowing treasury is, if an evil at all, a lesser one than a depleted one. An expected annual surplus of $55,000,000, and I shall endeavor to show later on that we are quite as likely to have an annual deficiency as an annual surplus, is not so objectionable, it seems to me, in any possible point of view as an expected annual deficiency of like amount. Especially must this be so in a great Government like ours, the annual ordinary expenses of which, and not including "permanent appropriations," reaches the enormous sum of $306,000,000, and including "permanent appropriations," $421,000,000, and that is the estimate of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this body for the ensuing fiscal year; and the sum total of which only falls about $19,000,000 short of the estimated revenues for the same fiscal year.

That estimate, let it be borne in mind, is $440,000,000. It must not be forgotten, moreover, that the appropriations for the present fiscal year, if they reach $306,392,296, as estimated by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, then they will exceed appropriations made for the same purpose the last fiscal year by nearly $58,000,000, while the sum total of appropriations for the last four years of Republican administration is less by $95,000,000 than that appropriated for the four years of President Cleveland's administration. But not only so; were the nation free from debt, were the taxpayers of the country released from the payment of millions annually in the shape of interest on outstanding bonds, or if in debt largely as we are, were there no means of stopping this immense annual interest and thus reducing this enormous debt, then there would be more elements of real danger in the constant alarm that is being sounded over an overburdened Treasury. But this, as we all know, is not so.

We are a debtor nation to the tune of $1,200,000,000, upon which the tax-payers of this country are paying into the pockets of the bondholders annually interest to the amount of $46,000,000, to say nothing of the millions of non-interest-bearing debt. Suppose it is true, as alleged by one official of the Treasury Department, that there is now a surplus of $106,000,000, or, as averred by another, of $130,000,000, in the United States Treasury and the Government is in debt over ten times that amount, as it is, how can it be properly said we have more money than we know what to do with or that there is dangerous surplus? Would it not be infinitely better to do as an individual would be expected to do under like circumstances; that is, pay our debts, discharge our obligations, and stop the payment of nearly one-half a hundred million of dollars of interest annually? But not only so. Although thus heavily bowed down by national indebtedness, the result of a war into whose consuming flames fell sacrificial offerings not only of life and property but of the choicest jewels of love, affection, kindred ties, and hallowed associations that ever clustered around the human heart or beatified the human soul, and whose value can never be measured—notwithstanding all this, there is, as we all know, conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by existing law the present, ever-continuing, never-ceasing power to call in, purchase, and pay for out of this surplus any part of this debt, thus not only releasing the country from debt, the tax-payer from the payment of interest, but thus distributing the surplus in the Treasury back to its original source among the people.

WHY NOT ESTABLISH COAST DEFENSES, RECONSTRUCT OUR NAVY, REHABILITATE OUR MERCHANT MARINE, AND IMPROVE OUR RIVERS AND HARBORS?

But aside from all this, if the vaults of our national Treasury are full to overflow, as alleged, if they are suffering from a plethora that indicates danger, are not there subjects of national development and national defense to which a portion at least of the present excess in the Treasury and of the alleged expected annual surplus of over $50,000,000 could be properly and legitimately applied, and which could in no sense be regarded as speculative or in any degree improvident, and which would tend to strengthen, advance, elevate, and adorn our nationality and promote our prosperity; that would develop our country's resources, increase its commercial prestige and power; that would augment our national importance, and add vigor, energy, vitality, and power to our national existence, and impress upon the governmental mind of the nations of the earth the real greatness, invincibility, grandeur, and power, not only of our country territorially and commercially considered, but as a nation, quickened with the inspirations of patriotism, imbued with the spirit of progress, and guided and impelled onward and upward by the genius of a civilization transcendent in character, second to none, but superior to all the governments of earth upon which the stars ever shone, of either ancient or mordern times?

It is universally conceded that our coasts are, on sea and lake and sound and gulf, comparatively unfortified, and in a shamefully defenseless condition. It is not denied that even New York City, the great metropolis of the nation, with its untold millions of property, could, and in all probability would, in the event of war, with any, even a third-rate, naval power, be placed under contribution and its inhabitants forced to the alternative of the payment of millions of tribute or having a still greater number of millions of dollars' worth of its property sacrificed, to say nothing of human life. And so with Chicago on the Lakes, with New Orleans on the Gulf, with San Francisco on the bay—so with every city, town, and hamlet on the Pacific coast and on the adjacent and communicating waters of the Pacific Ocean.

Indeed I am impressed with the belief that possibly the best thing for the future of this nation and for the approaching millions now emerging from the "gray dawn of coming years," and who shall soon fill our places in the succeeding generations, would be, that the mailed hand of an unfriendly naval power should to-day, or to-morrow, or within the coming year be laid upon the princely palaces, the towering steeples, the myriad money receptacles, and, if you please, the ten thousand happy homes of the greatest city on the continent, and that her people should be brought to a realizing sense of our insecurity. The bombardment or the placing under contribution by a hostile fleet of the chief city of America in the closing years of the nineteenth century may be necessary to avert a still greater national catastrophe and national humiliation, and result in the preservation not only of that great city, but of many other great cities and untold millions of the nation's wealth in the beginning of the twentieth century. The misfortunes of the near future may be necessary to dispel the drowsiness, arrest the attention, and provoke wise, immediate, energetic action upon the part of the people and the people's representatives, and thus facilitate the preservation of the general welfare and contribute to the general defense.

Why, then, let us inquire in the name of an intelligent patriotism worthy of the men whose present duty it is to dictate the policy, shape the legislation, and direct the destiny of this great nation, should we hesitate now in times of peace and of a full Treasury to take immediate, energetic, progressive steps in the direction of the fortification of this country, and the establishment of such a system of coast defenses as will bring to the people of the cities, towns, and hamlets that lie upon our now unprotected coasts a sense of security, that will inspire confidence in our people at home and demand respect abroad? Why not properly apply a portion of this surplus in building our Navy, in re-establishing our merchant marine, in the construction of armored ships, and in the manufacture of modern guns; in placing our country generally in a condition of proper defense? Why not improve our great rivers and harbors, open up the magnificent water ways of our country, cleanse and place in condition for practical use our great transportation routes to the seaboard, make room for the ships of commerce, establish means of successful competition with the railways of the country by making free and uninterrupted the great natural highways of the land? Why not while making all necessary and proper reduction in the revenue, while equalizing our system of taxation, while correcting evils (and there are many) in the existing revenue laws of the country—why not, while doing all these things, move also in the directions I have just intimated in an intelligent, statesmanlike, patriotic manner; and in this way properly, wisely, but not improvidently, foolishly, wastefully, or extravagantly, utilize at least large portions of the surplus in national development and defense, and thus give employment also to hundreds and thousands of laboring men and women throughout the land? Why not do this rather than attempt a reduction of the surplus by standing in with English free-traders, with European and Asiatic free labor, adopting English theories and English practices, and conforming to English desires and English interests, by placing so many of the great products of our country upon the free-list, as has been done by the Mills or House bill; thus striking a deadly blow at American industries and American labor and dragging down the wage-rates of this country to the level of the ruinously degrading prices received by Belgian, German, English, Chinese, and other European and Asiatic laborers.

But in view of the appropriations already made at this session of Congress, and of others likely to be made, and considerable amounts of which are for the purposes and to be applied in the direction just suggested, and of the further significant fact of the largely increased amount of the ordinary annual expenditures of the Government over those of former years, the great fact is beginning to dawn upon the country and can not be overlooked or obscured by the President and his party that the surplus now in the Treasury is not likely to increase much in the near future. Indeed, all the present indications point most decidedly in the other direction, namely, to a deficiency. The statement recently made in the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and which was not denied by any one on that committee, as I remember, was to the effect, as I stated a moment ago, that the total appropriations for the current fiscal year, not including what are known as "permanent appropriations," would amount to $306,000,000, and including "permanent appropriations," they would amount to $420,000,000, and that the estimated revenue for the present fiscal year would be $440,000,000, or only about $19,000,000 more than the expenditures.

Now, if this be so, and there can be no reasonable doubt of it, except, perhaps, in this, that the appropriations may exceed the estimate made by the chairman of the committee, what would be the result of the surplus provided, first, that the Mills or House bill should become a law, and second, provided, furthermore, it would, if it became a law, have the effect its authors and friends claimed for it of reducing the revenue $70,000,000 annually? Simply this, that instead of a surplus of revenue over expenditures for the present fiscal year of even $19,000,000, as there would be under the laws as they now stand, there would be a deficiency of $51,000,000. While again, if the Mills bill, as originally reported to the House by Mr. MILLS from the Committee on Ways and Means had been enacted into law without amendment and the Secretary of the Treasury made no mistake in his estimate that it would reduce the annual revenue $78,176,054.02, so far from their being a surplus then there would be a deficiency for the present fiscal year of more than $59,000,000.

BALANCE OF TRADE NOW AGAINST US.

Again, the balance of trade is now against us. Never, Mr. President, were the times less propitious for launching upon the country a species of tariff legislation that will tend to increase our tariff importations than now. A critical survey of our import and export trade for the past fiscal year will clearly indicate that a condition confronts us in the shape of not only largely increased and abnormal importations, but also of a balance of trade largely against us, that is as potent, or should be at least, in justifying alarm as is the alleged enormous surplus in the Treasury. Never but once before in the history of this country has the value of importations been so great in the aggregate as the year just closed. The year 1882 is the only exception, and without any exception were the imports the largest in volume, low prices being taken into account, that ever entered our ports in a single year.

And here again the question of undervaluations is not considered; and it must be remembered that it was recently stated upon this floor by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, than whom no Senator is more thoroughly conversant with the subject, that if the report of the Subcommittee on Finance on undervaluations, of which the honorable Senators ALLISON and BECK are members, was correct, as he had no doubt it was, to the large extent our imports are undervalued, that the amount of the balance of trade against us in the last fiscal year would be actually $100,000,000. But not only so. The balance of trade is largely against us, and increasing now in amount at the rate of $4,000,000 per month, a condition that has not confronted us since the years 1873–'74. The past year the balance against us was nearly $40,000,000. Our importations of merchandise, gold and silver coin and bullion included, amount to $785,217,799, while our exports were but $742,368,822, the exact deficiency being $40,848,977.

To this enormous amount were the consumers of this country compelled to go down into their pockets and hand out solid gold coin the past fiscal year to those foreigners who are taking possession of our markets; and in this alarming condition of affairs in reference to our exterior trade are we to legislate still further in the interest of the foreign manufacturer and importer by placing upon the free-list foreign products on which duties are now collected to the amount of about $20,000,000 annually, and in addition reduce duties on a great variety of other products, which will necessarily swell importations? If we are to do this, then we may confidently look forward to a deficiency in our foreign account and balance against us of over $100,000,000 the present fiscal year, even though the evils of undervaluation may be corrected. Our policy in the interest of a home market, home manufacturers, home producers, home labor, and our home consumers as well, should be the very reverse of this. Our trade for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, showed a balance of $10,703,155 in our favor; our exports of merchandise alone for that year were $703,022,907, while our importations of merchandise were $692,319,768, or $31,545,378 less than for the last fiscal year. It may be interesting to inquire how this enormous aggregate of imports of merchandise alone the past year, not including gold or silver coin or bullion, amounting to $723,865,146 was apportioned. The report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department shows it to have been as follows:

Breadstuffs, mostly barley	$8,755,773
Chemicals, drugs, etc	13,337,943
Cotton manufactures	28,917,660
Earthen and china ware	6,410,612
Flax, hemp, jute, and manufactures of	41,287,248
Fruits and nuts	14,714,142
Glass and glassware	7,851,528
Iron and steel, and manufactures of	48,992,022
Leather, and manufactures of	11,965,125
Silk manufactures	33,350,928
Sugar, molasses, and confectionery	69,494,409
Tobacco and manufactures of	14,303,117
Vegetables, principally beans and potatoes	7,365,233
Wines	7,335,749
Wood, and manufactures of	10,524,839
Wool	15,887,217
Manufactures of wool	47,724,852
Total	723,865,146

The past political history of this country teaches us that it is not entirely safe to become alarmed at a full Treasury, and through fright or any other reason seek, without careful consideration, to cut down revenue or distribute the surplus. Fifty years ago the Government became alarmed at what was supposed to be a rapidly-increasing surplus, and Congress, on the recommendation of President Jackson, distributed it among the States, but scarcely had the act become operative until the tide of our foreign trade set in against us. Our annual surplus was succeeded by an annual deficiency, and Congress was compelled to repeal the act providing for distribution among the States. In 1857 a similar alarm of an increasing and dangerous surplus was sounded throughout the country. President James Buchanan, in his inaugural address of March 4 of that year, said: "Our present condition is without a parallel in history. No nation has ever before been embarrassed from too large a surplus in its Treasury." And yet, as history tells us, and as was suggested by Senator SHERMAN the other day, who was then a member of the lower House of Congress, in less than a year there was not money enough in the Treasury to pay the salaries of members of Congress, and a law was passed providing for the issue of Treasury notes for this purpose. Notwithstanding this declaration of President Buchanan in his inaugural address, in his very first message, in the following December, he referred to the fact that the revenues of the Government had been greatly reduced and the appropriations largely increased, and concluded by saying:

> Under these circumstances a loan may be required before the close of our present session.

And a loan was necessary and was authorized by Congress of $20,000,000, in addition to the issue of $20,000,000 of Treasury notes. And Buchanan, in his second annual message, December 6, 1858, refers to the fact in these words:

> To supply the deficiency Congress, by the act of December 23, 1857, authorized the issuance of $20,000,000 of Treasury notes, and this proving inadequate they authorized, by the act of June 14, 1858, a loan of $20,000,000, to be applied to the payment of appropriations made by law.

The tariff had been remodeled in 1857, in the interest of the South and of free trade, and from that date the business prosperity of the country had gone from bad to worse—the crash came; the step of industry faltered, the progressive mind of the nation wavered, the great vanguard in the grand march of American progress hesitated, the industrial life of the nation became inert and spiritless, and Mr. Buchanan, when December, 1860, came, was compelled, as he stood hesitating and nerveless in the shadow of a great rebellion, beside a Treasury he had helped to wreck, to declare, and he did in his last annual message make this declaration:

> It is now quite apparent that the financial necessities of the Government will require a modification of the tariff during your present session for the purpose of increasing the revenue.

WILL THE MILLS BILL REDUCE THE SURPLUS?

One great purpose ostensibly of the authors and defenders of the Mills or House bill is a reduction of the revenue. To the alleged rapidly increasing surplus in the Treasury the eyes of the people of this country are by these authors and defenders of the Mills bill directed as the dangerous rock upon which the best interests of the Government are to be stranded. Assuming for the present that this is so; that there is a large and rapidly increasing surplus as alleged, and that therefore this danger is imminent; that the note of warning is well founded, is it a fact that the House bill, if enacted into law, would to any appreciable extent or at all accomplish this purpose? Who can certainly tell; who has in all this great debate in either House ventured to predict, and at the same time supported that prediction by either statement of fact or argument, that in any certain measure justifies the prophecy? For one, after somewhat careful study of the effect heretofore of a reduction of duties in largely stimulating importations and increasing the revenue, and a comparison of such tariff reduction bills with the House bill, I am forced to the conclusion that were the Mills bill, so called, to become a law as it passed the House our national revenue from customs dues would not be reduced a single dollar, but, on the contrary, would in all human probability be increased.

A large reduction would result from the articles this bill places on the free-list and which are now under existing law not included in that list.

But who does not know that on an infinite variety of importations mentioned in that bill and not included in the free-list, and on which large reductions of duties are made, there would at once be an enormous increase of importations, and as a consequence the revenues realized therefrom annually, although the rates proposed are reduced below those fixed by existing law, would on those lower rates of tariff be largely in excess of those now collected on the same articles?

It is an axiom in political economy applicable in determining the effect of a high or low tariff respectively on manufactured articles, to which all must assent, that the moment the tariff reaches a point where it no longer performs the function of protection, then the effect is to increase the revenue and not reduce it. And the whole theory of a tariff for revenue only as contradistinguished from a protective tariff proceeds on the assumption that the tariff imposed shall only be impressed on those articles which do not come in competition with our own productions, and in reference to which, therefore, there can not possibly be even the slightest incidental protection. And the reason is that the underlying idea of a tariff for revenue only is that the rate in all cases shall be the very lowest that will realize to the Government the largest amount of revenue. To accomplish this, therefore, it is manifest that the aim of the contestant for the principle of a tariff for revenue only will invariably seek to impose his customs tax on such articles as do not come in competition with our products, and will avoid, so far as in his power, levying any tariff whatever on any article which does come in contact with our products.

WAR TAXES.

It is said, and with much force, that war taxes should not be continued in times of peace. But what was the war tax and what has been done by the Republican party since the close of the war for its abolition? The internal-revenue tax and not the customs tax is the extraordinary war tax, and so recognized, or should be at least, by all. But, Mr. President, war taxes, neither internal revenue nor customs, have been continued in times of peace. The assumption that they have is not well founded. The amount of internal-revenue taxes collected annually now is not one-third of the aggregate collected at the close of the war. In 1867 $309,000,000 were collected, and this after a reduction of over $100,000,000 had been made by the Republican party by the acts of July 13, 1866, and March 2, 1867.

The following, taken from the very able and elaborate minority report on the Mills bill, submitted to the House of Representatives the present session by Representative WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Jr., will show what has been done by the Republican party in the way of reducing war taxes. I quote from that report:

> Of internal taxes the following have been the reduction made by the party now in the minority since the conclusion of the war:

By the acts of July 13, 1866, and March 2, 1867	$103,331,199
By the acts of March 31, 1868, and February 3, 1868	54,802,579
By the act of July 14, 1870	55,315,321
By the act of December 21, 1871	14,430,862
By the act of June 6, 1872	15,897,618
By the act of March 3, 1883	40,677,682
Total	284,421,260

This we present as the result of Republican legislation from July 13, 1866, down to and including March 3, 1883.

The Republican party was in control of the House of Representatives from the first-named date to March 4, 1875. During that period it will be observed that taxation was reduced and revenue diminished in the aggregate sum of $284,421,260. On the 4th of March, 1875, the control of the House passed to the Democratic party and remained with it until the 4th day of March, 1881, a period of six years. During these years the internal revenue was reduced $6,3 8,935. On the 4th day of March, 1881, the Republican party was reinvested with control of the House of Representatives, holding it for two years, during which time it reduced taxation and the revenues from customs sources in the estimated sum of $20,855,799, and upon internal revenue $40,677,682, a grand total of $61,432,481.

Since the 4th day of March, 1883, the House of Representatives has been dominated by the present majority party, a period of five years, and no taxes have been reduced and no curtailment of the revenues has taken place, although warned of a threatened surplus not only by the present Administration, but by the preceding one of President Arthur. It will be observed that from 1866 to 1888, a period of twenty-two years, the control of the House of Representatives has been equally divided between the two political parties, each having eleven years.

During the eleven years of Republican control the revenues were reduced (estimated)	$362,504,569
During the eleven years of Democratic control the revenues were reduced	6,368,935
Difference in favor of the present minority party in the House of	356,135,634

But not only so, the Republican party while in power did in July, 1870, May, 1872, June, 1872, and March, 1883, remodel the custom duties, and by these several acts of tariff reduction reduced the revenue from that source, taking the estimates made officially when these several acts were passed, to the amount of $78,083,409. I quote from the minority report of Representative MCKINLEY in support of these assertions, as follows:

It is a striking fact that all of the reductions of taxation which have occurred since the conclusion of the war, with the exception of the trifling ones made by the acts of March 1, 1879, and of May 28, 1880, aggregating a little over $6,000,000, were accomplished while the party now in the minority was in the majority and in control of legislation.

A brief summary of what has been done in this regard will be both suggestive and instructive.

By the act of July 14, 1870, the reduction of the revenue from custom duties was:

Free-list	$2,403,000
Estimated reduction from dutiable list	23,651,748
Total	26,054,748

By the act of May 1, 1872, tea and coffee were placed upon the free-list, making a reduction of 15,893,847

By the act of June 6, 1872, tariff duties were further reduced, and the reduction by the—

Free-list	$3,345,724
Estimated reduction from the dutiable list	11,933,191
Total	15,278,915

By the act of March 3, 1883, from tariff—

Free-list	$1,365,999
Estimated reduction from dutiable list	19,489,800
Total	20,855,799

The foregoing estimates were made when the several bills were passed.

When, therefore, the Republican party while in power in the national House of Representatives eleven of the twenty-two years since the close of the war reduced taxation, customs, and internal revenue to the estimated amount of $362,504,569, it can not with propriety be said that the Republican party has not reduced taxation or that the war taxes still prevail. Especially can not our Democratic friends urge this as an offense or dereliction on our part when they, having the control of the House of Representatives for one-half the period since the war, including the past five and one-half years, have during that whole period only reduced taxation in the aggregate the sum of $6,368,935, and have sent no revenue bill or tariff-reform measure of any kind to the Senate the past five years until the Mills abortion—infinitely more objectionable and dangerous in its free-trade tendency than was ever the horizontal-reduction bill of Mr. Morrison—came over here less than two months ago.

But the Republican party has not only thus reduced taxation, but while doing it has grappled with one of the largest public debts of either ancient or modern times—the result of the war of the rebellion—and reduced it from $2,756,000,000 in 1866 to considerably less than one-half the amount, or about $1,375,000,000, in 1885, and thus reduced the annual interest over $60,000,000, in addition to this reduction of nearly $1,400,000,000 on the principal.

DOES THE MILLS BILL MEAN FREE TRADE?

Frantic efforts are being made by the friends of the House bill, especially since the result of the elections in Oregon, Vermont, and Maine are known, to convince the people that the Mills bill does not mean free trade; and yet we find all pronounced free-trade advocates, not only in England but in the United States, welcoming it with hosannas as the beginning of the end of their fondest aspiration upon this subject. We find them not only proclaiming in favor of the Mills or House bill, but asserting that the administration of President Cleveland has from its inception done great work for the cause of free trade. Professor Perry, of Williams College, known as one of the great free-trade leaders, if not, indeed, the chief of such in the Democratic party, a year since said:

Secretary Manning has done for free trade in the United States the past year more effective work than any other man in the country. Postmaster-General Vilas is an outspoken and undoubted friend of a free commerce. President Cleveland will go as fast and as far toward that goal as the people and Congress will permit him.

As has been repeatedly shown by speeches here and elsewhere recently, all the great free-trade journals of England welcome the views and recommendations of the present Administration as a long and vigorous step in the direction of free trade. I will not weary by repeating, but will attract attention to a few of the more recent utterances of some of these leading journals on this subject.

The London Times but recently said:

The political contest now being waged in the United States is one between English free trade and the continental system of protection.

The Liverpool Mercury, in discussing the President's views on the tariff as enunciated in his message, says:

If all this does not tend in the direction of free trade we do not know the effect of plain language. President Cleveland favors the unfettered influx of necessaries and raw materials; he would abolish the duties on articles which are simply taxed for the sake of the protective system; he would eliminate from the list everything which does not compete with American industry, and he would depend for his customs revenue mainly upon luxuries. He will find free trade all over the world acclaiming him for so enlightening a policy.

After quoting still further from the President's opinion, the Mercury says:

That he is at heart a free-trader is perfectly obvious, however cautiously he has dealt with his subject. The only agriculturist who profits by the tariff, he says, is the wool-grower, and then he points out that the wool-grower does not profit much, since he loses as a consumer, and, it may be added, every consumer of the wool loses also by the artificial price. We are so satisfied with the address as a plea for free trade that we commend it as a study to the reactionaries who are endeavoring to raise a fair trade agitation in England. It may not please them, but it will give comfort to Mr. John Bright and liberals in general.

The London Chronicle, no longer since than in its issue of September 11 instant, said:

The exclusion of the fisheries question from the letter of acceptance of President Cleveland is strong testimony as to the purely factious character of the rejection of the treaty. It is utterly impossible to doubt that the re-election of President Cleveland would mean the eventual revival and ratification of the treaty. It is immaterial to discuss what President Cleveland's crusade should be called. He may give it any name he likes as long as we know it is in fact a crusade of free trade.

What does Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian commissioner who had such prominent part in the formation of the now deceased fisheries treaty, and who was knighted for his services in that connection, have to say in reference to the Mills bill? Hear him:

I am very sanguine that this bill (the Mills bill) will pass during the present session. Modified it may be, but I am inclined to think that the amendments will be still more in the interests of Canada than as the bill stands to-day. If this is the case, I think we may congratulate ourselves upon securing the free admission of our lumber, upon which we paid during last year no less than $1,315,450. On copper ore, made free by the Mills bill, we paid $96,945. On salt $21,992 duty was paid. This is rendered free by the Mills bill.

The Sheffield Independent, an English free-trade journal, recently said:

It (the Mills bill) is viewed by all parties alike as the first decisive and certain step in the direction of free trade. We do not anticipate the victory of absolute free trade in a country which has been so long held captive by rigid protectionists in one year or in two or even in a dozen years, but every year will bring its final triumph nearer. * * * The success of the Democrats at the Presidential election would necessitate their bringing in another tariff-reform measure upon far more advanced lines in the direction of the abolition or reduction of duties than Mr. MILLS's present bill, and that it would thus accelerate the ultimate success of free trade in the States.

The London Iron and Coal Trade's Review in its issue of July 27, ultimo, says:

The Mills bill was successfully carried through the House of Representatives on Saturday by a majority of 164 votes against 149, nearly every member of the House being present and recording his vote. The subject of tariff reform has now been made a party question, the Democrats, of whom President Cleveland is the recognized chief, identifying themselves with those favoring reform, while the Republicans fiercely oppose the change, but want to saddle the country with even more rigorous charges. Our readers will remember with what a storm of indignation from the Republicans President Cleveland's speech on the question of tariffs was greeted at the beginning of the session; but it is evident, from the events of the past few weeks, that the progress towards free trade in the United States has been much greater than was generally expected.

It may be well to note that the Mills bill has not yet become law; some people, especially those connected with the tin-plate trade, talk and write as if it were finally placed upon the statute-book of the United States, and for them it would be well if it were, for under it tin-plates—the duty on which now contributes $5,700,000 to the revenue—will be admitted free, despite the incessant labors of the iron manufacturers to obtain an increase rather than an abolition of the duty. However much the manufacturing interests may deny it, the fact is patent that great progress has been made on the road toward absolute free-trade, and particularly has this been the case since the date of the delivery of the President's message. Our iron and steel manufacturers look with very much interest on the movement which is now going on "on the other side," for trade there so intimately influences our own.

But why, in the light of the past history of the Democratic party, of its solemn declarations in national convention assembled, and in face of the real character of the Mills bill, should the leaders of that party now attempt to hoodwink and deceive the people of this country by the claim that they are not a free-trade party, and by the assertion that the Mills bill is not a bill based upon the doctrines of and which leads directly on to free trade? What did the Democratic party say in its national convention in 1876, twelve years ago? They said:

Resolved, That we demand that all custom-house taxation shall be for revenue only.

Four years later they declared in national convention, first, that—

The system of direct taxation known as internal revenue is a war tax.

And yet to-day, twenty-three years after the close of the war, and, with slight exception, we find that party opposing the abolition of the internal-revenue taxes which they in 1880 denounced as war taxes. But further, in 1880 the Democratic party in national convention proclaimed in favor of a tariff for revenue only. So that for the past thirty-two years—while at times, as in 1872, when they nominated and had as their candidate the most pronounced protectionist that ever trod the soil of America, on a platform suggesting that inasmuch as there are in this country—irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their Congressional districts and to the decision of Congress thereon, free from Executive interference or dictation—they sought to evade the issue—the constant tendency of the Democratic party on this great and economic question of the tariff has been in accordance with its solemn declaration made in its national convention in Cincinnati in 1856, when it adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That the time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of progressive free trade throughout the world.

That was the open, bold, heroic declaration of the Democratic party of this country in national convention thirty-two years ago, and that is their real sentiment to-day.

The friends of the Mills bill, moreover, assert that one of the great features of that bill is to relieve the consumer of burdensome taxes on the necessaries of life. Let us see how this is. The Mills bill maintains in the main the tariff on sugar, an article of universal consumption by rich and poor alike. The removal of the whole tax on sugar would remove a tax of 96 cents annually from the sugar of each man, woman, and child in the United States, and which gives protection merely to a local industry in Louisiana and a few other States, and instead places wool on the free-list, saving duties to something less than $6,000,000 annually, about 8 or 9 cents per capita, and with it breaks down an industry in which nearly every State and Territory in the Union is vitally interested. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] brought out this point very forcibly in his speech on the President's message, made December 13 last, when he said:

We are told in his report—

Referring to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury—that it is not worth while to reduce the receipts by removing $51,000,000 of duties from sugar because that is only 90 cents to each individual, and he turns from that to the removal of $5,000,000 of duties upon raw wool, which is only 8 cents to each individual, and to the removal of the duty upon ready-made clothing that would relieve the people of only 2 cents per capita. If it be any reason why we should retain the duty on sugar that it is only 90 cents per capita, is it any reason that we should remove the duty on raw wool that it is only 8 cents per capita, or upon ready-made clothing which is only 2 cents per capita? The grand climax is reached in the single sentence printed in capitals: "Untax the clothing of sixty millions of people." And the people are to be relieved just 2 cents each in the clothes they wear while they are still to pay 90 cents each for the sugar on their table, and, if the scheme works well, in addition "2 cents a pound tax on coffee and half as much on tea."

THE MILLS BILL A SECTIONAL MEASURE.

But another feature of the House bill stands out prominent and can not fail to attract universal attention, and that is its sectional aspect. In so far as the protective principle is recognized at all in the House bill, it is applied almost exclusively to foreign products of the same character produced by the Southern States. The States of the solid South, those States that are always, even in advance of the joining of national issues or the naming of national candidates, ready to deliver 153 electoral votes. This is why the tariff rate, except a mere fraction, is not removed from sugar. This is why rice is protected as it is by the House bill by a duty of over 100 per cent. on cleaned and 59.60 per cent. on uncleaned rice, while the wool industry of Ohio and other Mississippi Valley States and of the Pacific States and Territories, the iron and lumber, and lead and fruit, and provisions and vegetables, and other products of the Northern States are assailed en masse, many of them being placed on the free-list. The bill proposes free trade for the North and protection for the South. But why not, when six of the eight Democrats composing the majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, who framed the bill, namely, Mr. MILLS of Texas, Mr. MCMILLAN of Tennessee, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, and Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, are from the Southern States?

WAGES.

As European countries are not only our great competitors in the markets of the world outside the limits of our country, but also with our producers and manufacturers in a multitude of products in our home markets, it becomes pertinent, therefore, to inquire as to the wages paid in these European free-trade countries and to institute a comparison between such wages and those paid in the United States. It is important to know how persons in different occupations as well as those who are common laborers fare respectively in these different countries in the matter of wages.

The following table, from a recent report of the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, will, in a measure, not only give the prices in different countries, including the price of wages in the United States, but present in convenient form the comparison and lesson taught by each:

This table shows what free trade has done and is doing for the laboring man in Europe, and how he fares under the protective system in the United States. It will be seen from this that men employed in the building trades in the United States get on an average nearly three times as much as in England and Wales; over four times as much on an average as in Germany, France, Belgium, and Austria; while those engaged in other trades, including day laborers, receive about double on an average those received in England, and over three times as much on an average as do similar tradesmen and laborers in Germany, France, Austria, and Belgium.

It is asserted by high authority that for work done by the week in all classes of work American wages are as nearly as possible double those paid in Great Britain. And, Mr. President, as was so pertinently stated by Senator TELLER in his speech some time since—

If it is not true that the American laborer gets better pay, gets better compensation for his labor than any other laborer in the world, why is it that since 1860 there have come to this country 9,129,945 foreigners? Why have they come? Why have they sought this region if it is not to better their condition? They are laboring people. They do not flee entirely from bad government, and they do not come, as it is frequently said here and elsewhere, to get our cheap lands. Why should more than 700,000 Canadians, with cheap lands in Canada, come to the United States? They do not come for that purpose at all. Where do they go when they come? They go to the manufacturing States and to the manufacturing cities, where labor is compensated, where it is well paid. I have before me the census reports showing where they go. Of the 6,679,943 foreigners in the United States in 1880, how many were found in the State of Alabama? Nine thousand seven hundred and thirty-four. In Arkansas only 10,350. Does anybody say that Arkansas and Alabama do not present an attractive field for the agriculturist? Texas only had of this great number of people a comparatively few, 114,616 only. Examination of the report will further show that Boston had 114,000 of them; that Massachusetts, without any agricultural grounds for them, had 443,491; that Baltimore had 56,136; that St. Louis had 105,013, and New York had 478,694.

I beg further to incorporate in my remarks the following table showing the amount paid per month to workmen in plate-glass manufactories, respectively, in England, France, Germany, Belgium, and the United States:

It may be well for the laborers of the United States to take a glance at the wages paid in these different European countries as above indicated, and especially would I attract attention to wages paid in Norway, a free-trade country, and because it is a free-trade country does not engage in manufacturing, but looks to outside countries for its manufactured goods. How do the wages of the laboring man there compare with those paid in the United States? The census of 1880 shows the average yearly wages of the common laborer in the United States to be $345, or $1.11 for each and every working day in the year, while the Norwegian in his native country, on an average, gets only $22 per year, or an average of 7 cents for each working day in the year, or one-fifteenth as much as does the Norwegian who leaves his native land and comes to the United States to reside.

THE SAVING-BANKS.

But not only so. The moneys deposited in the saving-banks of any country truly represent the thrift and general prosperity of the laboring classes in that country. The larger proportion of the deposits in saving-banks is the surplus wages—the savings of the laboring-classes. Now, compare these deposits in the saving-banks of the United States with those in European free-trade countries, and the argument furnished by such comparison can not be otherwise than convincing. The figures are absolutely conclusive. These figures and comparisons are not by any means new, and although their presentation is somewhat stale, the lesson they teach is none the less convincing, and their frequent repetition is therefore fully justified. For instance, the aggregate of the wage-workers' savings now in saving-banks in England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland is but $182,000,000, while the amount of wage-workers' savings in the saving-banks in the six New England States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, and including the State of New York, in all seven out of the thirty-eight States that compose our Union of States, is $715,000,000, or nearly four times as much as in the four countries of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and yet the population of these is over 38,000,000, while that of the New England States and New York is considerably less than one-third that number, or only about 11,000,000.

DESTRUCTION OF IRELAND'S INDUSTRIES BY FREE TRADE.

Not unfrequently and more than once during this debate are we cited by the opponents of the protective system to what is alleged was the prosperity of Ireland during the closing years of the last century and to what is alleged to have been a reign of free trade. In this declaration, the premises being false, the conclusion is illogical, insignificant, and of no force. That there was a degree of prosperity in Ireland during those years is not denied, but that it was due to free trade, as these terms are understood to-day, is absolutely false. Not only this; but the free trade for which Ireland contended, and which was in a measure wrested from England by Grattan and the Irish volunteers in 1775 and 1776, and from that to 1782, was a free trade of an entirely different character than the free trade of the Smiths, the Cobdens, and their followers in England and in other countries, and the origin of which may be traced to Adam Smith, whose first publication was subsequent to the time that concessions were wrested from the English Parliament by Grattan and his Irish patriot followers under the command of the Earl of Charlemont.

The iron hand of despotic power had prior to that Irish revolt been placed by England upon the export trade of Ireland. The Irish people had been prohibited from sending Irish exports not alone to England, which might have been defensible as a proper means of protecting her own industries, but to France, the American colonies, and other countries. Commercial intercourse on any basis directly with any foreign power was denied her and her people, and it was against these acts of English tyranny that the Irish patriots, under the lead of Grattan and supported by 85,000 volunteers, protested.

It was to rend asunder these English fetters that bound Ireland commercially hand and foot, and by which an absolute and unyielding embargo was laid by England upon their export trade, not alone with England, but with all other countries, that the great patriot Grattan and his Irish soldiery invoked what was then by them denominated free trade—a free trade, however, in no sense or in any particular quality similar in principle to the free trade of the present day. Ireland demanded the right to sell her surplus of wheat, wool, potatoes, laces, linens, blankets, and other products wherever she could find a market, unless, indeed, prohibited by the country or the government of the country in which she sought that market. This right England denied her, Ireland insisting that this inhibition on her exports by any country, save and except that one to which she desired to send her exports, was the denial of the right of free trade, to which she believed herself justly entitled. In this revolt the concessions demanded by Ireland were, under the extreme pressure of foreign wars and other circumstances, reluctantly granted by England, and coupled with the removal of these arbitrary restrictions on their export trade, the doctrine of protection was by the Irish Parliament ingrafted on its legislation.

The tariff enacted by the independent Irish Parliament of 1783 was distinctively a high protective tariff. It was one of the first great measures of legislation placed upon the Irish statute-book after England had recognized the independence of the Irish Parliament; and when, later on, in 1799, union was again proposed by Mr. Pitt, based on the theories of free trade, the Irish Parliament protesting, asseverated in its addrsss to the Crown that union on such a basis would subject Irish manufactures and Irish industry to the ruinous fate of English competition, and the result would be that the great industrial interests of Ireland through free trade with England would not only be jeopardized, but absolutely ruined. And when, overpowered and forced into objectionable and hopeless union, the lament of the Irish people and of the Irish nation was echoed throughout the world by the illustrious Grattan in these disheartening but truthful words:

All the policy—

Said he—

of nursing our growing fabrics, and thereby of improving the industry of our country, employing her children and expending her wealth upon her own labor, is now abandoned, and the language of the Union is, "Buy where you can, and as cheap as you can."

And it was under this economy inaugurated by the independent Irish Parliament in 1783 by the enactment of a protective tariff that Irish industries, which had for years been lacking in vitality, were for a time resuscitated and revived. But the day of her resurrected prosperity was of short duration. England was no longer involved in war with her American colonies or with other nations. The Irish volunteers had been disbanded and England again assumes an aggressive and oppressive policy toward Ireland. Her Parliament is destroyed; the union and the supremacy of the English Parliament are re-established. Inhibitions and restrictions on her exports are reaffirmed, and although an effort is made to resist the proffered yoke, it is unsuccessful; while to all these there is added the blighting influence of the doctrine of free trade as practiced by England for the past forty years and under which Ireland's industries have been paralyzed, her manufactures destroyed, her hopes blasted, free speech throttled, and her people, brave, intelligent, patriotic as they are, are made dependent, not only for bread, but in many instances for life itself, upon the will of English landlords.

No, the prosperity of Ireland from 1782 to 1800, so far from being due to free trade, was due, first, to the fact that during these eighteen years her Parliament was independent. The statute which had been in existence since the tenth year of Henry VII, and which asserted the supremacy of the English Parliament over that of Ireland, had been wiped out; and second, because during seventeen of these eighteen years—from 1783 to 1800—when the Union was re-established and the Parliaments consolidated, the people of Ireland had a highly protective tariff enacted by their own independent Parliament.

England, although for centuries the advocate of protection, has, during the reign of Queen Victoria, urged and advocated the policy of free trade. Looking to the early and final destruction of all the manufacturing industries of Ireland, she was careful to stipulate in the articles of union of 1800, not only for a rapid approach toward free trade, but that at the expiration of twenty years there should be absolute free trade between England and Ireland. This was the ringing of the death-knell of the prosperity of Ireland. It was the sounding of the death-rattle in the throat of Ireland's industries, and upon which her wage-workers depended for bread. It was the sad requiem that signalized not only the decay but the absolute destruction of that principle of vis vitæ upon which the very existence of the prosperity and material development of Ireland depended. It was the sad note of warning that predicted the coming of wretchedness, and misery, and suffering, and actual famine to the people of Ireland. It was a policy the inevitable result of which was first, famine; second, evictions, and third, the scattering of dismayed and discouraged emigrants in vastly increased and increasing numbers to other lands, and by means of all which the land of Erin, the home of the Irish patriot, the land made historic, not alone by the patience and patriotism of its people, but by oppressions to which its brave, whole-souled, generous people have been subjected, has become a desolation. Hear what an Englishman testifies on this subject. The statistician, Mulhall, in his publication entitled "Fifty Years of Material Progress," in referring to Ireland, says:

The present reign has been the most disastrous [to Ireland] since that of Elizabeth, as the following statistics show:

Died of famine	1,225,000
Persons evicted	3,668,000
Number of emigrants	4,186,000
Number evicted from 1849 to 1851	1,841,000
Number evicted from 1852 to 1860	770,000
Number evicted from 1861 to 1870	320,000
Number evicted from 1871 to 1886	728,000

The number of persons evicted is equal to 75 per cent. of the actual population. No country in Europe or elsewhere has suffered such wholesale extermination.

What a sad but truthful recital of Ireland's woes! From being an exporter of manufactured goods under a protective tariff to the value annually of $17,500,000, a large proportion of which was, as stated by Mr. O'Connell in a speech in 1844, paid to Irish laborers and artisans, and which moneys in turn were distributed among the farmers and merchants, it was by the application of the policy of free trade, forced upon her by the mandatory power of Great Britain, reduced to a non-manufacturing, non-producing, and famine-stricken country. Mr. O'Connell, the Irish patriot and statesman, in referring to this subject in a speech delivered by him in 1844, used the following language:

How does the case stand at present? You all know too well. When we exported £3,500,000 of manufactured goods, you are aware that a very large proportion of that amount consisted of wages paid to the laborers and artisans employed, and that money was again expended with the farmer and the shopkeeper, and thus went on increasing comfort and prosperity throughout the whole country. But, alas! what is the case now? Wretchedness and misery prevail where wealth and happiness once had their abode.

John F. Scanlon in his work "Why Ireland is poor"—

And I am now quoting from an able editorial in a recent issue of the San Francisco Chronicle—gives a graphic description of the unhappy result. He says that before union there were fully 200,000 persons employed in factories in Ireland; in 1850 there were only 24,725. His assertion is corroborated by extended details and careful tables derived from excellent authorities. From one of these we cull the following figures to show how disastrously the industries of Ireland were affected:

	Number of employés before union.	Number of employés 1831, after union.
Limerick, one branch of trade	15,000	None.
Cork, glovemakers	3,000	500
Cork, shoemakers	300	100
Youghal	7 tanneries.	None.
Youghal, wool-combers	200	12
Dublin, all trades	30,000	10,000
Dublin, prosperous weavers	5,000	100
Dublin, stocking-making	600	None.
Drogheda, stocking-making	2,000	600
Kilkenny, one parish	4,000	98
All Ireland, working at cotton	30,000	500
All Ireland, working at cotton yarn	20,000	3,000
Dublin, silk-workers	15,000	441
Balbriggan, calico	2,500	226

No, Mr. President, the silk factories of Dublin no longer echo with the sound of the shuttle. The halls of her factories no longer resound to the tread of her 15,000 silk operatives or that of her 30,000 operatives of all trades. Limerick sighs for the prosperity that gladdened the hearts of her factory employés when her lace productions brought plentiful returns from all the markets of the world. Kilkenny, by reason of having British free trade imposed upon her, no longer covers the people of surrounding nations with her woolen blankets. Her factories are now as silent as the grave. Her cotton manufactures, which gave employment to 15,000 operatives, have been destroyed, as have the factories at Rathdrum, and Balbriggan, and Bandon, and Carrick-on-Suir.

Will the Irish-Americans of this country, the descendants of a people oppressed by military violence through long centuries—a period of over four hundred years—men who revere with ancestral pride the illustrious names of the Thorntons, the Barrys, the Carrolls, the Sullivans, the Emmets, the Careys, and the O'Connors, and of hosts of other patriots whose names are immortal, can they, looking back to and remembering these oppressions upon the part of England, remembering the great famine that desolated their numbers by the thousand, and the great procuring cause of which, more than all other causes combined, was the destruction of Ireland's industries by England—will they, remembering all these things, be found to-day speaking or voting in favor of enlarging and perpetuating British influence, British policies, British aggressions, and British demands, in this free Republic?

ENGLAND'S SUPREMACY DEPENDS ON THE DESTRUCTION OF THE MANUFACTURES OF THE WORLD.

Who can doubt the attitude of England in the great political contest now pending in the United States? Is there, can there be any doubt as to the direction her sympathy takes? Who, in the face of the overwhelming testimony to the contrary, can do otherwise than believe that she as a nation; that her leading public men, members of the Cobden Club, advocates of the doctrine of free trade throughout the world, regard the present step taken by President Cleveland and the Democratic House of Representatives as one leading directly and rapidly on to their favorite policy of free trade? Who, in the light of the testimony of the great cloud of witnesses that surrounds us, can fail to comprehend or hesitate to believe that England regards the permanent existence of her supremacy as depending on the breaking down or seriously crippling of American manufactures and American industries? It was the English historian Hume who said:

If England would maintain her supremacy, she must throttle the manufactures of the world in their cradles.

But hand in hand with England's efforts to destroy our industries and degrade our wage-workers by reducing wages in this country to the standard of that paid in England, goes continually on an effort not to increase the wages of the wage-workers in England, but to reduce still lower the price of wages in that country. The recent English Parliament report, among other similar expressions in other forms, contains the following:

In order to give capital a fair remuneration the price of labor must be kept down.

Mr. Labouchere, editor of the London Truth, and member of Parliament, said within the last six months:

Were I an American I should be a protectionist, but protection means high wages, and England can not pay higher wages and keep her control of the markets of the world.

THE NATION'S PROGRESS UNDER THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

Had our nation decreased in wealth, had there been a failure to make such advancement as the increase of population and progress in the arts of civilization and material development would seem to demand, then there would perhaps be more reason for such a bold, aggressive, and deadly attack on the protective policy as has been made by the present Administration. But such is not the case. On the contrary the mighty strides which this nation has made in national wealth in the past twenty-eight years, notwithstanding the fearful amount of property destroyed by the war, stands without a parallel in the history of nations in either ancient or modern times, and challenges the admiration of the world.

Since 1860, although the one-half of the aggregate wealth of the United States was in the four succeeding years swallowed up and absolutely annihilated in the vortex of civil war, our national wealth has nearly quadrupled. Deducting our losses in war, it was in 1887 more than seven and a half times greater than in 1860. In 1860 it was less in value than $16,000,000,000; in 1887 it was more than $60,000,000,000, and stands first in the list in point of wealth among the nations of the earth. Compare this with haughty England with her boasted and conceded power and influence among the nations. Her national wealth in 1860 was rated at $30,000,000,000, nearly double our then national wealth, while to-day $42,000,000,000 is all she can boast of against our $60,000,000,000. The value of our manufactured products annually has nearly quadrupled since 1860. Then they were about $2,000,000,000 annually. Now they are about $7,000,000,000 in value annually.

The value of farms had more than trebled between the breaking out of the war and the census of 1880. At the beginning of the war their value was about $3,000,000,000, while in 1880 it was over $10,000,000,000, and to-day is much more.

Twenty-five years ago, had the total wealth of the United States been divided equally among our population, each person would have had but about $400, while to-day, notwithstanding the marvelous increase of population from 32,000,000 in 1860 to over 62,000,000 in 1887, if our wealth were equally divided, each man, woman, and child throughout the Republic, of every color, caste, and condition, would have more than $1,000. Our $60,000,000,000 of wealth to-day is increasing at the rate of $875,000,000 each year, or within a fraction of the aggregate annual increase of wealth of Great Britain, France, and Germany.

Their annual increase in the aggregate reaches about $900,000,000, divided as follows: France, $375,000,000; Great Britain, $325,000,000; and Germany, $200,000,000. And when it is remembered that the population of Great Britain, France, and Germany is in the aggregate about double that of the United States the comparison presented above of our annual increase in wealth as compared with the three countries named illustrates more forcibly still the enormous rapidity of the accumulation of our nation's wealth and the tremendous increase per capita over that of European nations.

Mr. Mulhall, the most eminent statistician of the world, in his recent "Balance Sheet of the World," says:

> It would be impossible to find in history a parallel to the progress of the United States in the last ten years. Every day that the sun rises upon the American people it sees an addition of two and a half million dollars to the accumulation of wealth in the Republic, which is equal to one-third of the daily accumulation of all mankind outside of the United States.

This is the statement, moreover, of an Englishman and a member of the royal society of London.

The value of our annual industries to-day is over 22 per cent. greater than that of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the sum of the latter being but $9,200,000,000, while that of the United States is $11,405,000,000.

And all this wonderful development, increase of prosperity, and multiplication of wealth have occurred during a time when the protective principle to a greater or less extent was applied in the matter of collecting revenue on foreign imports. And during no part of this time was the doctrine for a tariff for revenue only, which is but another name for the doctrine of free trade, in force in the United States.

That this remarkable advancement of the United States in material wealth is largely due to our protective system was recently affirmed by Prince Bismarck in a speech before the Reichstag, wherein he urged the necessity on the part of the German Empire of imitating the tariff system of the United States. In that speech he said:

> The success of the United States in material development is the most illustrious of modern times. The American nation has not only successfully borne and suppressed the most gigantic and expensive war of all history, but immediately afterward disbanded its army, found work for all its soldiers and marines, paid off most of its debt, given labor and homes to all the unemployed of Europe as fast as they could arrive within the territory, and still by a system of taxation so indirect as not to be perceived, much less felt. Because it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is mainly due to its system of protective laws, I urge that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff system of the United States.

CONCLUSION.

Protection, Mr. President, and high tariff are not convertible terms. They are not synonyms in signification. A tariff which will intervene to prevent the products of cheap foreign labor from crushing out or materially crippling home industries, whether it be a low or a high tariff, is protection in its plainest and yet most comprehensive American sense. A tariff, whether high or low, that would simply increase the profits of the capitalist with no corresponding benefits to the wage-worker or the consumer in the shape of higher wages for the former and more favorable conditions for the latter, is not protection in the American sense of that term; upon the contrary, such a system would be legalized robbery.

No party in Christendom favors such a policy. I will not say that capital, always more or less avaricious, oftentimes unreasonable, and generally conscienceless, is in its demands for protection always considerate of the rights and interests of either the bread-winner or the consumer; and the manufacturer, looking solely to his own individual temporary interest, may, it is true, at times become a protectionist and again a free-trader, he may demand a high duty to cut off foreign competition, or if this be denied him, in turn be found insisting on free raw material, to the end that his expenses may be curtailed and his profits multiplied, irrespective of the effect on labor or the interests of the consumer. To conform to such a demand, which is by no means general with the manufacturer, but only sporadic, and where self predominates over the general good, is not protection in its proper American sense.

It is not the protection of the Republican party or its platform. It is only that system of tariff duties that contributes in just, reasonable, and fair proportions, all conditions and interests being considered, to the protection of both capital and labor, of both producer and consumer, and which guards all these important interests and classes, and those dependent for their existence on their prosperity impartially against the encroachments of foreign capital and cheap foreign labor, that can rightfully be termed protection. It is only such a system that the Republican party, following in the line of the opinions and advocacy of such illustrious men as Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Clay, Webster, Lincoln, Grant, and a host of others, "whose names were not born to die," advocates and approves.

It is that system which, while it tends to protect American capital against the ruinous competition of cheap foreign products, to the end that it may realize fair and reasonable returns for investments made, at the same time surrounds labor, struggling in the shadow of adversity, with its protective arms, shielding and guarding it from unjust assaults, from the unreasonable and unfair competition of cheap European and Asiatic serf and criminal labor, to the end that the American wage-worker may receive a fair remuneration for his toil. It is that system that will tend to increase the home market for the farmer for his products of wheat and corn and oats and barley and vegetables and fruits, and that will relieve him from being to any extent, if possible, a dependent on the foreign markets of the world; that will tend to build up a wide diversity of industrial pursuits in this country; that will open innumerable avenues for both capital and labor; that will shut out from American competition the convict labor of other lands; a system that recognizes not only the right but the duty of the people of the United States to protect themselves against the products of foreign countries whenever in our judgment the real interests of American industries and American labor demand it; to the end that a diversity of industrial pursuits may be stimulated, new, varied, and important avenues of labor developed, the home market for the farmer and manufacturer increased; that the daily toiler in the mill, the factory, the field, the mine, and in the streets of the crowded city; in the fertile valleys, and underneath our mountains, rich in both base and precious metals, and thus aid in leading us as a people and nation upward and onward in the grand march of human progress, material development, and advanced civilization, and towards the commercial supremacy of this great nation, and the elevation of all its people of every class and condition. That is what is meant by the doctrine of protection as contradistinguished from that of free trade, and these are some of the beneficent results which are expected from it.

This is the great fundamental idea we expect confidently to find enunciated in the Senate substitute for the House bill; while the House bill is a most significant and dangerous step in the direction of that system of free trade which can only result in bringing us into ruinous competition with all the cheap products of every nation under the sun, which will destroy our home market, reduce wages, paralyze capital, call a halt to industrial enterprise and material prosperity, and reduce us as a nation and a people to the condition of dependents on foreign countries and capitalists; that, in a word, in so far as our domestic interests and domestic trade and internal and external commerce are concerned, constitutes us a servile dependent on the will of an English suzerain.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to strike out section 5.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, while I am willing to vote for the bill to create a Department of Agriculture, I am not certain that it will prove a wise step. It is not sure that the interests of agriculture will be promoted by making the head of the Department of Agriculture a Cabinet minister. I can not quite conceive why those interests can not be as well subserved as the Department of Agriculture is now constituted under the Commissioner of Agriculture, as they will be after making the Commissioner a member of the President's Cabinet.

The present members of the President's Cabinet are at the head of political departments of the Government. They are all political; they are all in some way connected with and essential to the political government of the country. But agriculture is in no sense an essential of political government. The fostering of agriculture is not a necessary part of government. Therefore, for reasons to which I shall advert a little later, I am not inclined to believe that there is as much wisdom in the creation of the Department of Agriculture as is claimed by the friends of the measure. Nevertheless, as the agriculturists of the country profess to believe that the change will be on the whole helpful to agriculture, I am willing to give my vote for the bill to create the department and to make its head a member of the President's Cabinet.

But I do not wish in this connection and at this time to vote to transfer the Weather Bureau from the War Department to this newly created Department of Agriculture, and I hope that the friends of this new department who wish to see it now established will refrain from pressing this bill of transfer, this seizure of the Weather Bureau of the War Department, this ruthless tearing up by the roots of the Weather Bureau, and transferring it to this department which is yet to come into existence.

I hope that the advocates of the change will wait until the new department is organized and in operation, until the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture has taken his seat at the Cabinet table and begun to advise the President of the United States concerning the business of the political Departments of the Government, and until it is found that this first change works well, so that there shall be no occasion to recede from the action taken and to remove the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture from the President's Cabinet as suddenly as he was placed there. I trust, I say, that Senators will refrain from pressing this transfer of the Weather Bureau until the doubtful experiment of making the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet minister, which they are about to try, has proved successful.

There have been some prior investigations of the Signal Service Bureau of the War Department, and those investigations have not, as it seems to me, developed the necessity or the propriety of the proposed transfer of the Weather Bureau from the War Department to an agricultural department.

I have in my hand a very bulky volume. It is the testimony taken and the reports made by a commission of somewhat extensive jurisdiction, which took a large amount of evidence, and having taken it felt obliged to make and did make reports to Congress. The commission has no short name. I have found it difficult to describe the volume so as to secure a copy of it from the Senate Library, owing to the fact that there is no short name to be given to the commission or to the report. I think a simple, brief name ought to be found for the book, because it is really a document which embodies many important facts, and although its conclusions have not met full fruition nor been embodied in law, yet I wish to say nothing in derogation of the investigation.

Testimony before the joint commission to consider the present organizations of the Signal Service, Geological Survey, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, with a view to secure greater efficiency and economy of administration of the public service in said bureaus, authorized by the sundry civil act approved July 7, 1884, and continued by the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1885.

The reports are made to the Forty-ninth Congress, first session: House of Representatives Report No. 2740.

This commission, in pursuance of the authority given, made a full and exhaustive inquiry into the management of the Signal Service and made lengthy reports. Now, I am unable to find that there is a suggestion anywhere in those reports that the Signal Service, or rather the Weather Bureau of the Signal Service, could be wisely transferred to the Department of Agriculture, or that a department of agriculture should be created for the purpose of having in connection with its establishment the Weather Bureau transferred to such a department. There is no suggestion in the report or in the testimony, I believe—if I am incorrect the Senator who has charge of the bill will please correct me—that to the Commissioner of Agriculture should be committed the Weather Signal Service of the country.

There were two reports made by the commission, and I will read from one of them. It is signed on page 54 by Senators ALLISON and HALE, and by Representative Lowry, and there is an addendum by Representative Wait, of Connecticut, who concurs in the report, except that part relating to the Signal Service, on which subject he states that he agrees with Messrs. MORGAN and HERBERT in their report, which follows. The first branch of the committee say of the Weather Bureau on page 19:

If the question was a new one, and whether a civilian bureau, with a civil head, should be organized, or whether it should be attached to the military establishment, as now, it is probable that the commission would recommend a civil bureau. But that is not the question. We are authorized to consider this question "with a view to secure greater efficiency and economy of administration of the public service in said bureau," etc. The present organization has been in existence for fourteen years, and is efficient for the work assigned to it, and unless its force is greatly cut down it is not apparent how it can be made more efficient by the present substitution of a wholly civilian force for that now employed; and if the force is excessive, it is as easily cut down under the present organization as under a new one.

That is the whole sum and substance of the report on the Weather Bureau of this subdivision of the commission. Senator MORGAN and Mr. HERBERT, of the House, in their report discuss the extravagances of the Signal Service and recommend some economies, and conclude by reporting a bill entitled "A bill to establish a Weather Bureau in the War Department, and for other purposes," which has five sections, the effect of which apparently is to organize a civil corps in the War Department for the management, under military officials, of the Weather Bureau. But nowhere, as I stated in the beginning, is there a suggestion, coming either from the majority or the minority, from either one branch or the other branch of the commission which had made this investigation, that it would be expedient to transfer the Weather Bureau from the War Department to the Commissioner of Agriculture or to the Department of Agriculture or anywhere else; and so far as I can learn there is no report on file anywhere that recommends such a transfer. If there is any such report I should like to examine it. I ask the Senators who advocate this transfer whether they can place their hands upon a well considered argument in favor of the transfer which they now propose? If they can not, I point them to the fact that this commission, which made this full and exhaustive inquiry and report to Congress, concluded without either recommending or suggesting any such transfer; and I say it seems to me that before Congress undertakes to make it there should at least be the report of a committee giving the reasons why it should be made. On the other hand, we do have the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, almost unanimously opposing the change and saying the time has not come for the transfer of the Weather Bureau from the War Department to some other Department.

There has been no reason given in this debate, so far as I have listened to it, sufficiently weighty to require the change to be made. The Weather Bureau is not entirely for the benefit of agriculture. It is partly for the benefit of the military establishment. Its functions have been performed by the Signal-Service Corps of the Army as a part of the necessary work of that corps. I take it that there is no army under the whole heavens having a signal corps, which is not charged either in form or in fact with the duty of ascertaining the condition of the weather and making predictions concerning the weather for the benefit of military movements. And are we, whenever it becomes necessary for military purposes to know what the weather is, whenever it becomes necessary for military purposes to have predictions made concerning the weather, are we——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment, when I state the proposition. Are we to have the Army of the United States enter into communication with the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of finding out what the weather is in order that military movements may be directed accordingly? I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator please advise me or tell the Senate in what respect information of the state of the weather is to be of value in military movements? I have known of armies in all sorts of conditions and places and circumstances, but I have never yet known one to be taken in out of the wet. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kansas is a gentleman of extraordinary knowledge and acuteness. I certainly credit him as possessing such; and he can not mean to have the Senate understand that information of the condition of the weather, actual and prospective, is of no importance to the movements of an army. I think we have heard that not only battles in military warfare, but battles on election day have been won or lost, according to the condition of the weather.

I have just received a communication from General Greely, which contains, perhaps, an answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas. General Greely says:

The allied fleet before Sebastopol in 1856 was almost totally destroyed by a violent storm which swept unannounced across the Mediterranean and Black Seas.

I think the Senator from Kansas will agree that if the allied fleets had been aware of this prospective storm it would have been of some use in a military sense.

In these days the advance of the storm would have been heralded and enormous loss of men and supplies, which brought so much suffering upon the allied armies, would have been avoided. In our own war—

The Senator having asked me a question, I hope he will listen—to quote no further, the advance of Burnside upon Fredericksburg was initiated at the commencement of a three days' storm, which paralyzed the efforts of the Army of the Potomac and sent it back to its camp demoralized more by the elements than it would have been by a pitched battle.

I believe I have answered the Senator from Kansas; and now, as I see he is about taking the floor again, I will ask him whether he thinks it would have been a natural performance of the function of government for General Burnside to have telegraphed to Washington asking the Secretary of War to consult with the Commissioner of Agriculture as to what the weather was likely to be about the time when his army was to advance?

Mr. PLUMB. It would be owing to what the Army was going to do. If it was going to raise a crop of potatoes, I should have thought it a good thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that the best answer the Senator can make?

Mr. PLUMB. I regard that whole performance as entirely puerile. The Senator says the actual condition of the weather is necessary to be known. How is a man to know there is rain until he gets into the rain and feels the drops on his back? As to the prospective condition of the weather, I suppose that under the kid-glove and plug-hat idea of warfare, of course no man should go out into a combat when there was liable to be a precipitation of moisture.

If this theory of General Greely is to be developed to its final conclusion our warfare will be all carried on in Newport, and in very large tents, and things of that kind. I can not conceive that a modern soldier, according to that idea, would ever go out in an apparel that would be damaged by either dust or rain. It opens up a new idea of warfare to me, I confess. There certainly will not be any bloodshed in that time. It will be as inoffensive as a woman's quilting bee, and I suppose, probably, instead of having guns and so on to carry it on, it would be better to turn it over to a Quaker meeting. I confess, really, that I am a little bit surprised at the suggestions about the millennium being so near at hand, which I have been rather hoping would not come in my time, for fear that I should not be ready for it. [Laughter.] But if, as is now suggested, we are to have a condition of warfare in which the element of this question of rainfall is to be taken into account, so that armies can move, and all these other questions that concern the convenience and comfort of the soldiers and so on, it will certainly be a millennial condition of things in which that will be seriously taken into account, and, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] suggests, they will cease firing whenever it commences to rain.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kansas is always as breezy as one of the cyclones upon the prairies of his State, and is never at a loss for an argument based upon ridicule, or, as I may say, a ridiculous argument. The Senator resorts to ridicule because he is unable to maintain the proposition that a knowledge of the weather, present and prospective, is not essential to military operations. If it is not essential to military operations, I am unable to see how it is of great importance to agriculture. I think that if a farmer wants to know whether it is likely to rain or not, or whether heats or frosts are to be expected, it is also important to a general in command of an army to know what the weather is and what the weather is to be, and if this transfer is made we must leave the Army without this information, without weather examinations and weather prognostications, or be obliged to duplicate the service, or else to put the General of the Army into the absurd attitude which I have depicted of calling upon the Commissioner of Agriculture to find out what the weather is going to be.

I submit that it is a great deal better to let the Signal Service Corps of the Army find out what they need to know about the weather by their own investigations made at the different military posts—and there are not only military posts upon the plains and along the frontier, but in every one of our large cities and upon our whole coast—to let them find it out by their own machinery and not make this important branch of the military service an adjunct of the Department of Agriculture.

Moreover, Mr. President, I believe that the larger part of the benefit derived from the Weather Bureau is to the commerce of the country, to our commercial interests, to the shipping which enters and goes out from our ports. Unquestionably there has been a large benefit of that kind. Shipwrecks have been avoided, great losses of life and of property have been prevented by the prognostications of the Weather Bureau of the War Department, and I think that when we consider the millions of our shipping engaged in our coastwise traffic and the millions of foreign shipping that enter our ports, it must be concluded that it would be the height of folly to impair the benefits which have been and are to be derived by this shipping from the notices of the Government Weather Bureau by doing anything that will diminish the efficiency of that service; and yet it is proposed by the advocates of this transfer that the secretary of agriculture shall issue storm signals to our shipping along our coast and that this whole exhibition of weather bulletins and weather and storm signals, in which our country has taken the lead of all the maritime nations of the world, shall be put in charge of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, nothing that I can conceive of in administration is any more absurd than this proposition when it is reduced to its last analysis; and yet it is said because the Senate of the United States has once foolishly adopted the proposition and now the House of Representatives has still more foolishly done it, while no committee that ever investigated the subject has ever reported the reasons in favor of it, that at one blow we should not only create a department of agriculture and send the secretary of the department of agriculture to sit around the Cabinet table, but that we shall put him in charge of the Weather Bureau of the War Department, of that Weather Bureau which is of so much importance to the ships and commerce of the country.

Mr. President, if the Weather Bureau has been extravagantly managed, if the Signal Service has not been wisely or economically conducted, then I trust that Congress has wisdom enough, has investigating and deciding capacity enough, to reform the service and make it what it ought to be; but I stand upon the proposition of the commission which I have read, that any reform which it is expedient to make can be as well and as wisely accomplished with the bureau where it now is as it can be after any transfer of it to any other department of the Government.

But, Mr. President, it is my individual preference and judgment that this weather service should remain permanently as a part of the duties of the Army of the United States. It is my belief that the weather service of the country can not be so well performed in any other way as it can in connection with the Army and when under the control of the officers of the Army.

I have no jealousy of the Army and Navy of our Republic. It is true that the Army and the Navy are the only aristocracy that we have in this country, but they are an aristocracy that is necessary for the efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and for the good of the nation. We can have no Army and no Navy that is valuable unless we maintain, as a nucleus, at least, of a large force, a regular Army and Navy composed of military men highly educated, appointed for life, and placed at the proper time upon the retired-list, and this aristocracy of the Army and Navy has no fears for me.

I believe that we should cherish and protect our Army and Navy and that we should not be continually sneering and decrying them in time of peace. I think a regular Army and Navy that served this country as bravely, as faithfully, and as successfully as our Army and Navy did during the late rebellion, are entitled to the kindest and most charitable judgment, are entitled to the warmest and most earnest support of every American citizen; and I very much regretted the other day to hear the criticisms made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], whom I do not now see in his seat, upon the Ordnance officers of the Army. I believe that the Ordnance Corps, like every other corps of the Army, is abundantly competent for its business, and that its members, who are patriotic as well as skillful, are eminently fitted to do the ordnance work of the Army and of the Government of the United States. I also believe that the Engineer Corps of the Army, which the Senator from Kansas has so sneeringly and sarcastically criticised upon this floor, is an able body of men, well qualified for the business which is committed to them; and I regret that any Senator in the discharge of his duty feels called upon to utter such slurs upon so useful and competent a corps as have been hurled against the Engineer officers by the Senator from Kansas.

The officers of the Army and Navy of the United States are cultured men. They are educated men. They have received their education at splendid governmental institutions of learning, maintained at large expense, and which no American citizen is willing to blot out of existence. The young men of the nation go to these schools, the best young men the country can furnish, and they are highly educated. They are taught the science of modern warfare; for war is a science, and is becoming more and more a matter of precision and accuracy, a matter of scientific knowledge and training.

Mr. President, why do we educate at West Point and at Annapolis these men and give them life commissions, saying that we will employ them as long as they are able to work for their country, and will, when they are disabled by age or otherwise, place them upon a retired-list and support them and their families as long as life shall last, if it is not solely because we wish to avail ourselves to the fullest extent of their learning and of their scientific ability and attainments in the service of the Government of the United States? Then, as we have this great body of public servants, the officers of the Army and the Navy of this Republic, why should we not utilize them in every business that requires this high education, that requires this scientific knowledge, whether it be wholly a work of war or whether it be an honorable and dignified work of peace?

Mr. President, I believe most thoroughly in utilizing the Army and Navy in the works of peace. I believe in making the largest possible use of both these great cultivated, scientific bodies of men in all the arts of peace for which their education, their culture, and their experience have fitted them. I early came to this conclusion with reference to the Navy of the United States. In 1882 I had the honor to urge that there should be transferred to the Navy Department the Light-House Service, the Coast Survey, the Revenue Marine, the Life-Saving Service, and the Marine-Hospital Service. The work of these different branches of the Government was conducted and is now conducted mainly by naval officers. I believed and still believe that they should do that work under the Navy Department, to which these branches of service more properly belong than they do to the overloaded Treasury Department, by which they are now supervised.

Later, in 1883, I attempted to answer the argument which is so freely made against the employment of military men in works of peace. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read the statement which I made on the subject, and which is expressed better than I can newly state the ideas. I read from page 40 of the report of the Navy Department for 1883:

> One general argument has been presented against the transfer, in the form of an objection to employing military officers in civil duties. This is wholly out of place when applied to the army or navy of a popular government in a law-abiding community. In a despotism, where a standing army is maintained without the consent of the people and may be used for the repression of liberty, it would be wise to resist the extension of military employment to civil labors, even though the saving of expense should partly balance the evils resulting from an increase of despotic control. But in the United States the Army and Navy are the creation of the popular will. They are organized and supported only because the people deem them necessary for national existence and safety, and they can be disbanded at the pleasure of the people. They are equally with all other officials under the direction of a civil administration. They can therefore be wisely and safely employed in any work that will not impair their efficiency or discipline, and where their employment would save money that would otherwise be paid to maintain an unnecessary civil establishment. They should by all means be so employed when the service will not only relieve and benefit the people, but will add to the professional experience and to the fitness for war duties of the officers and men. Their exclusion can only be justified on the theory that to render them harmless they must be rendered inefficient; a theory which, if carried out, would result in the immediate abolition of the service.
> The argument in favor of the full use of the Navy in all appropriate labors of peace becomes stronger as the nation seems more unlikely to engage in actual warfare. Our international policy tends to peace with all the world; our conflicts will be infrequent; and therefore more than all other nations we should utilize our officers, seamen, and ships in the nautical works which peace times require. Such are their appropriate sphere, not for their private benefit, but for the greater good of the Government to which they desire to give the fullest possible service.

But the question might naturally be asked, if the Army and Navy are utilized in these works of peace will there not be difficulty when war breaks out? That question was asked me before this commission with the long name, whose report I have here, and I beg to read the reply which I made, on page 73 of the testimony:

Q. You have stated that you would favor the utilization of the personnel of the Navy and War Departments for the discharge of those functions connected with the arts of peace in time of peace, but I desire to inquire now what your views would be touching the utilization of these officials to discharge these functions of the Departments in time of war.

A. When a war should happen to be upon us, it might be necessary to make special provision by legislation, somewhat changing the manner of conducting the Government. But now it is evident that our Army and Navy will rust out and become worthless if we do not find peaceable employment for them. When our civil war broke out we suddenly had to enlarge this great governmental machine, and we adopted makeshifts. I think that many of these subjects were placed under the Treasury Department, because the other Departments were overloaded, and I think that any anomalies that were created during the period of war ought to be corrected now. And I maintain that the Army and Navy of the Republic should be utilized in every proper work of peace, for two reasons: You will save money, and you will keep the Army and Navy from rusting out. These views are to be found distinctly stated in my report for 1883.

Therefore I say about the Army now what I said about the Navy then. Let us utilize this great body of skillful men in every work of peace to which they are adapted, which it is dignified and honorable for them to perform, and let us allow this not great although important work of taking observations concerning the weather, of promulgating those observations, and of making weather prognostications, whether for the benefit of the Army or of the shipping of this and other countries, or of the farmers and agriculturists of the country, to remain with the Army of the United States.

The Senator from Kansas knows that the work of the Engineer Corps of the Army upon rivers and harbors has no necessary relation to warfare. The whole river and harbor appropriation might be expended under a corps of civil engineers without one Army officer connected with the work. I believe the Senator from Kansas has intimated, if he has not directly stated, that he would be in favor of taking the expenditures upon our rivers and harbors entirely away from the Engineer Department of the Army and placing them in the hands of a civilian corps. The Senator nods assent; and I take occasion most completely and emphatically to differ with him, and to say that I believe this appropriate and most important work should be left right where it is, in the control of the engineer officers of the Army of the United States, whom we educate at West Point for work of this kind, and who are doing it more efficiently than it could be done by a corps of civil engineers.

Whether it is creditable to civil administration or not, it is an undeniable fact that there are fewer defalcations, fewer corruptions, fewer misappropriations of the public money in work conducted by the officers of the regular Army and Navy than there are when similar work is conducted by civil officers of the Government, and on this one ground alone, that of the greater security of the public money, it is wiser to utilize these officers, holding life positions of infinite value to them, in all kinds of service for the Government, which they may appropriately perform much better, than it is to double the expense of doing the work by committing it to civilian employés, while allowing your Army and your Navy to rust out only because jealousy, forsooth, of the Army and Navy of our Republic comes in to take from them work which they are so admirably educated and fitted to perform.

Returning, Mr. President, to the question of the wisdom of creating a Department of Agriculture, I desire to restate briefly my doubt upon that point, which I however waive in deference to the wishes, as represented by gentlemen in whom I have confidence, of the agriculturists of the country. My doubt is whether it is wise to add to the Cabinet ministers of the President one official whose labors have no relation whatever to the political conduct of the Government.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator make that distinction a little plainer? When he says "political" of course he does not mean in a party sense.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose that the Senator did not rise to ask me that question; did he?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, I did. Do you mean it in a party sense?

Mr. CHANDLER. I know the difference between "political" and "partisan," and I supposed the Senator did.

Mr. PLUMB. Then if I understand the Senator now, he means that the members of the Cabinet are simply the party agents of the President to discuss the questions relating to party and not of course those relating to the country in the larger sense of the term.

Mr. CHANDLER. I never said anything of that kind. I do not think any other Senator understood me to say that; and I do not think the Senator from Kansas did.

Mr. PLUMB. Then the Senator declines to make any explanation as to his meaning. I desired to predicate on that——

Mr. CHANDLER. I had barely entered on the subject when the Senator from Kansas rose and asked me to make my meaning a little plainer. Now, if the Senator will contain himself I shall go on and do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will try to contain himself. It is hard to do it, but still he will do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that the Senator asked me any question. I do not understand that it is asking a question, when a Senator enters upon a subject that is being discussed and says that he proposes to make his ideas clear, for another Senator to get up and ask that Senator to be a little more distinct.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish the Senator——

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course I recognize the right of the Senator, after I get through, to say that I have been very muddy, and that I have not explained the point at all; and I certainly would be glad to have him ask me any question that he wishes to ask, but not rise to ask me to speak more distinctly or plainly than I am doing when I begin a statement on a point. Now, if the Senator has any question to ask me I shall be very happy to hear it.

Mr. PLUMB. I wanted to know, when the Senator speaks of politics under the Administration as applicable to the other Cabinet ministers, whether he means party politics in the ordinary sense of the distribution of patronage, or whether he means in a larger sense; and if he means in a larger sense, in what way does he impute politics of that kind to the presence of the Attorney-General in the Cabinet, for instance?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am going to explain it to the Senator, if he will have patience. He knows I did not mean partisan members of the Cabinet. He knows I did not mean, when I spoke of the connection of the Secretary of State or the Attorney-General with the Cabinet, that they were to be partisans while the Commissioner or Secretary of Agriculture would be a non-partisan. The Senator knows I did not mean that. I think he does, at any rate.

While giving the testimony from which I have been reading I was called upon to state to the commission with the long name my views as to various suggested transfers from one Department of the Government to another, and especially with reference to a suggestion that there should be a department of science created, into which should be gathered all the Government officials engaged in doing scientific work; that we should have one department of that kind; and in that connection, also, it was directly suggested that there might be a department of public works. I conceded that there might be well enough, if Congress saw fit to create it, a department of public works; but I did not conceive that it was in accordance with our frame of government or with any legitimate method of carrying on the Government to have a department of science. I will read from my statement on that point, which I think ought to satisfy the Senator from Kansas as to my meaning, and I believe will do so if he is in his usually intelligent and receptive mental condition. I said:

My view is that all scientific work or art work which the Government of the United States has been engaged in, which is necessary or convenient for carrying on the Government, should be conducted within and under the direction of that Department which needs the scientific assistance, or the assistance of art, and that it would be a most anomalous proceeding to erect as a governmental department a department of science or of art. It would be very extraordinary to undertake to search the various political departments of the Government to see wherein any one of them avails itself of art processes or those of applied science, and in every such case to take that subject out from the political department and turn it over to a department the head of which should be only a scientist.

It would be unjustifiable, I should say, to thus set the scientists to grasping government. If the Government chooses, as it may properly, within certain limits, to go beyond the use of science and art in the actual conduct of governmental affairs and undertake to foster science, or art, or agriculture, or anything else not absolutely essential to government, then, as to these subjects so being fostered, my idea is that each should be placed under that department with which it has the most natural relation, and that you should not extend the powers of government to the fostering of either science, or art, or agriculture, or education, by establishing them as separate departments of the Government.

Q. Political departments?

A. Political departments.

I do not suppose that it ever occurred to any member of that commission, certainly it did not occur to the person whom they were interrogating, that the word "political" in that connection meant "partisan." It was reserved for the Senator from Kansas, when a Senator spoke of the seven present Cabinet ministers as engaged in the political work of carrying on the Government of the United States, and stated that a Department of Agriculture would not have any relation to the political conduct of the Government, to charge that it was meant that the seven existing members were to be partisans, members of one party only, and that the chief of the new department was to be non-partisan. I proceeded further:

The Constitution does not contemplate anything of that kind. It recognizes but three branches of the Government, the executive, legislative, and judicial. It does not recognize a scientific branch. It places the whole executive work upon the President. To aid him the Departments are established, and the heads of the Departments represent him, for although many duties are by statute specifically imposed upon the different Secretaries, yet after all they are placed upon them, so to speak, not in their own right, but as the representatives of the President of the United States. Those Executive Departments which the Constitution contemplates are political departments.

And now, if the Senator from Kansas will give me his attention, I notice that I defined what political departments are:

Departments that are actually necessary to the government of the country. The nation has foreign relations, so it has a State Department; it must have money, so it has a Treasury Department; it is liable to go to war, and so it has a War Department and a Navy Department; it must proceed according to law and enforce law, and so it has an Attorney-General.

I ask the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from South Carolina, who I am anxious shall also get my point, to note that an Attorney-General is in my judgment an essential part of the Government, and the work which he does is political work—not partisan work, but political work:

It must proceed according to law and enforce law, and so it has an Attorney-General.

But it is not equally necessary that it should have a Department of Agriculture.

It owns the public lands, and has the Indians on its hands, and so it needs an Interior Department; it chooses to make the mails of the United States a part of the Government, and so choosing it must have its Post-Office Department. All these functions are necessary to carry on the Government, but no particular scientific or art process is necessary in any one of them, or if it is, it is the appropriate duty of the Department which is aided thereby to take the subject under its charge.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. PLATT. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from New Hampshire if he would yield to a motion for adjournment, but first I desire to obtain an order from the Senate.

I ask that an order be made that the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, may be printed with the amendments which have been adopted by the House of Representatives numbered in order. I ask that the usual number of copies may be printed. There is a call for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be entered, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Now, with the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish before that is done to see if there can not be some agreement made about taking the vote. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill may be resumed at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, that the vote be taken either on the amendment or on the motion to lay the amendment on the table if it be renewed, at 2 o'clock, and that the succeeding votes necessary for the determination of the pleasure of the Senate in regard to the bill may be taken without intervening debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill may be resumed to-morrow morning at the close of the routine morning business; that the vote on the amendment, or the motion to lay it upon the table, may be taken at 2 o'clock; and that the subsequent proceedings in the consideration of the bill, including its passage, may be had without debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know how much time the Senator from New Hampshire will occupy in concluding his remarks.

Mr. PLUMB. I will change the time to 3 o'clock, so that there shall be no doubt about there being ample time. I shall not want to say anything myself at all.

Mr. HARRIS. If consent is given I shall not renew the motion to lay on the table, but leave the whole question open for debate until the hour comes for taking the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes the understanding to be that if debate shall be concluded earlier than 3 o'clock the vote may then be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. Necessarily?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that the subsequent proceedings shall be had without debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, a single suggestion. I have no remarks of any length to make upon the bill, for I have said what I desired to say; but if the motion the Senator from Tennessee proposes to make should not dispose of the subject, and we are still to have that provision in the bill after his motion has been acted upon, it will be open to amendment. I think that the proposition to transfer the Signal Service, if it is to remain in the bill, should be amended, and it may be necessary to say a few words in explaining an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I suggest that there shall be the usual debate under Rule VIII.

Mr. HAWLEY. Five minutes.

Mr. PLUMB. The limitation of Rule VIII.

Mr. BUTLER, and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then restate the proposed agreement, that there may be no misunderstanding. It is proposed that at 3 o'clock to-morrow, or earlier, the vote shall be taken upon the amendment of the committee, or upon the motion to lay the amendment on the table, and that the subsequent proceedings, including the vote upon the passage of the bill, are to be had under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to inquire how much time that is likely to leave for debate prior to 3 o'clock?

Mr. HARRIS. All the time after the close of the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the time after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should dislike very much to conclude my remarks and not leave time for the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not wish to say anything at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to cut him off.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say to the Senator that he can have all the time, if he sees fit, from the conclusion of the morning business until 3 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator does not appreciate my courtesy of course I do not press the suggestion, but I was really anxious that he should not be cut off.

Mr. PLUMB. I had stated before that I did not desire to say anything on the subject.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and at (5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 21, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HERMANN and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURNES. I can not yield at this time. We can dispose of this conference report, I think, in five minutes, and then go on with other business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. On this question the yeas and nays were ordered, and the question being taken no quorum voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the order for the yeas and nays be rescinded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be rescinded. The Chair hears none. The question is now on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question being taken, the report was not agreed to; there being—ayes 30, noes 47.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURNES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNES. Is it necessary that I should now ask for a further conference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair presumes a motion that the House further insist on its disagreement, and that a further conference with the Senate be requested would be in order.

Mr. BURNES. I make that motion.

Mr. PAYSON. Before that question is put I desire to offer a resolution in connection with the pending matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] move that the House insist on its disagreement?

Mr. BURNES. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House insist on its disagreement and ask a further conference, to which motion, as the Chair understands, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] moves an amendment in the nature of instructions.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill No. 110, in regard to the Library of Congress, and that the House request a further conference on the said bill, and it is hereby declared to be the judgment of this House that the following course should be followed: That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting conjointly, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications and estimates of cost for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of building not to exceed $4,000,000, and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications and estimates of cost. The said committees shall jointly report to Congress its action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888, and the said committees shall have the right to report at any time, and their reports on this subject shall be regarded as privileged and to be considered as such; that the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended and the commission authorized by act Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved; that the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including the buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the buildings for said Library of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department. The expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money already appropriated.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that with the exception of the provision that the reports of these two committees shall be privileged and entitled at any time to consideration, and the further provision that the maximum cost of the building shall not exceed $4,000,000 (instead of $3,000,000, as stated in the original proposition to the House), this measure is precisely the same as that which the House adopted in the first instance and sent to the Senate. It is taken from the print of the sundry civil bill as it passed the House. This is all I care to say.

Mr. ROGERS and Mr. BURNES addressed the Chair.

Mr. PAYSON. I will yield——

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask one question. Do I understand——

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to parliamentary inquiry. There being a privileged motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], to which an amendment is offered by the gentleman from Illinois, is this question debatable for an hour by any one moving an amendment?

Mr. PAYSON. Why not?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I merely wish to know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The matter is open for consideration, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. If any question of order is made, I shall be glad to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that any question of order is raised.

Mr. ROGERS. There was considerable disorder while this resolution of the gentleman from Illinois was being read; and as I am not familiar with the provision as passed by the House in the sundry civil bill, I desire to put one or two questions to my friend from Illinois for information. First, is it understood that under the proposed instruction just read the entire disbursement of these funds is to be made by the Interior Department?

Mr. PAYSON. The only proposition in this resolution with reference to disbursement of funds is such as is necessary to secure proper care for such property as will be confided to the Interior Department during the suspension of the work.

Mr. ROGERS. Then it does not revive in any sense the original statute?

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, not at all.

Mr. ROGERS. Does it repeal it?

Mr. PAYSON. It dissolves the commission. Such property of the Government as is on hand connected with this work (being the real estate, some tools, and other property) is to be confided to the charge of the Interior Department; and for such expenses as may be incident to the care of this property, and for this alone, the Interior Department is allowed to make disbursement.

Mr. ROGERS. Everything else then——

Mr. PAYSON. Everything else is suspended until the next session of Congress.

Mr. REED. And the building of the Library is postponed for another ten years.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Maine has not been in attendance, or he would know the proposed reports of this committee are privileged and entitled to consideration as soon as made.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Illinois knows perfectly well what the effect will be. The gentleman has been an opponent of the Library building from the beginning.

Mr. PAYSON. He has been. The gentleman from Maine will remember that before the committee had no privilege, and having the opposition of Mr. RANDALL, who was in a position on the other side of the House to defeat consideration, it was defeated. I wish to say to the gentleman from Maine I am not now opposed to the Library. I am in favor of the Library building and in favor of an appropriation for it.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Illinois has been part and parcel of the resistance to the Library building which cost over ten years. I leave the inference to the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I have the majority of the House with me and I hope it will continue so.

Mr. FARQUHAR rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYSON. I do, but only for a question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to ask the gentleman this question. Suppose this amendment which is proposed by the gentleman should pass, then in what condition would that leave any pending contracts? Does it cancel them at the cost to the United States?

Mr. PAYSON. Exactly.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It does.

Mr. PAYSON. If the committee should report against allowing the building to go on, it would leave the Government liable for damages for non-fulfillment of outstanding contracts. But I wish to say to the gentleman from New York, as I understand the report of the committee, there are only outstanding contracts for cement work and such work as is being performed in connection with the foundation of the west wing. Those are the only contracts so far as I understand, and no contract has been let for any portion of the superstructure or any work connected with it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

It further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, with amendments, and with the request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Senate had appointed as the conferees on its part Mr. SABIN, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. DOLPH.

It further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors," approved July 5, 1884.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House resumes consideration of the conference report.

Mr. REED. I have just come in and do not understand the situation. Is there an opportunity for a point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late. The House is considering the proposition.

Mr. REED. And it has been discussed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in process of considering it now.

Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. PAYSON. Before insisting on my right to the floor I desire to hear from the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURNES. Have I the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Illinois as having yet yielded the floor.

Sometime subsequently,

Mr. PAYSON said: I will withdraw the resolution after a conference I have had with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURNES. Then I insist on my motion that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced as managers on the part of the House at said conference Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN.

I. L. CAIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 97) for the relief of I. L. Cain; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MRS. FLORIDA KENNERLY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask for the present consideration of that bill, which was read on yesterday morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to Mrs. Florida Kennerly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $126.60.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill (H. R. 5142) of the same title will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LAWLER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STEPHENSON, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. SAWYER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHERMAN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WILLIAM F. C. NINDEMANN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to readjust the accounts of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy of the United States, serving on board the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, and to pay to him, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the pay of a seaman and the pay of a carpenter in the Navy from the 29th day of June, 1879, to the 1st day of June, 1883.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the report in this case be read.

The report of the Committee on Claims was read at length.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the length of time for which this difference in pay is asked?

Mr. FARQUHAR. A little over three years. The difference between the two is only a few dollars in point of fact, and under the agreement with Lieutenant De Long he is entitled to the pay because he performed the duties.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not think that with the light before me now—although I will try to examine and give my consent to the request of the gentleman from New York if I think it quite proper to do so—but with the lights before me I do not see the propriety of giving him this additional pay for three or four years when the expedition itself did not last so long.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that originally when Mr. Nindemann joined this expedition he joined it with the assurance that he should have the position of a boatswain of the vessel, and by reason of the fact that he had much experience in Arctic expeditions as one of the crew of former expeditions, and Mr. Nindemann performed the duties of a carpenter and as watch-officer, as the log-book of Captain De Long shows. There were other arrangements made by which an appointee of Mr. Bennett secured the position, which arrangements, of course, De Long knew nothing of; but Nindemann being an active, competent man, a good seaman, and a carpenter, was placed on duty as such and was so borne on the rolls according to De Long's report. Afterwards when the vessel was abandoned and sunk in the Arctic Ocean, Nindemann led the retreat into Siberia and through Siberia, and was largely instrumental in saving the lives of the survivors. There is another point which does not appear in the report, that there has been a considerable impairment of his health on account of the rigors of that retreat. The claimant is a most worthy man, and as the matter involves but a few dollars I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will look into it and give it a careful examination. It does not impress me favorably at present; but I will examine it and make a statement to the House later on. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Do I understand that this is still subject to be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has objected at present.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back to the House the bill (H. R. 11297) to suspend all laws touching the disposal of public lands except the homestead law, and for other purposes, with an amendment, which I desire to be submitted.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands of the United States shall be disposed of only under and according to the provisions of the homestead laws, except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, until the pending legislation affecting such lands shall be disposed of or the present Congress shall adjourn: Provided, That any isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of the public domain less than 160 acres may be ordered sold at private or public sale for not less than $1.25 per acre by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, when in his judgment it would be proper to do so.

SEC. 2. That during the pendency of the measures now before Congress in relation to the forfeiture of certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to railroad corporations and thereafter no act done or performed by any such corporation shall in any wise enlarge the right or claim of any such corporation to any lands covered by any such grant, or diminish any right now existing in the United States to declare the forfeiture thereof. This provision shall not be construed to in any wise affect or diminish or waive any right now existing in behalf of the United States to declare the forfeiture of any of the lands embraced in such grant.

The Clerk read from the report, as follows:

It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That all laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, except the homestead law and the laws in relation to mineral lands, and the laws touching the selection of public lands by States for educational or other purposes, shall be suspended until the pending legislation affecting the public lands shall be disposed of, or the present Congress shall adjourn.

Provided, however, That section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the laws in relation to the entry of coal lands shall also be suspended during the period named.

And in the last line of section 2 of the bill, after the word "in," insert "any;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That during the pendency of the measures now before Congress in relation to the forfeiture of certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to railroad corporations and thereafter, no act done or performed by any such corporation shall in anywise enlarge the right or claim of any such corporation to any lands covered by any such grant, or diminish any right now existing in the United States to declare the forfeiture thereof. This provision shall not be construed to in anywise affect or diminish or waive any right now existing in behalf of the United States to declare the forfeiture of any of the lands embraced in any such grant.

Mr. DINGLEY. Reserving all rights on the point of order, I desire to ask how this bill comes in here?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a privileged report, and comes in as such under the rules of the House. I submitted the matter to the Speaker of the House a few day ago, and it was found that it was within the rule.

Mr. RYAN. What laws are suspended by this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The timber-land laws, the right of private entry of the lands, the timber-culture laws, and the desert-land law. I wish to say in regard to the desert-land law that the operation of the bill is unimportant in view of the action already taken, if the Senate should not modify the provision now pending in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Mr. RYAN. The provisions in the sundry civil bill only apply to certain kinds of land.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. RYAN. It is limited particularly to such lands as may be irrigated from certain reservoirs and ditches; but this, as I understand the gentleman, suspends the law as regards all land.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. It applies to all lands that were desert lands in the first instance, and this only applies to such lands as are capable of being made agricultural lands.

Mr. ROGERS. There are two questions I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana. The first is this: Whether or not the bill in any way affects the commutation feature of the homestead law?

Mr. HOLMAN. It suspends that entirely for the time being; during the time it covers.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the period covered?

Mr. HOLMAN. The present Congress or until pending bills shall be acted upon.

Mr. ROGERS. During this Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. During the present Congress or until House bills before the Senate shall be acted upon.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask whether I understand the amendment was also reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I would like to make a statement here that there are two House bills pending before the Senate. The first section applies to the bill we passed. The bill passed provided that all agricultural lands shall be reserved for the benefit of actual settlers. That bill seeks to protect the coal lands. It seeks to protect from monopoly also the water lands. It is thought by those who have examined this subject that it is of the highest importance that there should be retained as part of the public domain lands that may by irrigation be adapted to agriculture and that they may be retained for actual settlers. In regard to the desert lands it may be said that under the present law these lands may be entered in sections of 640 acres. A great deal of the land reported as desert land is in fact agricultural land, as is well known; especially if you go North.

The present law throws no safeguards around these entries. Any person, no matter where he lives, may enter a section of desert lands; and in a recent case tried before the Commissioner of the Land Office it was found that lands to the extent of fifty or sixty thousand acres had been entered through a single movement by persons residing in New Jersey and New York, having no relation to the Territory of Wyoming where the lands are situated. The Commissioner of the Land Office found that these lands were entered for the benefit of a particular organized body and not for the benefit of the particular entryman; and inasmuch as these desert lands when they shall be reclaimed (and many of them have been reclaimed) prove to be the most valuable land we have, it would seem to be a very proper thing to suspend the law authorizing these entries at least so long as the 4th of March or until the general law has been passed.

The bill which has passed the House and which is now pending in the Senate, but which perhaps will not be acted upon during the present session, approaches as near as may be to the homestead law. It provides that no person shall enter these lands unless he be a resident of the State or Territory where the lands are situated, and it requires a payment of only 25 cents per acre as a guaranty of good faith in making the entry. It approaches as near as possible to the homestead law, but it allows entry to the extent of 320 acres instead of 160 acres as provided in the homestead law. So much as to the first section. The bill, however, leaves the homestead law in full operation and also the mining laws. They will remain in any event. It also leaves in force the existing laws in regard to the selection of lands by the States for educational and other purposes. But as to all the other land laws, the timber-land law, the pre-emption law, the timber-culture law, the right of private entry after the land has been offered at $1.25, it suspends them all until the further action of Congress.

Mr. RYAN. Is there any saving clause as to entries already made under those laws?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are not affected.

Mr. RYAN. But they would be affected unless there is some saving clause in the bill. If you suspend all those other laws, of course entries made under them can not be perfected.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman's criticism is perhaps proper. My impression was that the language used was "laws authorizing the entry of," but I see that the gentleman is right and that there ought to be a proviso added that no provision of this act shall affect the right to carry into final effect any entries heretofore made.

Mr. PERKINS. I said that it ought to apply not only to lands heretofore entered, but should also provide that this bill shall not be construed to interfere with existing rights under the existing laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. PERKINS. For instance, where settlers have gone upon the public domain and have secured rights but have not perfected them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that all rights already secured under the public-land laws should be preserved.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to explain what would be the effect of this bill on the entry of lands of a region that is all "desert" lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect would be that only entries under the homestead law would be made.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. But supposing a man has to go 40 miles for a drink of water in the morning, how is he going to live on his land as the homestead law requires? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted that there will not be many bona fide homestead entries on such lands. Besides, this bill does not interfere with the mining land laws at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the effect of the second section, which I think is the most important section of the bill.

RENOMINATION OF MR. KELLEY.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman pardon me for a moment to have a short personal telegram read. I make this request not so much as a matter of vanity, as to give notice to certain gentlemen who are looking forward to the occupancy by another of my seat here. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

The telegram was read, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., September 19, 1888.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, Member of Congress:

At noon you were unanimously renominated with the grandest hurrah. The convention say they will return you to Congress while you have breath left in your body. They will certainly do so. Now prepare for 1892.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. The man who is traveling toward this seat had better hold his horses for the present. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STOCKDALE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania vouch for the veracity of the author of that telegram? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, yes.

SUSPENSION OF PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the attention of the House to the provisions of the second section of the bill, and in order that they may be clearly understood by the House, I ask that that section be again read.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a suggestion before that is done. As I understand, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] made a point of order against this bill, and the gentleman who made the point of order and those who are interested in it do not desire to have it understood from this debate going on that the point of order is waived.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maine to reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that the second section be read, and I ask gentlemen to give it their close attention.

The Clerk read the section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That during the pendency of the measures now before Congress in relation to the forfeiture of certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to railroad corporations, and thereafter, no act done or performed by any such corporation shall in any wise enlarge the right or claim of any such corporation to any lands covered by any such grant, or diminish any right now existing in the United States to declare the forfeiture thereof. This provision shall not be construed to in anywise affect or diminish or waive any right now existing in behalf of the United States to declare the forfeiture of any of the lands embraced in such grant.

Mr. VANDEVER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether this bill comes before the House as a report from the committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; it is the report of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that this substitute ought to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill was printed long ago.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But not the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill was reported to the House and printed weeks ago.

Mr. DORSEY. On the 28th of August, I believe.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the substitute been printed?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a substitute for the first section; and I will state that, if any objection be made to that section, if any gentleman is opposed to that section and thinks we ought not to try to reserve for public settlement the remaining lands, I will, as I am aware there is no quorum present, consent to withdraw that section.

Mr. VANDEVER. The objectionable feature of the first section is that it gives the Commissioner of the Land Office the authority at his discretion to sell the land at private sale.

Mr. HOLMAN. That paragraph is not in this amendment, although it is in the original proposition.

Mr. DORSEY. I shall have to object to the consideration of the first section. I have no objection to the consideration of the second section; but in regard to the first, I give notice now that I object to it, and shall use all means in my power to defeat it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the principle involved in the substitute is exactly the same as that involved in the original proposition, except that the substitute continues in operation the mineral-land law and the laws which confer upon States the right to make selections of lands for educational and other purposes under various laws already in existence. That is the only difference between the two propositions.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. How will this affect land which may be acquired by the Government through the extinguishment of Indian titles—in the Indian Territory, for instance?

Mr. HOLMAN. It affects all those lands which have been restored to the public domain.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But how as to lands that may hereafter be restored?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the mean time this only operates until the 4th of March next.

I wish to explain further that the first section suspends for the time being the right to enter coal lands; and I will state the reason for this suspension. The House has already passed a resolution on this subject. It has been found that when coal land is discovered in our Western country it is regarded of such value that instantly organized movements are set on foot to appropriate it. In Wyoming, where there is a very considerable body of coal land, 2,000 acres have already been entered. That is said to be the finest coal bed in the whole West. It is claimed that it has a depth of 125 feet. An attempt has been made to take up all that land by entries of persons living in the city of New York. Those entries have been held in suspense for a number of years, but now patents to the extent of some 2,000 acres have been issued, leaving perhaps in that whole body ten or twelve thousand acres which are yet to be entered, or in regard to which the entries are questionable—where it is believed they are not bona fide. Under the authority of the House the Committee on Public Lands has made some inquiry into that subject. We had before us a witness who made a long detail of the facts in regard to a combination formed in New York for the purpose of entering the whole of that great body of coal lands in the Territory of Wyoming. It is for this reason we present this proposition to suspend for the time being the mineral-land law. As gentlemen will remember, the House passed some time ago a bill to reserve those lands from monopoly—to retain over them in some degree the control of the Government.

I should add further, as perhaps the strongest argument in favor of the passage of this bill, that during the past winter and spring it was found that the public lands in the five land States of the South were being entered upon with startling rapidity. Gentlemen from three of those States asked Congress to pass a resolution suspending, as to those States, the operation of the laws authorizing the entry of those lands, except the homestead law. That was done. Immediately the speculators turned their attention toward the other two States, in consequence of which a joint resolution was introduced in the Senate amending the first resolution so that it would apply to all of the five land States of the South, suspending during the present Congress or until this legislation shall be perfected the right of entry on the lands in those States except under the homestead law. Gentlemen can see the effect of this. The large field of speculation in the Southern States being thus closed, the attention of the land speculators is directed toward the lands in the West and Northwest. Perhaps no stronger argument in favor of the passage of this bill can be presented than that those five States of the South have thought it prudent that their lands should be thus reserved for actual settlers. The eyes of the land speculators have for this reason been turned to the West, especially to your timber lands there. Gentlemen must remember that in the present state of the law timber lands in the Pacific States and Territories may be entered at $2.25 an acre; and we are informed that recently a land syndicate in Scotland, through their agent in California—in Humboldt County, I believe—entered 49,000 acres of that land, the entrymen receiving for the services they rendered sometimes $50 and sometimes $100. The persons who carried on the transaction for the Scotch syndicate, making the contracts in their behalf, are to receive several dollars an acre for the land, though, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office tells me, large portions of that Humboldt County land are worth from $100 to $200 an acre.

I think in view of this statement gentlemen will see it is not a serious matter to anybody while it will be beneficial to thousands of people that these laws be suspended until Congress shall act on this general bill which has been carefully considered.

As to the second section, the House is aware there is an irreconcilable difference between the House and the Senate as to the forfeiture of land grants. The Senate insists on forfeiting only such lands as remain where no road has been constructed up to this time. That leaves about 5,000,000 acres of land. Some of it is valuable, but I can say a large part of it will not justify the construction of a road—that is, it is not of sufficient value to construct a road. Still it will be something, and of course those lands could be saved.

The House insists by its action, almost by a unanimous vote, only 4 negative votes I believe, and the principle is a correct one, that all lands not earned in conformity with law shall be declared forfeited. The House seems to have taken this position, that when you make a grant of public lands to a corporation you have the right to hold them to a strict accountability to the terms of the grant, and when they do not observe the law the lands shall be forfeited. The substitute for the Senate bill covers nearly 55,000,000 acres of land.

That is the state of the case. The Senate insist on their proposition and the House conferees insist on their proposition.

I submit this provision, that matters be suspended where they are for the time-being until that difference between the House and the Senate can be reconciled if possible. The suspension continues only until that general legislation is accomplished or until the present Congress adjourns on the 4th day of March next. It suspends the matter merely. It declares nothing done by railroad corporations hereafter shall change the status of matters; that the rights of the Government shall be hereafter what they are now, and shall continue in the same condition until the 4th of March next.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a single question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. My question is, whether the gentleman knows action on this bill will not interfere with the rights of persons who have made settlements upon the public lands of the United States under the law as it now exists?

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of fact they will be affected beneficially, as my friend will see, because it leaves the matters between the Government and the railroads as they are.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not refer to railroad lands, but does it leave settlers upon the public lands under the present laws to go on and perfect their titles?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the first section of the bill is subject to criticism on that score, let it be amended.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I have no objection if it does not interfere with the rights of the settlers to go on and perfect their titles.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing there shall be added this provision, that nothing contained in this act shall interfere with the rights of persons who enter public lands to perfect their titles.

Mr. HERMANN. That will not embrace those who have made filings?

Mr. HOLMAN. Formulate that amendment and I will accept it.

Mr. HERMANN. Save and except all rights already accrued. That will embrace those persons to whom I have referred.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will move, then, to add "subject to all rights heretofore accrued."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Acquired.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, "subject to all rights heretofore acquired."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I suggest further whether it is not entirely competent for us to make some provision by which these foreign syndicates shall not be permitted to enter upon the public lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the law now. It was the law of last Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. When were these entries made?

Mr. HOLMAN. Four or five years ago. Under the present law no further alien entries of public lands can be made.

Now, sir, I should be glad, if there is no objection, that the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Maine may be at once disposed of. While I still wish to retain the floor for a moment, I hope my friend from Maine will present his point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. The point of order, Mr. Speaker, was directed against the substitute for the first section, which it seems to me is not within the rule giving to this committee the right to report at any time; and if not within the rule it can not be offered as an amendment to a privileged report by the committee. As I understand, the rule provides that the Committee on the Public Lands shall be permitted to report at any time—

Bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations; bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

It seems to me that the substitute proposed is neither of these; and hence under the rulings of Mr. Speaker CARLISLE it can not be proposed as an amendment to a privileged bill. If the amendment is not privileged, of course it can not be offered or reported by the committee as a matter of privilege.

I wish to say while on this point that I am not certain I have any objection to this amendment itself, if it could be properly considered by the House and examined into. It seems to me that an amendment of this character which is so broad in its scope should not be considered without being printed and opportunity being given for an examination. Here is a measure which suspends all entries of public lands for a year——

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh no; only until the 4th of March.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, until the 4th of March; and presenting as it does a matter of so much importance, it should at least be printed, so that members may have an opportunity of studying its effect and examining carefully what may result from its adoption. The point of order I make is that this is not within the rule, however, permitting this committee to report at any time, not being either one of the three features committed to the Public Lands Committee, and on which said committee is privileged under the rules to report at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend makes the point of order, then, upon the substitute alone?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir; entirely upon the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend think the original section is better than the substitute?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not undertake to compare them. I do not speak of that. And I suggest that I would be entirely willing to withdraw the point of order if this could be printed and allowed to lie over for a day or so, so that the House could examine into its effect. It seems to me that to bring in a sweeping measure and pass it, as proposed here, without much consideration, is entirely wrong. What its effect may be I am unable to say at this time. I think the House should examine it; and if it can be laid over until to-morrow I am willing to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is a very reasonable and proper request, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that this matter may be recommitted to the committee and go over until to-morrow morning, with the understanding that it is to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask unanimous consent that this may be printed in the RECORD and go over until to-morrow, to come up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks that it be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean that the substitute be printed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will suggest that to-morrow is private bill day, and that this ought to go over until Saturday.

Mr. McRAE. This is a privileged matter and can be called up at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be printed and that the report be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands, so as to retain its privileged character, to be called up to-morrow or the next day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

[The substitute is printed in the preceding part of to-day's RECORD.]

THE CHINESE BILL.

Mr. MORROW. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORROW. I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Whereas the House of Representatives did, on the 3d day of September, 1888, pass the bill H. R. 11336, entitled "A supplement to an act entitled 'An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese,' approved the 6th day of May 1882," which said bill was on the same day reported to the Senate;

That it appears from the RECORD that said bill passed the Senate on the 17th day of September, 1888, and on the 18th day of September, 1888, was reported to this House by Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, as truly enrolled, whereupon the said bill was duly signed by the Speaker pro tempore of the House;

That thereafter and on the same day the said bill was reported to the Senate as having been so signed by the Speaker pro tempore of the House, whereupon it was duly signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate;

That the said bill having then passed both Houses, and having been duly enrolled and signed by the presiding officers of both Houses, was ready for transmittal to the President of the United States for his approval;

That it further appears that said bill was delivered to the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House on the 19th of September, 1888, and is now in the possession of the acting chairman of said committee, Mr. KILGORE, for such transmittal to the President;

That it is reported in the Washington Post of this morning that said bill is being withheld from the President by said Committee on Enrolled Bills; that such action of the committee is without authority of law: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That said Committee on Enrolled Bills be directed to transmit said bill to the President of the United States forthwith and without further delay.

Mr. MORROW. This resolution is founded in part upon an article in the Washington Post of this morning, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. McMILLIN. How does this matter come before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California states that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve the point of order as to this being a matter of privilege.

Mr. MORROW. I ask the Clerk to read the article from the Washington Post which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE CHINESE BILL AGAIN—A NEW POINT OF PARLIAMENTARY LAW RAISED YESTERDAY—AN EFFORT TO RECALL THE BILL—A PROBABILITY THAT IT MAY BE SUCCESSFUL—THE LIBRARY APPROPRIATION FURTHER DISCUSSED—OTHER CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

Ordinary people thought that when the Chinese exclusion bill was passed it was passed, but that was a mistake. Senator BLAIR's motion to reconsider held it back for another week. The disposition of Senator BLAIR's motion was regarded, even by parliamentarians, as the removal of the last bond that tied the bill to Congress and kept it back from the President. But those who thought so were only tyros in parliamentary law. Senator EDMUNDS showed the world yesterday that Congress had still a hold on the bill when he reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations the following order:

"Ordered, That the President of the Senate be directed to withhold the transmission to the House of Representatives of the act (House bill) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States until the further direction of the Senate."

He asked for its immediate consideration, but Mr. TELLER objected, and the order went over till to-day.

What will happen to-day depends on circumstances. Possibly Senator EDMUNDS's order may prevail, but it can not do so without the consent and co-operation of several officers of House and Senate, because, as a matter of fact, the bill has already passed out of the Senate's possession. It had already passed out of the Senate's possession when Senator EDMUNDS reported his order. Having passed out of the Senate's possession, it is out of the Senate's jurisdiction, and only by courtesy can Senator EDMUNDS's order become effective. At 12.45 yesterday Mr. Otis, clerk of the Senate Committee on Enrolled Bills, delivered the bill in question, duly signed, to Representative KILGORE, the acting chairman of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills. Such is the course always pursued in regard to bills which originate in the House. Senator INGALLS's signature as Presiding Officer of the Senate was appended to the bill at 5 o'clock on Tuesday, the Speaker of the House's signature having already been put to it.

Whatever Senator EDMUNDS or the entire Senate might do, Representative KILGORE, in his capacity as acting chairman of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills, might send the parchment to the President at any time. He might have sent it to the White House yesterday, for the Senate has no authority over him. The House might enjoin him, as Senator EDMUNDS is seeking to enjoin his committee, but with regard to him the Senate is powerless. However, Mr. KILGORE is going to be accommodating. He will hold back the bill until the Senate acts on Mr. EDMUNDS's motion, and if the Senate wants to have the bill back he will give it to them—that is to say, unless the House should in the mean time step in and order him to deliver the bill to the President instead of returning it to the Senate. The House has certainly that power if the Senate has the power which Senator EDMUNDS's order assumes. The opinion seems to prevail that this Chinese exclusion bill should not become a law in the face of the fact that it flies in the face of the treaty now pending between the United States and China, and which, according to the latest advices of the State Department, transmitted to the Senate on Tuesday, seems in a fair way to ratification. The bill to carry the treaty into effect was approved by the President a week ago.

Mr. MORROW. The resolution, as indicated, is founded in part upon the statement contained in that article, that the acting chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House is withholding this bill from the President, notwithstanding it has passed through all the various stages of legislation and is now ready for delivery to the Executive for his signature.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to know how this resolution gets before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It came up as a question of privilege.

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve all points of order. I will now make this point of order, that the resolution and statement accompanying it offered by the gentleman from California, which have been read from the Clerk's desk, do not constitute a question of privilege. There is no allegation of delay that is undue, unreasonable, or that is unusual; and as a matter of fact the delay in reference to bills is frequently much greater than it has been on this one. No wrong is imputed to the committee or to the gentleman from Texas. It does not present a question of privilege, and as such can not come before the House.

The foundations for the charge are rather against the Senate than the House, as the principal delay in passing the bill has been there. The rules provide no time within which a bill shall be transmitted from the Committee on Enrolled Bills to the executive department of the Government, nor is there a law that has been infringed that requires this action to be taken within a specified time.

Mr. MORROW. In reply to the gentleman——

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, let me state an additional ground of objection besides the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. Even if this is a matter of privilege, the statements here are simply ex parte statements of a newspaper. There is no way to verify what is said. The newspaper itself simply gives it as a matter of current rumor. There is no way of vouching for these statements upon which the House is expected to act, and this statement itself, as the gentleman from Tennessee says, simply goes on to state, but does not show, that there has been any unreasonable delay. My additional point, however, is that there are no facts presented as a question of privilege to the House out of which any question of privilege could arise.

Mr. MORROW. In reply to both the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], who have addressed the House on the point of order, I desire to say that this resolution is presented under Rule IX of the rules of the House of Representatives, which provides:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 11336) was introduced in the House on Monday, September 3, by Mr. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania. It passed the House on that day. The privilege of introducing it was obtained by unanimous consent. There was no objection made to the bill, and it passed after only a few minutes' debate. On the same day the bill was delivered to the Senate. I have referred to pages 9043 and 9044 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD concerning the introduction of the bill in the House. On page 9064 I find that the bill on that day was delivered to the Senate. This is the record: Bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

The next record we have of this bill is on page 9215 of the RECORD, from which we learn that the bill passed the Senate on September 7 on a vote of yeas 37, noes 3; but a motion to reconsider was at once interposed. The next we find of this bill is on page 9527, where the motion to reconsider was voted upon, resulting in ayes 20, noes 21.

The bill was thereupon reported to the House, and Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, on September 18, "reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same;" and in the list is to be found the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882, delivered to the Senate by Mr. Towles.

On the same day we find this bill was reported to the Senate as having been enrolled and ready for the signature of the President, and it appears that the President did sign the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. The President of the Senate.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, the President pro tempore of the Senate. We find on September 18 it was signed. It then had the signature of the Speaker pro tempore of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate. All that was necessary after that bill had been thus signed was for the Committee on Enrolled Bills to return it to the House for transmittal to the President of the United States.

Now, the only information contained in the preamble of this resolution that is not contained in the record of the House and Senate proceedings is the statement that the bill is withheld by the acting chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. As to that I can say that I spoke to the acting chairman of that committee yesterday, and he informed me that he had that bill; I applied to him to-day, and he informed me he still has the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think, so far as the point of order is concerned, that with reference to the evidence upon which the facts are presented it may be found in the official record of the proceedings of the House, and I claim that upon the facts therein contained the resolution is sufficiently founded. If the bill has gone to the President, that fact can be stated by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and that will dispose of this resolution.

With reference to the delay, or with reference to the fact that this may be a violation of the rules of the House, it makes no difference whether the bill is withheld one day or three months. If it is withheld at all that constitutes an offense against this House, because if the committee have a right to withhold it for any time they have a right to withhold it indefinitely, and the action of the House may thus be defeated by one of its committees.

The presumption must of course be that the officers of this House perform their duties according to law faithfully and promptly. Therefore if this bill was delivered to the Committee on Enrolled Bills the day before yesterday, signed by all the officers required by law to sign it, and was duly enrolled and signed and ready for delivery to the President of the United States, I submit that the rules of law and the rules of this House have been violated, because the rules require—not perhaps the express language of any rule, but our unwritten rules require that bills shall be delivered promptly to the President after they shall have gone through the various steps of action by Congress that I have indicated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please turn to the rule of law which in his judgment has been violated? Will he have it read at the Clerk's desk so that we may know its provisions?

Mr. MORROW. There is no written rule upon the subject as I understand, no written rule requiring the committee to transmit bills to the President at any given time; but I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky, who is an exceedingly good lawyer, that one of the rules of law, and one of the presumptions of law is that an officer charged with a duty will perform that duty faithfully and promptly; and with reference to the delivery to the President of the United States of a bill which has been passed by both Houses of Congress, one of the most important presumptions of duty that can exist is that that delivery will be made promptly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My question was simply for information. If this is a question of privilege for the reason that some rule of the House has been violated or because there has been a dereliction of duty under some law, then I ask the gentleman to have that law or rule read for the information of myself and other members of the House so that we may know what its terms are.

Mr. MORROW. Rule IX provides that questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That, however, is not a rule; it is merely a description of what a question of privilege is. As I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], he thinks there has been a rule violated by some one, either the Committee on Enrolled Bills or its chairman. It seems clear, however, that the chairman does not violate a rule by failing to do something which it is the duty of his committee to do; and if there is any violation it is by the committee. However, I understood the gentleman from California to say that there was some rule or some law which had been violated in this case, and I simply asked that he should have read for the information of the House the rule of law which in his judgment has been violated.

Mr. MORROW. I understood the gentleman's question. As I have said, there is no written rule requiring that the Committee on Enrolled Bills shall deliver a bill to the President within any specified time, but——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman admits that he knows of no rule that has been violated.

Mr. MORROW. No written rule.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, what law has been violated?

Mr. MORROW. The law which requires the prompt and orderly proceeding of the House for its own protection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman be kind enough to have that law sent to the Clerk's desk to be read for the information of the House?

Mr. MORROW. Of course, if the gentleman from Kentucky insists that every proceeding in this House shall be tested by a written rule, there will be many cases where we shall be unable to bring an offense against the integrity of our proceedings within any specific rule, although it may be such an offense as will not only impede but destroy the prompt and orderly proceeding of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I take for granted that the gentleman from California has examined this question carefully before undertaking to arraign at the bar of the House and of public opinion one of his colleagues on this floor in his official capacity, and my point was to get the gentleman to furnish the House the information which he presumably has himself as to the rule of the House or the rule of law which in his judgment has been violated.

Mr. MORROW. The resolution recites the proceedings in this House from the introduction of the bill down to the present time. From that recital it appears that a bill which has passed both Houses of Congress and has been signed by the proper officers of both Houses, has not been sent to the President of the United States. Now, I say if a committee of this House may withhold a bill at all, it may withhold it for three months, or indefinitely.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will my friend from California permit me to ask (for when he undertakes to smirch any of his fellow-members on this floor he ought at least to have law on his side) that he point out the rule or the law which fixes any particular time within which bills which have been signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses shall be transmitted to the President?

Mr. MORROW. I have told the gentleman already that there is no written rule or law; but there is the unwritten law which governs the parliamentary proceedings of a body of this character.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman admits, then, that there has been no violation of any rule or any law; that the trouble is in his mind, and the foundation for it has not existed twenty-four hours. That is the fact which I wanted to get before the House; and upon that I am ready to rest the case.

Mr. OATES. The resolution itself states that the bill did not come into the possession of the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills until yesterday.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The statement made by the gentleman himself shows that this bill has not been for twenty-four hours in the custody of any one whose duty he claims it was to carry it to the White House. I have never seen such precipitancy, such anxiety to do something, as the gentleman exhibits, and so little foundation for such great complaint.

Mr. MORROW. Well, I desire to say that, representing a constituency interested in this question, I have the right on this floor to insist that the bills which pass this House shall receive proper consideration and proceed in a prompt and orderly way through the various stages until submitted to the President for his sanction.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman is exercising now a right to arraign a fellow-member—for home consumption. That is all there is in it.

A MEMBER. What is the arraignment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. You pretend to arraign him for a violation of the rules of the House, and yet admit that no rule has been violated; you pretend to arraign him for a violation of law, and admit that no law has been violated. While doing this, you say that you represent your constituency; and we must assume that you are simply talking for home consumption. [Applause.]

Mr. ROWELL. Was this bill introduced "for home consumption?"

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was here co-operating in the effort to impose proper restrictions on Chinese immigration long before the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] was thought of as a member of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENNA. Why were you in such a hurry the other day to pass this bill, and why are you not in a hurry to-day to have it transmitted to the President? [Applause on the Republican side.] Why hasten the passage of the bill, and then delay sending it to the President? Is that "for home consumption?"

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state to my friend from California that I have at all times been "in a hurry" to try to put proper restrictions on the immigration of the Chinese——

Mr. MCKENNA. Keep it up, old fellow. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. But there is no power on earth, not even the loved ones left behind, that can cause me to do any such act as this toward a colleague "for home consumption."

Mr. MCKENNA. You will be one of "the loved ones left behind" next November. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Ah, my friend, I am willing to leave that to my constituents.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to raise the question——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to hear from gentlemen on the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, as I made the point of order, I will state this fact in support of it——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. MORROW. I had not surrendered the floor. I desire now to yield some time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER]. How much time does he desire?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Five minutes.

Mr. MORROW. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. With regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not desire to cut off the gentleman from California; but I submit that when he is addressing the Chair on a question of this character—a point of order—he can not yield his time to anybody. The Chair controls debate on those questions.

Mr. MORROW. We are discussing the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, on the point of order you have no time to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has control of the time on a point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman is "off" on his points of order, as on his other questions, all along the line.

Mr. Speaker, sufficient has been disclosed by the gentleman's confession to show every officer of this House guiltless of any impropriety in this matter. He admits substantially—and I submit this as pertinent to the point of order—that no question of privilege has been presented here. He admits that no law has been violated, that no rule has been transgressed, that this bill was not ready for transmission until within the last twenty-four hours; and I submit that to undertake the smirching of officers and the questioning of men's motives upon such a state of facts is an unheard-of proceeding. I resist any temptation to characterize the motive which may be the foundation of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California on the point of order.

Mr. MORROW. I had desired to yield some time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order that no rule or law has been violated in withholding this bill; that there is no rule or law requiring its transmission. I desire to call his attention and the attention of the House to the provision contained in section 7 of Article I of the Constitution, where it is provided that every bill after it has passed both Houses shall be submitted to the President for his approval or disapproval. In the contemplation of that provision of the Constitution, a bill, when it has passed both Houses, should be immediately transmitted to the President.

Mr. SPINOLA. Is that the language of the Constitution?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That is the substance of it.

Mr. WARNER. Allow me to suggest to my friend from New York whether in construing statutes we do not frequently take into consideration the urgent necessity of the measure——

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Most assuredly.

Mr. WARNER. And therefore, in regard to acts of Congress, it is reasonable to infer that in accordance with the Constitution they should be immediately transmitted to the President.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does any law so provide?

Mr. WARNER. Pardon me a moment further. Taking the circumstances connected with the action of this law-making body in regard to the passage of this bill, its introduction by a gentleman not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and its passage by unanimous consent, without consideration by that committee, is there not implied some great necessity for the immediate passage of this bill? Now, why should gentlemen object to a proposition which looks to its speedy transmission to the President?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire simply to suggest that on this matter the Constitution ought to have some weight——

Mr. MCKENNA. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] does not object, I would like to ask him a question, as he seems to have examined this matter. Has there been in the parliamentary history of this House any rule or law as to the mode in which bills should be presented to the President in pursuance of the constitutional requirement? I take it for granted the gentleman from California, in the absence of some provision of that kind, would not bring in a resolution like this.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I presume the Constitution should have some weight.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not disposed to take advantage of the point of order to discuss the political issue which my friend from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has undertaken to inject into this debate.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, I suggest that we tie this bill and the retaliation bill together——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That suggestion is not relevant—I will not use the legal word "impertinent," but it is not relevant to this discussion. The question which I desire to put to the gentleman from California and the gentleman from New York is whether there has ever been any legislative declaration by rule or law as to the mode in which the constitutional provision regarding the presentation of bills to the President should be executed. If so, what has it been?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The Constitution is explicit; and I submit that in conformity with it this bill should be transmitted to the President immediately. The Constitution is explicit in its direction.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that the Constitution is explicit or uses the words "immediately transmitted."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But that is a fair inference.

Mr. MCKENNA was recognized.

Mr. CRISP. Ah! but that is not what the gentleman said. The gentleman undertook to quote the Constitution.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It does not say that he shall transmit it next week or in ten days. It says——

Mr. CRISP. But the gentleman when he undertakes to quote the Constitution of his country should do it properly.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from California.

Mr. MCKENNA. I shall assume, then, for the purpose of argument, that it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to transmit a bill to the President when it is in a condition to be transmitted, and whether it must be done instantly or in one hour or in two days is not a question for the Speaker to determine as a question of privilege. As soon as it is ready for transmission it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to transmit it; and whether it has been done within a reasonable time by that committee or whether it has been retained an unreasonable time in its hands is not for the Speaker to decide, although that is a question possibly for the House to consider in determining whether it will pass this resolution or not. The basis of this resolution is founded in the newspaper charge which alleges that the committee has been derelict in its duty. I do not say that it has been. This is not the time to say that, if ever. But that is the allegation; and on the face of it it involves a charge against a committee of the House, in which the House is interested, and it presents a question, therefore, of the highest privilege for the immediate consideration of the House, namely, the action of its own committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this question? Why does the gentleman assume that it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to deliver bills to the President? Since that is the foundation of the gentleman's argument, why does he assume it?

Mr. MCKENNA. Whose duty is it, then?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not answering questions. I am suggesting questions for the gentleman to answer.

Mr. PAYSON. I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman to answer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why do you assume that it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. MCKENNA. I will give the gentleman from Kentucky an answer if he will permit me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is what I want.

Mr. MCKENNA. I will say it looks to me—only characterizing it as my own opinion, and not characterizing the action or opinion of anybody else—it looks to me like trifling with the subject to say here that after the Senate and the House have passed a bill and provision is made that it shall be transmitted to the President to sign, that it is not the duty of the committee having charge of this matter to see that it is promptly so transmitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But that does not answer the question. I know that we have a Committee on Enrolled Bills. I agree with the gentleman that it is a duty which somebody ought to perform. Now, why does the gentleman say that it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I will answer for the gentleman from California. The answer is because it is the universal custom of the House, and has been such from time immemorial, from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. PAYSON. It is a correct statement, and the only exception is when, in individual cases some member may feel a personal interest in an individual bill, and by the courtesy of the Committee on Enrolled Bills he may be intrusted with it and take it himself to the President for his signature. But it has been the invariable custom, it is the common law of the House in the transmission of bills to the President of the United States, and the only exception is as I have indicated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Has the gentleman ever served as a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, since he volunteers this opinion?

Mr. MCKENNA. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Kentucky wants information. Let us give it to him. The bill is detained, without doubt, because the President of the United States wants more than the constitutional ten days. The unwarranted delay and tardiness now on the other side is a fitting sequel to the haste attending the presentation of the bill. This is a continuation of the performance begun by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] to attempt in a demagogical way to make some capital for himself and his party. Everybody knows it. Now let the country and the House know just what it is and why it is. It is a "performance" from first to last, and let the House and the country understand it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCKENNA. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I beg pardon of the House for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from California will not interrupt my colleague, who does not speak often.

Mr. McKENNA. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman yielded the floor to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. McKENNA. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me suggest——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am addressing a suggestion to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McKENNA. Very well.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And it hardly seems to me it was due courtesy on the part of the gentleman from California to permit the gentleman from Illinois, in answer to a question I put to the gentleman from California, to be offensive and discourteous.

Mr. McKENNA. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I am not responsible for anything the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; the "gentleman from Illinois" is responsible for himself.

Mr. McKENNA. If the gentleman from Kentucky desires a portion of my time to reply I will gladly yield it to him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to put on record the statement that the interruption of the gentleman from Illinois was wholly voluntary; that in using the word "demagogical" he was undoubtedly both gratuitous and false, and that the discourteous and offensive manner of the gentleman, in his appeal to the galleries, was absolutely uncalled for and was evidence that he himself was guilty of what he was charging upon an absent member of the House—that is, guilty of an evident piece of miserable demagogy. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman from Tennessee was the first one to talk about demagoging in this case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Another eruption from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. ROWELL. I say the gentleman from Tennessee was the first man who accused gentlemen on this side of acting in a demagogic manner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has the floor.

Mr. McKENNA. I am trying to retain the floor, but I can not. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, in insisting upon this resolution and in arguing against this point of order it is no part of my purpose to cast a single reflection upon any gentleman; but still, Mr. Speaker, when it is stated in the public press, and not denied, that a bill is being held for other purposes besides proper legislative purposes, I think we have a right to take cognizance of it.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Senator EDMUNDS has been the cause of all this trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKENNA. In fairness to the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills I should say that my colleague [Mr. MORROW] and myself went to him this morning and told him that Senator EDMUNDS had withdrawn his resolution, or it had been put upon the table, and Mr. MORROW asked him to transmit the bill to the President of the United States, and he said he would do his duty in that regard. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That may or may not be an evasive answer. Lest it might be an evasive answer, and to prevent its being an evasive answer, we have introduced this resolution; and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McMILLIN. After he had told you he would do his duty! When it had been signed.

Mr. McKENNA. I expected you to ask that question, and you know it is very easy to say "I will do my duty;" which looks as if it were going to be executed, and yet it may not be done.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is a nice implication on a member of this House! Our method in my State is to do duty within the time that duty requires.

Mr. McKENNA. Without being as familiar with the amenities between gentlemen in Tennessee as I am in California, I will say if the gentleman will come out there we will give him as good evidence of nice and delicate sentiment as ever he came across in his life. We think we have the right to have this bill transmitted; that it ought not to be held here after it is ready to be transmitted to the President. We think it does present a question of privilege, and of the highest privilege; and as to the fact of the length of time, to repeat myself, that is a question of fact for the consideration of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend from California extend the courtesy of allowing me to make an explanation?

Mr. McKENNA. Yes, sir; if you have any explanation to make.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to say that I have found my friend from California uniformly courteous, and if, in the heat of debate, I have said anything that implied differently I would be sorry for it.

Mr. McKENNA. I accept the apology.

Mr. McMILLIN. What I want to ask the gentleman is, in view of the fact that this is in a certain measure a criticism of an officer of the House and one of its members, whether he does not know the fact that yesterday afternoon we had a roll-call when there was no quorum, and that members here would hardly feel it to be their duty to leave during that call? They would be compelled to remain here or leave the House without a quorum.

Mr. MORROW. We adjourned at half past 2.

Mr. McKENNA. I do not think this has anything to do with the fact there was no quorum. Mr. Speaker, I certainly think it is the duty of the committee to transmit the bill, and in view of the fact that Congress may adjourn at any moment, I think as this House passed this bill, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] implies, in good faith, and not for demagogic reasons, it is the duty of the committee to transmit it to the President so that he will have time enough to sign it and it may become law, or of sending it back with his reasons for not doing so.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I would like your attention for a few moments, because this is a question of some importance as a matter of practice. This is a resolution to instruct the Committee on Enrolled Bills to present a particular bill to the President.

The gentlemen say that it is the duty of that committee to present to the President bills which have passed and been duly enrolled and signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses, and that therefore this resolution instructing that committee so to do is a privileged resolution. The gentleman from California who presents this resolution does not charge that the Committee on Enrolled Bills have failed in the discharge of their duty. He quotes from a newspaper something as being "reported." The paper gives no one as authority for the statement, as I caught it from the hurried reading, but adds that it was in the power of Mr. KILGORE, on that committee, to hold this bill for some time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it can not be conceived to be a matter of privilege to instruct any committee of the House under such circumstances to do any act. I do not wish to be understood as saying that it is not within the power of the House to instruct them, but it is not a matter of privilege. If they are to be instructed in the matter, it must be done upon the statement of some member of the House that the committee have failed to do what they ought to do.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. MORROW. If it should appear upon investigation, or from any proper report of a member of this House, that a bill was being retained unreasonably, would not that be such a case as would come under that provision of Rule IX which relates to the integrity of the proceedings of the House?

Mr. CRISP. I am not prepared to say that it would come under that rule; but I am prepared to say that it would be in the power of the House to order the bill to be transmitted to the President either by the Committee on Enrolled Bills or the Clerk.

Mr. REED. Why not as a question of privilege?

Mr. CRISP. Because it is not defined as one of the questions of privilege.

Mr. REED. Is it not a part of the integrity of the proceedings of the House? Does it not concern the honor and the dignity of the House?

Mr. CRISP. Clearly not, I think, unless, as I have said, some gentleman should state in his place here that the proper and ordinary course of proceeding had been violated.

Mr. REED. That is addressed not to the question of privilege, but to the question of how the House shall act upon it. Whether the evidence is sufficient is one thing; whether this is a question of privilege is another.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if you accept the statement of the gentleman from Maine, it follows that on every occasion when the Speaker lays before the House an enrolled bill and signs it, it shall then be in order for a member to rise on the floor and move that the bill be at once transmitted to the President. Would that be the ordinary course of business in the House? Is it any violation of privilege to avoid that rule when, in fact, in the whole history of the Government it has never been done? For, so far as I know, there has never been an example of that sort.

Mr. REED. There has never before been a blunder such as this.

Mr. CRISP. Why, Mr. Speaker, coming to the merits of the question, perhaps the gentleman from Maine does not know that this bill only reached the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] on yesterday. I assume that the gentleman from Maine did not know that fact, or he would not have been guilty of the injustice of making the statement that has just fallen from him.

Mr. REED. Oh, I did not refer to that blunder. I referred to the blunder of introducing the bill and running it through here. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. REED. But you have made so many blunders over there that I do not wonder you were in doubt as to which one I referred to. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I shall not wander off into that question at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, no member rises here and says that the Committee on Enrolled Bills have failed to do what they ought to have done. No member rises and says, by his own statement of fact, or even as a matter of rumor, that they have failed to do anything which they ought to have done. And yet, sir, a new practice is proposed to be introduced here for the first time. Within less than twenty-four hours after the receipt of a bill by the Committee on Enrolled Bills this resolution is introduced, and the framer of the resolution, seeking to make a question of privilege, quotes his "whereases" from a newspaper article, and does not take the personal responsibility of making the statement himself.

Mr. MORROW. Let me correct the gentleman. The statement in the "whereas" is taken from the record of the official proceedings of the two Houses. In my remarks I had read an article from the Washington Post, but that is not contained in the "whereas."

Mr. CRISP. Further, Mr. Speaker, to show the impropriety of this course, the gentleman recites in his resolution the action of the Senate. Whether he does that for the purpose of condemning his Republican friends who delayed the bill in the Senate I do not know; but, however that may be, he recites the proceedings of the Senate which show that the bill only came to the House Committee on Enrolled Bills yesterday. Now, if it is to be understood that this is a question of privilege, then the rule will be established that whenever the presiding officer lays before the House a bill as duly enrolled, and signs it, any gentleman may rise upon the floor and, as a matter of privilege, immediately move that that bill be transmitted to the President.

That is the ruling which you are asked to make. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing in this case to even suggest the propriety of such a ruling, as there is nothing in the rules to authorize any proceeding of this sort. My idea is that whenever a member rises and states on his own responsibility that the orderly course of the transmission of bills from this House to the President of the United States has been interrupted or has not been carried out, then he has the right to ask an order of the House that the usual course be observed. But he must state or show in some satisfactory way that the orderly rule or custom of the House is not being observed. In this case nothing whatever of that sort appears, and I think it would be both inconvenient and improper to hold, under the circumstances, that this resolution was a privileged one.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order made upon a resolution like this is in the nature of a demurrer to the legal sufficiency of the resolution. Unless that resolution states in an orderly legal manner facts out of which a question of privilege necessarily arises, then the Chair must sustain the point made against it. Now, what are these statements? The resolution goes on to aver under a whereas several occurrences, and then says this bill came into the possession of the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills yesterday. If now it had gone further and said, "Whereas the chairman has failed, does fail, and refuses to carry that bill to the President," that would have been an allegation which would perhaps have raised a question of privilege. But the resolution does not state at all that the chairman of the committee has refused to carry the bill to the President or that he fails in any duty whatever. It simply states that it is reported in the Washington Post that he does not intend to do it. As a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you the question whether such an allegation is good in law. It is an averment not that a fact exists, but that a newspaper reports that it exists. The resolution does not even aver that the newspaper states it is true. The averment is simply that the newspaper gives it as a report. Now, it is very certain that in order to make this a question of privilege the resolution ought to charge in plain language a willful failure of duty. If there were such an allegation, this would be a question of privilege; but the resolution simply avers that there is a report in a newspaper or somewhere else that Mr. KILGORE fails or refuses to perform his duty, and that is no sufficient allegation at all.

Mr. REED. There is a statement made by a member that he has not performed his duty.

Mr. HERBERT. When we come to statements made by a member we take them to be true; but I submit that no imputation against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] can arise——

Mr. REED. This is not a question of "imputation;" it is a question of having the business done.

Mr. HERBERT. It is a question of having the business done in a manner affecting the integrity of the proceedings. Now, as I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], he simply said that on yesterday morning he asked the gentleman from Texas——

A MEMBER. This morning.

Mr. MORROW. No; yesterday morning I asked him, and he told me he would send the bill to the President yesterday. The House adjourned at half past two, which, it would seem, gave him the opportunity to send it, but it was not sent. I asked him this morning about it and he told me——

Mr. HERBERT. That he still had it.

Mr. MORROW. That he still had the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. That is the way I understood the statement of the gentleman from California.

Mr. REED. There seems to be something more than rumor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you argue that the bill has gone to the President, notwithstanding that statement?

Mr. HERBERT. No. Now let me come to the question. Does the statement of the gentleman from California which he makes on the floor when taken in connection with the resolution constitute this a question of privilege? I say clearly not. In the first place, the resolution must be judged by itself. It can not be supplemented by an oral statement. The resolution of itself, as I have shown, raises no question of privilege. What the gentleman from California says, even if incorporated in it, could not help the case. The gentleman from California says, and that is all he does say, that the gentleman from Texas has had the bill in his possession for twenty-four hours. It is perfectly clear that no inference of any intent against the dignity or safety of this House or the integrity of its proceedings can be drawn from this. Now, I wish to go a step farther. That completely disposes of the question of privilege so far as the resolution is concerned. We will suppose that, complying with what seems to be or may be a wish on the part of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills has retained in his possession for one, two, three, or four days or any other reasonable time a bill to see what action the Senate would take on it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has not the bill been already passed by the Senate?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; it has been already passed by the Senate.

Mr. RYAN. Is it within the jurisdiction of the Senate?

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will let me state my point I will proceed to do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly; I will not interrupt him if he does not wish it.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand that Senator EDMUNDS, one of the best lawyers in either branch of Congress, as well informed in reference to the rules pertaining to the conduct of business of both Houses as any other gentleman, has introduced a resolution——

Mr. REED. He has had that resolution laid on the table and proposes to take no further proceedings.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know about that.

Mr. REED. That is the trouble.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It has passed beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate.

Mr. HERBERT. Was that done to-day?

Mr. ROGERS. In the last hour and a half.

Mr. HERBERT. In the last hour and a half, or that is while we have been discussing this question. Suppose Senator EDMUNDS introduced a resolution——

Mr. BOUTELLE. What was the resolution?

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the effect of the resolution was that Congress should retain the bill in its possession.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It makes a difference to know exactly what that resolution is as bearing on your remarks. I do not think you understand what it is.

Mr. SPINOLA. Here is the resolution.

Mr. HERBERT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York so he may read it.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will read the resolution adopted in the Senate on motion of Senator EDMUNDS. It is as follows:

Ordered, That the President of the Senate be directed to withhold the transmission to the House of Representatives of the act (House bill 11336) entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States" until the further direction of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SPINOLA. That was laid over.

Mr. REED. That is a direction to the officers of the Senate, and not a direction to the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House.

Mr. SPINOLA. That was the direction.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield further. Without undertaking to say what they were, Senator EDMUNDS took steps to arrest that bill in Congress.

Mr. REED. Not here, but in the Senate——

Mr. HERBERT. To prevent it going to the President. Now, sir, if to await the result of such a proceeding, inaugurated in the Senate by a distinguished member of that body, the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills should delay a reasonable time to see whether or not the House would respond to the action of the Senate, would it be anything more than simply a courteous act? He certainly would not be guilty of an intentional violation of the law by so doing. He would not, by conduct of that sort, furnish ground for a resolution which proceeds upon the idea that he is guilty of gross misconduct—that is it—that by his misconduct he is striking a blow at the integrity of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of privilege unless something has been done or is being done which strikes at the integrity of the House. Would any member on the facts before the House, upon the statement in the resolution, this bill being in his hands only for twenty-four hours, would the gentleman from California say that the gentleman from Texas disregarded his duty to the extent of violating the integrity of the proceedings of this House? Would any gentleman dare to do it?

When he framed the resolution the gentleman from California had that in his mind, but when he came to putting it down on paper he hesitated and dared not so state. He simply said in the resolution that a newspaper had published such a report. Whether the report was true or not, the writer of the resolution would not take the responsibility of averring even in an unsworn resolution. That is all there is in that. And then twenty-four hours in the hands of the committee! That is a short time. What is the average? Since this matter has been under consideration, I am informed that two hundred cases have been examined, and that the average time a bill is kept by the committee is three days and over. If so, is not this resolution just a little premature?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why does the gentleman state that there is no allegation except a "newspaper statement" that this bill has not been properly forwarded, when the gentleman from California states that on two occasions the chairman of the committee told him it had not been carried to the President—two interviews twenty-four hours apart?

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, to continue——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Have you any reason to believe that the President has come here and got the bill himself?

Mr. HERBERT. None in the world.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you think he ought to have come for that purpose?

Mr. HERBERT. No. And, Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of question the gentleman from Maine has interrupted me to ask!

Mr. BOUTELLE. And to which I would like to have an answer.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman from Alabama state what is the rule in regard to the transmission of bills to the President after the signatures of the presiding officers of both Houses have been appended?

Mr. HERBERT. Of course the rule is that rule of law which always prevails in the House, and in every other body everywhere the common law prevails, that where no time is mentioned it must be a reasonable time. But it is utterly unreasonable for gentlemen, when a bill has been in the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills only twenty-four hours, to complain of delay in its transmission when the precedents show at least three days to be the time ordinarily occupied in transmitting a bill.

Mr. HOLMES. Does not the gentleman from Alabama know that it is the custom of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to transmit bills to the President on the same day they come into the hands of the members of the committee?

Mr. HERBERT. No, I do not know anything of the kind. On the contrary, I have been informed, and I believe the information to be true, that the average is three days.

Mr. HOLMES. That is not the rule. I have been a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and know the facts and the custom. It has been customary to send them to the President on the same day.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order, and is then ready to rule.

Mr. PAYSON. I shall endeavor to confine myself directly to the point of order against the resolution, which I believe to be a privileged resolution. I believe the gentleman from California had a right to present the resolution, and I think the decision on the point of order ought to be against it.

When this matter was first presented, I had some doubts on the question, but upon five minutes' reflection I have come to what I believe to be the correct conclusion—certainly it is the settled conclusion in my own mind, whether the Speaker agrees with me or not—that this is a privileged matter.

First, I concede that there is no written rule of this House that is being violated by the conduct of the Committee on Enrolled Bills with reference to this matter. I agree that there has never been since I began a course of service in public life any rule in express terms requiring the Committee on Enrolled Bills to go individually as an errand boy between the House and the President to convey bills for his signature. But what member does not know that, all through the history of the jurisprudence in this and in every other country, there are certain presumptions that always attach to the acts of public officers? I know that there are certain axioms at the basis of official action that are as binding and effective upon public officers in the performance of duty as though contained in express terms in statutes or constitutions. Among them is this: That whenever a duty is imposed upon a public officer the obligation rests upon him to perform it within a reasonable time and with due diligence, and that to be determined by the importance of the duty devolved upon him by law. The instances are not infrequent; they are found in the pages of nearly every report of decided cases in every State of the Union, and without exception, that officers have been held liable upon their official bonds for failure to perform a duty wherein no time is fixed, because it was not performed within a reasonable time.

Now, sir, does any presumption attach when the Constitution of the United States requires that every act of Congress when passed shall be transmitted to the President of the United States for his signature? There is unquestionably a presumption attaching that this duty is to be performed within a reasonable time. Does any responsibility rest with the party upon whom that duty devolves? Upon whom does it devolve? That duty devolves, by the common law of the House, upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills. It has ever been so, and it is so to-day, and by the uniform rule and practice of the House and the constant custom of the House nobody has the right to the possession of a bill after it receives the indorsement of the President of the Senate and the Speaker pro tempore of the House, as now organized, except the Committee on Enrolled Bills or some member of the House to whom the Committee on Enrolled Bills may by courtesy see proper to intrust the duty of transmission to the President.

The whole course of conducting and the whole control of all bills under our rules goes to that committee. There are seven members of it. Now, then, what is their duty? Here is a bill as submitted to it, and the question is whether or not the chairman is going to do his duty within a reasonable time. Here is a bill that upon its face affects the relations between this nation and the most populous nation on the globe. This is a question of intercourse between ourselves and them. I do not refer to this as bearing upon the point of order, but as being of sufficient importance to justify its being presented here by a prominent gentleman upon the other side without notice to anybody representing the section of country directly affected. It was passed without an opportunity of inspecting its provisions scarcely, and sent to the Senate only a short time after it was introduced here. There it was passed, and comes back to this body as the body in which it originated, and is a matured bill so far as the legislative branch of the Government is concerned. It has been signed by the executive of the other branch, has received the approval of the Speaker pro tempore, and it is now in the orderly course of business covered by that provision of our rules where the expression is used "the integrity of its proceedings." It would go in the regular way to the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills yesterday morning.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; I will permit you to ask a question simply.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact, or if it is not a part of the custom, that the Committee on Enrolled Bills retain these bills for three days or about that time?

Mr. PAYSON. I will come to that. I beg the gentleman will not anticipate me; and I hope if the gentleman desires to ask me a question he will honor me with his attention. I said a few moments ago on the question of what was a reasonable time for the performance of any duty on the part of a public officer would depend upon the character of the business he was called upon to transact and its importance, and all that sort of thing.

Now I am coming to the question. What may be a reasonable time within which the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and its members may be permitted to retain a bill providing for the issuing of a dog-tax for the District of Columbia or may be involved in the payment of $8.27 excess of customs duties is another matter. The Committee on Enrolled Bills may be warranted in retaining bills of that trifling character for a day or two days when they might not to be justified, Mr. Speaker, in retaining a bill which affects the relations of 60,000,000 of people here and 300,000,000 of people across the sea.

What may be a reasonable allowance to the gentlemen on that committee in one case clearly would not be in another. Every bill passed by Congress is an expression of legislative will. We are here representing in a legislative capacity the judgment of 60,000,000 people, and when this Chinese-restriction bill was passed it evinced upon paper and crystallized into law the judgment of the people of this country in so far as it could what was our will and determination; and it was the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to see to it that a bill of that magnitude and of that character should go into the hands of the Executive at the earliest possible moment. Now, I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that we adjourned yesterday at 2 o'clock, as the RECORD shows, after which presumably the members of that committee would have had ample time to perform other duties. The business of the House of Representatives detained not one of its members after 2 o'clock from the performance of their duty with reference to this bill, and yet it is still in the hands of one of the gentlemen composing that committee. Now, what is the condition? Gentlemen representing the Pacific coast on this floor, being desirous that the bill should become law and desiring that the President should have the power of approval or disapproval, go to the gentleman having charge of it and ask him what is its condition. It went to that committee yesterday, and it is detained there; and to-day these gentlemen, Mr. MORROW and Mr. MCKENNA, go and make the same inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. What reply do they get from him? Simply the lofty announcement that he will perform his duty. Now let us stop and think a minute. Are the interests of both Houses of Congress and the expressed will of sixty millions of people to depend on the discretion and judgment of the gentleman from Texas as to when or how he shall perform his duty? That is the first question, and it stands in limine upon the threshold of this proposition. What discretion has he about it? It is his business to do this duty at the earliest practicable moment, but he allows two days to lapse (because to-day is practically gone), and he still sits here in his seat.

Now, these facts are brought to the official notice of this body, for I assert a proposition which I think nobody on the other side will deny when I say that the official statement made by the two gentlemen from California in their official capacity is of equal weight in this House as if it had been reduced to writing and read from the Clerk's desk. These two gentlemen aver to this House that for two successive days they have endeavored to get this bill to the President, and that the only reason it has not gone there is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], in his judgment and in the exercise of his discretion as to how he shall perform his public duty, prefers to retain it in his desk in his committee-room. If that does not present a question of privilege nothing can. What is the integrity of the proceedings of this body? It is the orderly conduct of the public business here and its transaction in such a way that not only shall the acts of the House not be rendered nugatory, but that they shall proceed in an orderly, practical, and reasonably speedy manner.

There is nothing in this resolution reflecting on the Committee on Enrolled Bills. The recital of facts is taken from the records of this House and supplemented by the official statement of both the gentlemen from California as to the position assumed by the gentleman from Texas. The question is presented: If the gentleman from Texas chooses to retain a bill to-day, why may he not choose to retain it to-morrow and the next day? Why may he not retain it for four or five days yet to come, or much longer? Possibly there is no violation of any express provision of the technical rules of the House, but the question is presented by this resolution: Has the House of Representatives the right to instruct its committees to do their duty and to do it promptly? That is all there is about it. Does anybody deny that it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to take this bill to the President? Nobody denies that. Have they had an opportunity to take it there? Nobody denies that they have. The House was in session only a short time yesterday afternoon, and some member of the committee could have taken the bill to the President yesterday, or if not yesterday it could have been done to-day. This duty is unperformed. It ought to be performed, and this resolution simply instructs the committee that the will of the House must be enforced even against the exercise of the discretion of the gentleman from Texas as to when this bill shall reach the President of the United States. If that is not a privileged question, it seems to me to be idle to undertake to assume that anything is a privileged question. The case seems perfectly clear. The duty is unperformed and the House is not advised that it ever will be performed unless the gentleman from Texas shall, in the exercise of his discretion, determine that the time has come for him to take a carriage and go to the White House with this bill. It seems to me that the question is a question of privilege and that this resolution ought to prevail.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a question not so much about the pending bill as about the general business of the House, and when the discussion was opened this morning, I in good faith asked the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], who had introduced the resolution, whether there was any written rule of law governing this matter. He frankly answered that there was none that he knew of. I then asked his colleague, equally in good faith, without any disposition to take part in any partisan debate upon the merits of the bill, whether there had ever been any written rule as to the mode of executing the constitutional provision. I knew there had been joint rules between the Senate and the House in former days at different times, and that those joint rules were not now in existence, but I thought it possible that there had been at some time in the nearly one hundred years of our constitutional history some written mode agreed upon for the execution of this constitutional provision. I do not know yet whether there has been or not. It seems that there is a different practice in the Senate from that in the House. The Senate, as I am informed, sends its bills to the President by its Secretary, one of its ministerial officers. The custom of the House is and has been for some years—how many I do not know—that the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, indifferently, take the bills to the President for his signature. Sometimes, I am informed, this is done by the chairman of the committee, and sometimes by the other members; there has been no uniform custom about it, and the committee as an official body does not habitually meet and in organized form as a committee go over the bills and then take them to the President.

Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to present these bills to the President or it is not. If it is their duty to do it, then it is the duty of the committee, not of the chairman, and it must be done as the official act of the committee. Therefore, if that be true, this resolution, when you reduce it to its plain English meaning, is simply to discharge the Committee on Enrolled Bills from the performance of this duty. That committee stands in no higher relation to this House than do our other committees. It is simply an organ of the House, exactly like the Committee on Private Claims, or like the Committee on Elections, or any other committee. It is the duty of those committees to act upon the matters referred to them within a proper and reasonable time; but who ever claimed that it was a question of privilege for any member to rise here and offer a resolution to discharge a committee from the consideration of a measure and to bring that measure back to the House. That is done by unanimous consent or on suspension day? The Committee on Enrolled Bills, acting as a committee, is charged with certain duties. Assuming that the presentation of bills to the President is one of the duties of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] moves that the committee be discharged from the performance of that duty, and that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] by name be required to perform it.

Mr. MORROW. The gentleman is quite incorrect in that statement. The resolution simply requires that the Committee on Enrolled Bills shall transmit this bill to the President. The name of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is not mentioned.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Upon what ground is it a question of privilege to move that the committee be discharged from doing this duty in a certain way and be ordered to do it in another given way and at a given time?

Mr. MORROW. There are two propositions involved. The first is that this resolution is privileged under the rule as to the integrity of the proceedings of the House and the integrity of its proceedings authorizes a member to introduce a resolution ordering that a certain thing shall be done; but the question of privilege does not necessarily extend to the execution of the order of the House. The House having considered the matter under a question of privilege, executes its order without regard to the question of privilege.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This relates, the gentleman says, to the dignity and integrity of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And my point is, that this question does not come under that head any more than a motion for the discharge of any committee from the consideration of any bill that may be before that committee. It is not a question of privilege for the gentleman from California or any other gentleman to rise in his place here and move that a committee, as for instance the Committee on Elections, a committee having the highest privilege, be discharged from the further consideration of a matter which may have been referred to it.

Mr. MORROW. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state one more, for I do not think he desires to misconstrue my remarks——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Kentucky is through with his remarks, the Chair is ready to rule on this question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the Chair is ready to decide the question, I will only say, in conclusion, as I think I ought to say, that, so far as I am concerned, I have not voluntarily or of my own motion entered into any dispute about the merits of this bill, nor did I intend to participate in any partisan debate. What I have done that may be so construed it seemed impossible for me to avoid under the circumstances.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair pardon me one moment. I do not wish to speak to the question of order. I only desire to submit to the Chair, as preliminary to a decision, this remark—that the question whether this matter presents a question of privilege is one of fact, that fact depending upon the conduct of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. If he is in default, if he is not performing his duty, then it is our privilege to instruct him. If he is performing his duty, then this matter does not raise any question of privilege. I think that before this question is decided we ought to hear from the gentleman from Texas as to what his course on this subject has been or what the course of the committee has been.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). In the opinion of the Chair this resolution does not present a question of privilege. If the resolution were properly before the House, being a resolution directing the Committee on Enrolled Bills to transmit a certain bill to the President of the United States forthwith, the House could no doubt adopt the resolution. But the point raised here is whether, as this resolution now reaches the House, it is a question of privilege. The point involved relates to the presentation of bills to the President after they are signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. In the absence of any law on the subject or any rule governing the House in respect to this matter, reference has been made to the Constitution, which provides in section 7 of Article I that—

> Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States.

No time is fixed within which this presentation shall be made; there is no limit; the provision does not say "forthwith" or "immediately." The question presented therefore is not so much a question of law or constitutional interpretation as a question of practice. The custom has grown up within the knowledge of the Chair—it is an old custom—for the Committee on Enrolled Bills to carry these bills to the President. We do not do as the Senate does. According to the practice of the House the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, either by direction of his committee or by reason of his function as chairman, takes these bills to the President. Within what time? There is no rule or law operating upon him in this respect.

In this resolution there is no reflection made upon this committee, none whatever. The only allegation in the resolution is based upon a statement taken from the Washington Post "that said bill is being withheld from the President by said Committee on Enrolled Bills; that such action of the committee is without authority of law." That is the statement of a newspaper; it is a part of the allegata; there is no proof of it. There is no statement of anything reflecting on the committee; no allegation of any impropriety; nothing involving the integrity of the committee or the integrity of the House in any sense of the word "integrity."

Is this a question of privilege under those circumstances? What is a question of privilege? It is that which involves the safety, the dignity, or integrity of the House or its members or of its proceedings. This does not in any way involve the safety or dignity of the House, and according to the statement of the gentleman submitting the proposition it does not involve the integrity of the gentleman from Texas or of the committee.

Has there been in this case unusual delay? The actual lapse of time appears to have been one day. The Chair has made inquiry into this matter, and finds, according to the report of the Clerk, that the time within which bills passed by the Senate and House and signed by their respective presiding officers reach the President varies from one to ten days, the average being three days. Non constat that the President may be out of town, or that there may be some other impediment. Possibly this Committee on Enrolled Bills is obliged to compare this bill in accordance with its function in these cases.

So that, neither in the statement of the resolution nor the statement of members on the floor, is there any imputation upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills. Hence the Chair decides that this is not a question of privilege. If the resolution should properly come before the House it would no doubt be entertained; and the House could direct, according to its own judgment, the action which the Committee on Enrolled Bills should take in reference to this bill. If this matter should come up on a subsequent day, when there had been an unreasonable delay in transmitting the bill to the President, the Chair is not prepared to say what he might do in the premises, for lapse of time might raise some inference upon which to predicate a question of privilege.

The Chair sustains the point of order. If the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] will take an appeal from this decision, the Chair would like to submit the question to the House.

Mr. MORROW. In view of the statement of the Chair that this resolution might be adopted if it should come before the House in a proper way, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken up for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this resolution be now considered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for the regular order. I do not desire that there shall be any reflection upon officers of the House when there has been no dereliction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demanded the regular order.

Mr. REED. What will be the proper form to bring this matter before this House?

Mr. ROGERS. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not decide that now.

Mr. REED. I ask it in consequence of the Chair intimating the House would pass it if it came properly before it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not decide that now. By Monday——

Mr. REED. The Chair decided the question of privilege. The question now is how you shall bring it before the House. This is an important matter. How is it possible for us to prevent the gentleman from Texas, or any other similarly situated, from having an arrangement with an executive officer who may desire to receive a bill somewhat later than he would receive it in the natural course?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not anticipate those questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Oh, the Chair will not anticipate them! [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 48.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 90, not voting 176; as follows:

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. ENLOE with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. LAWLER with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. SAWYER.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill, a Senate bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair be kind enough to announce the result of the vote just taken again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to adjourn the yeas were 58 and the nays were 90, no quorum having voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. While it does not require a quorum on a motion to adjourn, yet when a call of the roll on a motion to adjourn discloses the fact that no quorum is present, it is the duty of the Chair to take cognizance of the fact; and there is then left nothing to be done except a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. PAYSON. That is not the rule, except where a vote has been taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. As in the present case. The vote here has disclosed the fact that no quorum is present; it has also shown that a majority is against adjournment. Now, under the rule there is but one motion in order, to wit, a call of the House. I move a call of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. The motion to adjourn, whether determined by a yea-and-nay vote or otherwise, does not require a quorum. Therefore the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is not correct in a parliamentary point. I venture to assert that this is the first time the point has been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to another fact, that there are a large number of pairs which have not been read, and probably many gentlemen are paired who have not voted. You can not disclose the absence of a quorum unless it be determined whether these gentlemen who are paired are or are not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the vote taken by yeas and nays shows that no quorum has voted, it is the duty of the Chair, under the Constitution, to take notice of that fact, and the House thereby becomes constitutionally disabled to do further business except that business which the Constitution authorizes the House to do when a quorum is not present, namely, to adjourn or order a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be seen that there is no limitation on the rule if the call of the roll develops the want of a quorum. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is in order; and the question is, Will the House order a call of the House?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 63.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. HOOKER. Pending the demand, I move that we do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 25.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 21, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the memorial of Mrs. Angie F. Newman on behalf of loyalists of Utah Territory, whom she represents, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, on the subject of polygamy in Utah and the government and effect of the hierarchy which she believes to exist there, controlling all the social and political forces of the Territory, and adverse to its admission as a State.

This memorial is principally not argument or oratory, but is a statement with extracts from the hierarchy's laws and regulations concerning marriage, and so on, which are verified, and the document is therefore of much value for public information.

I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories, as it bears on the political aspirations of that hierarchy to be admitted as a State, and I believe for the first time in my career here I feel justified in asking also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be printed as a document and printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress:

GENTLEMEN: As the legal representative of the loyal element of Utah Territory, I have the honor herewith to submit for your consideration the following transcript of official documents and speeches of the leaders of the Mormon Church, as reported by Mormon authorities. These are but types of facts endlessly cumulative, touching the following points in the speech made in the House of Representatives August 25, 1888, by Hon. JOHN T. CAINE, of Utah:

"First. There is no longer a possibility of objecting to Mormons on account of polygamy. That is a dead issue. It has ceased to exist. Less than 1 per cent. of the population of Utah to-day have been polygamous.

"Second. I declare that it is utterly false that the Mormons attach a meaning to the words bigamy and polygamy different from their common acceptation, etc.

"Third. There is not an almshouse or the necessity for one in any settlement where my people alone are found.

"Fourth. I denounce as an infamous slander that it (the constitutional convention) was an attempt to gain admission to the Union under false colors, and upon false pretenses.

"Fifth. Several times the people of Utah have presented in form their application for admission to the Union.

"Sixth. The Legislative Assembly has enacted a marriage law, etc.

"Seventh. The men who insist, for a purpose, that the Mormon people are in favor of a union of church and state know better.

"Eighth. Why should this people be suspected of such crimes as perjury?

"Ninth. 'The non-sectarian school-system, the opening of the mines,' the 'amnesty' proposition, the general 'morality' (?) and 'sobriety' (?) of my people."

In reply to No. 1. The indisputable statistics given by Hon. F. T. DUBOIS, of Idaho, that more than one-half per cent. have been convicted of these crimes, that the number of indictments out is larger than the number of convictions, that not one-twentieth of those who are in polygamy have been convicted, I would emphasize by the following personal observations: On the second Sunday in March, 1888, I visited the penitentiary in Salt Lake City and addressed a great host of polygamous brethren. These men are mostly incarcerated for a term of six months, and therefore many such groups have come and gone since the famous Rudger Clausen case of which JOHN T. CAINE had the temerity to declare before the committee, "it was the last of which he had knowledge."

I found in one cell, 10 by 13½, without floor, six women, three of whom had babes under six months of age, who were incarcerated for "contempt of court" in refusing to acknowledge the paternity of their children. When I plead with them to answer the court and be released they said, "If we do, there are many wives and children to suffer the loss of a father." One of these, a sweet-faced girl, the alleged wife of Bishop ——, had in her arms a babe three months old. A few weeks later this babe was very ill with measles. The Salt Lake Tribune of April 4, 1888, has the following touching the case:

"The woman wrote to her plural husband asking advice as to what she ought to do, whether testify or not. He replied as 'her bishop,' declining his permission. Marshal Dyer sent to the husband-bishop the following dispatch on Monday:

"'Your child in the penitentiary is dangerously sick. If you have one spark of humanity left in your soul you will provide a doctor and better care for it than we can give.

"'FRANK H. DYER, United States Marshal.'

"To this no reply was sent. The case, then, is summed up this way: A woman defies the law, and persists in that defiance; while lawfully held to answer for her contempt, her baby takes sick; she writes her husband for permission to testify, which he refuses; the father is notified of the illness of his child, and refuses even to reply to that notice."

Soon after the child died in the penitentiary.

In another cell was a girl sixteen years of age, the wife of her own father. Her two-months' old babe had a divided upper lip and no roof to its mouth; and yet polygamy is a lost art.

I have taken the testimony of one missionary in Utah who in the year 1887 visited in four hundred polygamous families in a town of five thousand inhabitants.

Judge C. C. Goodwin, editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, than whom no man has more accurate knowledge of existing facts, says in an editorial August 28, 1888:

"Again Mr. CAINE reports, and this time to the House of Representatives, that 'it has been proven in judicial proceedings that the Mormon church no longer gives permission for plural marriages.' No one knows better than Mr. CAINE that no such thing has been proven. He further knows that plural marriages are still being regularly celebrated; that the fact is known to hundreds and thousands of people, and that from the head of the church, the only power that is recognized by the Mormon masses, no sign has been made of any determination to relinquish or even to suspend the operations of that tenet of the Mormon faith which the teachers hold to be one of the sacraments ordained of God."

The local column of the Tribune August 26 has the following:

"According to a speech delivered by Delegate CAINE in the United States House of Representatives yesterday polygamy is a dead issue in Utah. This is rather a bold statement to make in the face of the fact that polygamous marriages are constantly taking place all over the Territory in settlements that are exclusively Mormon. And then doesn't Delegate CAINE know that within two years past the mayor of one of the principal cities in Utah took unto himself a plural wife?"

Another editorial runs thus:

How persistently he (CAINE) sticks to the fraud that the non-Mormons took the bits in their teeth and ran away with the polygamists when they framed that bogus constitution. A conclave of priests resolving that an article of faith which they have all subscribed to and all believe in is a misdemeanor which they will punish if the Government will but trust them with absolute power! Does Mr. CAINE believe that the American Congress is composed of idiots? Does he imagine that any one who ever read a Mormon book does not know that he would have cut off his right arm before he subscribed to that constitution, except that he had first received instructions to do so from his polygamous chiefs? With servant girls daily leaving the houses in which they have been employed, frankly acknowledging they are going to Logan to enter into polygamy, Mr. CAINE assures a Washington newspaper man that it has been proved here that no more permits for such marriages are being given.

At the conference April 10, 1888, Rudger Clausen (of —— supreme court notoriety) gives emphasis to the "dead issue" thus:

"It fell to my lot to go to prison in the year 1884, and for three years and one month I was confined within prison walls for daring to believe in the truth of heaven and having obeyed the principles of celestial marriage, which is from God. And during these three years and one month I saw some three hundred of my brethren come in that prison for listening and obeying what they felt would give them the highest exaltation. And some two hundred and twenty served out their terms of imprisonment, while I was there, and were set at liberty again. I feel first rate myself. I feel that the laws which God has given us are true. I have greater faith in the work of God to-day than I had three years ago, and my faith will increase.

"It is marvelous how patiently those men who were imprisoned for conscience' sake stood the imprisonment they did with willingness, rather than renounce the wives and children which God had blessed them with. And though by a simple answer to the proposition 'to live within the laws' some could have been released, they feel they would rather remain even unto death. They would rather die than renounce that which the Lord has given them. One brother, especially, received a letter, which, if he should but sign and say he would live within the law, he was offered his liberty, and though he was sentenced to three and one-half years he put the letter in his pocket, and I presume it is there yet. I feel like honoring the law of God. We will not make promises we can not keep."

The Mormon report of the conference of October 13, 1887, speaks thus of the opening session:

"There were many conspicuous vacancies, and the seats once filled by reverenced men that were now empty gave rise to many curious thoughts in the minds of those present. President Taylor dead and at rest; Apostles George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, who occupied seats beside him, are exiled; President Wilford Woodruff also kept away because of cruel and unjust laws; Apostles Erastus Snow, Moses Thatcher, F. M. Liman, Brigham Young, and George Teasdale, for the same reasons could not be present."

(This is surrender of the system, surely.)

In the report of the speech of President Angus Cannon occurs the following:

"Mothers are driven in hiding from the ungodly (marshals) bearing children in the everlasting covenant, fathers are banished from homes, others are in prison, and some pursue a course that makes them tools to the ungodly, circulating false reports (serving as witnesses) that drag their fellow brothers and sisters into trouble. I have often thought what would be the fate of those who take part in testifying against their brethren and sisters. Children die whose mothers are driven into hiding; * * * many of our wives and children can not be acknowledged before the law. Jesus kept the station assigned him. He made no compromise to give up any principle which he held. The imprisonment and exile of men, because of the hatred and inhumanity of their fellows, and the suffering and want and death consequent upon this exiling of fathers, will raise up before the guilty an awful form and convict those who perpetrated them of crimes I would not that my worst enemy should be guilty."

With the leaders of the church in voluntary exile, or on the "underground," with men daily going to the penitentiary, not for violation of law (?) but (to use the language of the Mormon press) "for living with their wives," "for committing adultery with their wives," with horsemen stationed at the outposts of the settlement (as I am assured by the marshals, and of which I have been personal witness) to fly with the speed of the wind to notify polygamists of the approach of the marshals, that the polygamists may rush to their hiding places. Surely the "dry bones" of this "dead" thing of the valley make a good deal of rattling!

In reply to No. 2 I summon the Deseret News, official organ of the Mormon Church, May 20, 1886, as evidence:

"Polygamy in the ordinary and Asiatic sense of the term never was and is not now a tenet of the Latter-Day Saints. That which Joseph and Hiram Smith denounced, and for preaching which without authority, an elder was cut off the church in Nauvoo, was altogether different to the order of celestial marriage, including a plurality of wives. The errors which those ladies who signed the affidavits declared were not known to them as doctrines of the church, were not, are not, and never will be, part of the creed of the Church of Latter-Day Saints. (The affidavits alluded to are public denials that polygamy was a doctrine of the church. Affidavits signed by women styling themselves 'married females,' the wives of Joseph Smith.)

"Joseph and Hiram were consistent in their action against the false doctrine of polygamy, advocated by men who did not comprehend the purity of celestial marriage. It has frequently been asserted by the enemies of the church that President John Taylor, when in France, publicly denied that the church entertained the doctrine of plural marriage." (It has been established by unquestioned authority that at the time of this denial John Taylor was the husband of ten wives.) "Directly he denied nothing—indirectly he disputed the assertion that polygamy was a part of the creed of the church. The doctrine of celestial marriage, including the plurality of wives, was revealed to Joseph Smith, the prophet, from the same source as the other revelations, and they stand or fall together. That Joseph practiced what he taught, and was himself the husband of several wives in the holy order of celestial marriage has been thoroughly authenticated. The world may not receive the glorious doctrine of eternal matrimony by which husbands and wives are made one and forever, nor the principle of plural marriage, which is an essential part of that doctrine, but those who have come out of the darkness into the light will see the beauty and divinity of that comprehensive relation."

No. 3, "almshouses:" I have personally visited the large and well-appointed poor-house of Salt Lake County, filled with Mormon inmates and officials. For the past twelve years I have annually passed weeks or months in the Territory. I know not what may be the Mormon standard of "necessity." Measured by any known American standard the average house in the settlements is an almshouse per se. Polygamous families live largely in houses of one or at best two rooms, under conditions at which thought revolts.

Many applicants at the home established by Congressional appropriation represent a poverty without parallel. There are comfortable, even luxurious, homes among the Mormon people. There is corporate enterprise and individual wealth; but it is in priesthood circles, is based on church income and salaries, and is maintained at the expense of the rank and file. The tithing fund, the temple fund, the immigration fund, the defense fund, the Congressional fund, collected by tax levied by priesthood from the people, exhaust the limited resources of the masses. Labor is largely paid in orders on the tithing yard, which is in itself a great market house, whose supplies are the tithing contributions.

No. 4, "admission:" On file in the Senate document-room is the petition of 1872 of 400 women of Utah Territory, "praying that the protection of the General Government may not be withdrawn from them by the admission of that Territory as a State." That the Territorial government from that hour to the present has extended additional protection to women is not susceptible of proof.

Hear the petitioners:

"To the Senators and Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your petitioners, appeal to you in the name of justice and humanity not to withdraw your protection from us. Our sole dependence is upon you.

"For more than twenty years Utah, although a Territory of the United States, and as such nominally under the jurisdiction of Congress, has been in reality governed altogether by the Mormon priesthood. No more bloody despotism has disgraced the earth in modern times.

"Brigham Young, in the self-appointed character of God's vice-regent, has held the lives, liberty, and property of the people in his hands. Disobedience to him has been accounted a crime not to be atoned for except by blood. Nothing that the people possessed could be called their own except by his will. Not only were they required to pay into the church treasury one-tenth of all their property, but they were liable at any time to be ordered to give up their homes to the prophet, and this order none dared disobey.

"Many of your petitioners have been robbed thus in years past. Women who, by the labor of their own hands, have earned the shelter of a roof for themselves and their little ones, have been deprived of that shelter by Brigham Young's command. The bread has been taken from the little children's mouths to swell the revenues of the church and enable its rulers to add house to house and field to field. But these robberies are a little thing compared with other enormities perpetrated by despotic rulers of this people in the name of their religion. During all the years that their will have been law in Utah no man's life, no woman's honor, has been safe, if either stood in their way. Never in this world will the history of their dark and bloody deeds be fully written, for the victim and witness of many a tragedy are hidden together in the grave.

"We know it has been urged that polygamy, the curse and blight of the homes of Utah, is hastening to its death, and that even if the people do not agree to relinquish it, it will shortly fall by an attack of natural and social forces consequent upon being brought in contact with the Christian civilization of the nineteenth century. But do the facts which are constantly transpiring support this assertion?

"But the continuance of polygamy is not the only ground upon which your petitioners deprecate the admission of Utah in the Union. There are other crimes and other tyrannies that will most assuredly be perpetuated and greatly intensified by the admission of Utah into the Union and the consequent accession of power to the Mormon priesthood. We have been told repeatedly through the columns of the Deseret News, the official organ of the Mormon Church, that in the event of Utah becoming a State if we do not choose to be ruled by the majority we can leave; the railroad is open.

"We adjure you, in the names of the mothers who bore you, of the wives you love, of the sisters whose honor is dear to you, not to turn a deaf ear to the cry of those who seek protection from a tyranny of a system that, throughout its whole existence, has sought only to crush and degrade womanhood. Thousands of women within the Territory of Utah are to-day in a condition of abject slavery. Many of them would proclaim their wrongs to the world if they dared. We appeal to you not to take any step that will cut off all hope of their deliverance.

"Will not the Representatives of this great nation listen to our appeal?"

Of these petitioners twenty-five had been members of the Mormon Church from five to fifteen years, fifty-two from fifteen to twenty-five years, and fifteen from twenty-five to thirty-five years. The writer has personal acquaintance with some of these petitioners, who have stated to her that when the fact of the petition was known in the church, they were given the alternative to proclaim that their signatures were fraudulently obtained or suffer the penalties the Church knew so well how to inflict. That any additional protection, legislative or otherwise, has been extended to women in this interim of years is not susceptible of proof. Since the death of the great dictator there is more oxygen in the air. This is all. That even the apparent guaranty of allegiance set forth in the constitution of the Territorial convention is a deception is proven by the following from the Deseret News, August 2, 1887, official organ of the Mormon Church.

"That polygamy has been declared 'incompatible with a republican form of government' must be known to every reader of the leading papers of the United States. It is for that reason that the admisson of Utah into the Union as a State has been opposed in Congress and in the papers. * * * But we wish it to be understood that neither the 'Deseret News nor the constitutional convention has affirmed that polygamy is incompatible with a republican or any other form of government.' It is stated in the Constitution that it is so 'considered,' and * * * the voting people of Utah, who are monogamists in practice, declare that it shall be deemed a misdemeanor and punished with certain penalties. * * * We have never admitted in all the controversy of years on this question that polygamy was 'incompatible with a republican form of government. The conceit was not ours.' * * *

Fifth. Mr. CAINE says: "The people in 1849 formulated a constitution and declared in their 'bill of rights' among other things"—but fails to quote the opening sentence of that constitution (bill of rights)—"'We, the people, do ordain and establish a free and independent government by the name of the State of Deseret.'"

Sixth. (Marriage law). The Utah Legislature since the organization of the Territory has been solidly Mormon—largely polygamous—until the Edmunds law, which declared the polygamist ineligible to office. During these years no marriage law against incest, adultery, or any sexual crime whatsoever (save rape) was ever put upon the statute-books. Is there no significance in the fact that in thirty-eight years of Mormon dominion no marriage law was enacted until after the constitutional convention?

Have any arrests been made under the Territorial law in the seven months since its passage?

Seventh. (Church and state.) "Know better?" Yes, they do. The ecclesiastical polity of the Mormon Church abrogates state and recognizes only church government. The accompanying extracts, from official statements of Brigham Young, John Taylor, and Wilford Woodruff, the three consecutive presidents of the Mormon Church; from the Congressional Delegate, George Q. Cannon; from C. H. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, the official exponent of the Mormon Church; from Orson and Parley Pratt, the great theologians of the Mormon Church, are offered in evidence. These utterances can be multiplied ad libitum.

Quotations from John Taylor, late president of the Mormon Church, 1882:

"American citizens: We shall contend for our liberties, rights, and immunities, guarantied to us by the Constitution, and no matter what action may be taken by inimical legislation, we shall contend inch for inch for our freedom and rights. The internal fires of revolution are already smoldering in this nation, and they need but a spark to set them in a flame. Of all bodies in the world Congress can ill afford to recklessly trample upon human freedom and to rend and destroy that great palladium of human rights, the Constitution of the United States. We will stand by our covenants, and the Constitution will bear us out in it. Among other things that instrument says that 'Congress shall make no law impairing the validity of contracts.' You have contracted to be united with your wives in time and in eternity, and it would not do for us to break a constitutional law. Others may do it, but we can not.

Again:

"What are we offered by you in your proposed legislation? First, confiscation of property; our lands, houses, and vineyards legislated away by men who have no property—carpet-baggers, pettifoggers, adventurers, and robbers, for you offer by your bills a premium for fraud and robbery. The first robs us of our property and leaves us the privilege, though despoiled, of retaining our honor. We have been robbed before; this we could stand again. Now for the second, the great privilege which you offer by obedience. Loss of honor and self-respect, the renunciation of God and our religion, the prostitution of our wives and children to a level with your civilization, to be cursed with your debauchery, to be forced to countenance infanticide in our midst, and have your professional artists advertise their dens of murder among us, to swarm as you do with pimps and harlots and their paramours; to have gambling, drunkenness, whoredom, and all the pestiferous effects of debauchery; to be involved in debt, and crime forced upon us; to despise ourselves; to be despised by our wives, children, and friends, and to be despised and cursed of God in time and in eternity. This you offer us and your religion to boot. We have and prefer purity, honor, and a clear conscience. Our motto to-day is as it ever has been and I hope ever will be, 'The kingdom of God or nothing.'"

At the funeral obsequies of President Taylor, "Champion of Liberty," August 1, 1887, George Q. Cannon says:

"President Taylor has been killed by the cruelty of officials who have in this Territory misrepresented the Government of the United States. His blood stains the clothes of men who with insensate hate have offered rewards for his arrest and have hounded him to the grave. History will yet call their deeds by their right names, but One greater than the combined voices of all historians will yet pronounce their dreadful sentence. John Taylor had not broken any law."

It will be remembered that John Taylor went to the underground to avoid arrest for polygamy and there died. His exile was voluntary, and had he chosen to return and live with one wife he would have had no fear of arrest.

Extracts from sermon by Charles H. Penrose, editor Deseret News, official organ of the Mormon Church, delivered in the Tabernacle July 26, 1884, and published in the News:

"I have been pleased in listening to the remarks of Brother CAINE (Hon. J. T. CAINE), who has just returned from Washington. Glad to hear that his desire, in common with ours, is to build up the kingdom of God in the earth and to contend for the rights which belong to us as American citizens.

"The establishment of God's kingdom and government on the earth will be fulfilled. This Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, to which we belong, is established by the Almighty for the express purpose of the accomplishment of His great work. The time has come for the building up of the Latter-Day kingdom.

"Every law the United States may pass with the intent to disintegrate this work, to divide this people, to crush this power that exists in the midst of the Latter-Day Saints will only tend to consolidate them and to make their determination more persistent.

"In regard to that feature of our faith against which laws have been passed in Congress, framed to prevent our carrying out the commandments of God in regard to our family relations (a right we claim under the Constitution of the United States), we believe marriage to be an estate with which Congress has no right to interfere. We consider that we have a perfect right under the Constitution of our country to believe what seems right to us and then to carry it out. As has been said by Brother CAINE this evening, in passing certain enactments which infringe upon our religious liberties, the Congress of the United States is doing something that will come back upon the very individuals who have been trying to enact these laws.

"We believe that good men may obtain more wives than one. May have them sealed by the same command to be their wives in the eternal world. If Abraham were on the earth to-day, they would put him in the penitentiary. If Jacob were here with his four wives, they would put him in jail. Looking upon this as an establishment of our religion, we claim the right to the free exercise thereof before God and man.

"When, therefore, our constitutional privileges are trampled upon, we feel like resisting. We intend to contend for our rights inch by inch. In this we are as firm as the everlasting hills, that are not moved by the blasts of winter or the heat of summer. Every nation and people and institution and society that fights against Zion shall become like the dream of a night vision. It shall pass away. * * *

"This kingdom (of Latter-Day Saints) will break in pieces all other governments, and it will stand forever, for God Almighty has decreed it.

"WILFORD WOODRUFF,
"Present head of the Church, July 29, 1884."

Discourse by President George Q. Cannon, delivered in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, August 31, 1884:

"We have been taught to believe that the time will come when constitutional government will be overthrown upon this land and that it will be the province of the Latter-Day Saints to uphold those principles which God inspired the founders of this Government to embody in the Constitution, and it seems to be fast approaching. Every settlement in this valley has been founded under the direction of men who hold the holy priesthood of the Son of God. * * * God designs that this people, called Latter-Day Saints, shall be a kingdom of priests and beings. The struggle that is now going on is to destroy the influence of the priesthood. Our effort is to have the Latter-Day Saints throughout all these valleys be obedient to the priesthood."

"The kingdom of God is an order of government established by divine authority; it is the only legal government that can exist in any part of the universe; all other governments are illegal and unauthorized, and again, any people attempting to govern themselves by laws of their own making, or by officers of their own appointing, are in direct rebellion against the kingdom of God."—Orson Pratt.

"Our ecclesiastical government is the government of Heaven, and incorporates all governments on earth; it is the fountain, the mainspring, the source of all light and power and government that ever did or can exist; it circumscribes the governments of this world."—Brigham Young.

"A system shall be developed by which there shall be one spirit, one doctrine, one order of priesthood, worship, power, government to lead, direct, control, and say what religion they shall adopt, including every department of government sufficient for all the affairs of state, both internal and external, and that would contribute to their enlightenment, environment, defense, exaltation, and their relations with all the world. * * * Hence the gathering of the saints, the organization of the Kingdom of God, religiously and politically. * * * We need not look to any other place where we may find this kingdom than among the saints right here, where they compose the majority, where there is no other larger government, where they are hemmed in with mountains and can establish peace and a kingdom and a government and a law. 'Well,' says one, 'you are a republican government, how does that chime in with the word kingdom?' It matters not as to the outward name, whether it takes the name of republic or kingdom, or this, that, or the other. It is not the name that does the business."—Parley Pratt.

The most casual reader will not fail to see in the following the Presidential summons to organized resistance to national law:

[Secret circular issued to the Mormon Church by the first presidency, May 5, 1885. John Taylor. George Q. Cannon.]

DEFENSE FUND.

"Attempts are now being made to destroy our rights under the Constitution. An attack has been made upon our religion. At the beginning of these attacks upon us we formed a defense fund, it being the intention to use it for the defense of all who might be assailed on religious grounds. Counsel has been given to the church in Idaho and Arizona to form in each of these Territories a similar defense fund, as it is equally necessary the Saints in Idaho and Arizona should make common cause in defending themselves whenever they may be attacked, in violation of the Constitution. Of course the funds will be handled by the committees.

"It is of the utmost importance to us as a people that these cases should be contested before the courts. We do not think it advisable that brethren go into court and plead guilty. Every case should be defended with all the zeal and energy possible. Let us contend for our rights inch by inch and not yield a particle to the demands of those who are assailing us."

[Conference Epistle, October 6, 1885. John Taylor, George Q. Cannon.]

"Forty years ago the Lord revealed to His Church the principle of celestial marriage. The idea of marrying more wives than one was naturally abhorrent. But the command of God was upon them; in consequence no soul dared disobey. Damnation was the awful penalty affixed to a refusal to obey these laws. It never entered into their minds to suppose Congress would enact a law which would present the alternative of being consigned to the penitentiary if they obeyed a law of God which would deliver them from damnation."

[Extract Woman's Exponent. JOHN T. CAINE'S letter to President Cleveland.]

"By courtesy of Hon. JOHN T. CAINE we are favored with a copy of the following letter, which he presented to President Cleveland on the date mentioned:

"'WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10, 1885.

"'SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the result of the inquiry made by the council of Salt Lake City (Mormon) touching the unfounded representations made to you by the governor of the Territory of Utah and other Federal officials. * * * Controlling, as these officials do, an intemperate and violently partisan newspaper, and through it the Associated Press dispatches sent from Salt Lake City, they have been able to give wide circulation to their deliberately manufactured falsehoods. * * * I respectfully submit, Mr. President, that the men who have so grossly deceived you in this matter (sending troops to Utah) are unworthy of your confidence and unfit to represent the Federal Government.'"

[Conference Epistle, April 9, 1886. John Taylor, George Q. Cannon.]

"We are inconsiderately asked to rend our family relations and throw away our ideas of human freedom, political equality, and the rights of man, and 'to become like them.' Be like them, for what? Like them in sapping the foundations of human liberty; like them in violating our constitutional oaths; like them in covenanting with wives and children till death parts them, and no more but a dead blank? What does it mean to be like them? It means that E pluribus unum is a fiction; it means that we tamper with and violate that grand palladium of human liberty, the Constitution of the United States, and substitute expediency, anarchy, fanaticism, intolerance, and religious bigotry for those glorious fundamental principles of liberty, equality, brotherhood, human freedom, and the rights of man. It means judicial corruption, perverted justice, missionary judges, class rulings, and minority representation. It means judicial tyranny and oppression; the introduction of spies and spotters; of packed juries and intolerance; of prisons, chains, and terrorism; and introduces cruelty, oppression, and despotism in the place of liberty, equality, and brotherhood. We can not do it.

"We do not ask freedom as a favor—we demand it as a right. The Edmunds law was begotten by prejudice, conceived in ignorance, and brought forth in hate."

In the Territorial Legislature of 1886, pending the discussion of "the open venire" jury system to which the writer listened, one member said:

"We want juries who will not be brow-beaten or commanded by the judge to bring a verdict not in accordance with evidence."

Another:

"The spirit of inspiration in the Constitution of the United States proclaims we are equals, and yet we are not tried by our peers. Christ suffered by His enemies. Socrates drank the hemlock administered by his enemies. The just have suffered at the hands of the unjust for all ages. We are bound to-day by the chains of oppression. We must put a stop to the grinding of this mill of injustice. This is the spirit of the inquisition of France. If we allow this thing to go on, we will be bound so tight we can not even struggle. It is not to be expected that Congress shall select our jurors for this Territory. As long as God lets me live I will never sustain such legislation. Know this, any man in this Government is free to choose his own faith. I have chosen mine, and I will stand by it if I am guillotined. If I have not liberty I might as well be dead."

Another:

"The Edmunds law is an unjust law, and it will be so until it is buried. That we have lived under it is proof of our loyalty. We are not here in this Territory under the laws of the United States, but under Territorial law. I know full well the inherent cussedness of the Edmunds bill. I dare not assist in putting this yoke of bondage upon the necks of our people."

[Epistle of first presidency, October 6, 1886.]

"The brethren who are now lingering in prison for declining to repudiate their wives. It is well known that every one of them would have escaped the penalties of the law if they would but promise to obey the law in the future as construed by the courts. It would have been easy to make the promise and avoid imprisonment. They would not make a promise which they did not intend to keep.

"Filled with anger at their non-success at the last session our opponents are preparing for the onslaught at the coming session of Congress, and we are threatened with vengeance of the most dreadful description. * * * But those who fight against us will share the fate of all who have ever fought against us. * * * We have seen generation after generation of our opposers pass one after another into cold oblivion. They have strutted their brief hour upon the stage. But they have passed away, and the memory of their deeds only lives in our historical archives. * * * And woe to the people or the nation that fights against Zion! for, as we have often had occasion to say, God will fight against them, His wrath will be poured out upon them.

"JOHN TAYLOR,
"GEORGE Q. CANNON."

January 15, 1887, the Woman's Exponent, in an article on the "Situation of Utah," contains the following reference to the death of Senator Logan:

"When Senator Logan was here with the Grand Army of the Republic he said in his speech, if we do not like the treatment we are getting we might emigrate. Kind, very kind! But he has gone first. I should not be surprised if more of the wolves were stopped in their mad career. Has the whole nation got hydrophobia?"

At the conference of April 6, 1888, Bishop Whitney read the following from Wilford Woodruff (president of the church, now in exile because of his plural relations):

"Epistle to the officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in general conference assembled:

"The present is an extraordinary time which appears to require more help and strength from the Lord than usual. There need be no fears indulged in concerning the effect of the Edmunds-Tucker law if the Latter-Day Saints will only be true to the covenants they have made with their God and strictly carry out the principles which he has told us must govern us in the building up of His Zion. If, however, we forget our covenants, and depart from and disregard the teachings which he has given us, then be assured, Latter-Day Saints, our position is full of peril to us."

The Deseret News, of September 4, 1886, publishes the following:

"Open letter to the Federal judges of Utah, the prosecuting attorney, and all others who are engaged in the present crusade against the 'Mormon' people:

"It is nearly two years since persecutions were actively commenced under the Edmunds law in this and the adjoining Territories, during which time the presidency of the church, several of the twelve apostles, presidents of States, and many of less prominence have been indicted. A large proportion of these have already been tried and convicted, some having served out their terms of imprisonment and are again at liberty. But what change has been wrought in the faith of the Latter-Day Saints in regard to the principle of plural marriage, persecuted as they have been of late ostensibly on this account, but really for political reasons? We answer, none whatever, except to increase their faith therein. I speak advisedly; for in my associations with the people in various parts of this Territory, as well as in the Territories adjacent. It may be that in the near future the Latter-Day Saints may not only be tolerated but protected in their religious rights by legislative enactments. And when we are left free to govern ourselves, to make and execute our own local laws—a right guaranteed by the Constitution of our country—we will place such safeguards around the people that they shall not be subject to the encroachments that are being made upon our liberties to-day."

On the 6th of March, 1886, I had the honor to attend the mass-meeting in Salt Lake City, when two thousand women gathered from all parts of the Territory to memorialize Congress against the execution of national law touching the "divine order" of marriage. For four mortal hours I listened to utterances, the character of which may be inferred from the following protest from my pen. An extract from the Tribune's editorial comment thereon follows:

"PROTEST OF A LOYAL WOMAN—THE OUTRAGEOUS SPEECHES AT THE THEATER.

"Editor Tribune:

"Mrs Hannah T. King, in her speech to-day in the theater, says: 'I can not refrain from asking, Am I in America?'

"Myself a New Englander by birth and education, reared in the atmosphere of loyalty, my own heart puts forth to-day the question, 'Am I in America?'

"I have traveled all over this fair land; I have sat in the councils of the women of the nation; I have participated in the discussions of the various organizations of women, both State and national; in benevolent, reformatory, in political action; and I have to-day heard for the first time treasonable utterances from the lips of my own sex; for the first time a defiance of the laws which shelter womanhood. And I desire to state in your columns, as a representative of the loyal women of the States, that there is not a spot on this continent, outside of Utah, where the seditious sentiments expressed in the theater to-day could have a hearing or receive a single personal indorsement from any woman of any race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Any woman in the States who should so insult the representatives of this great Republic would invite a fate more speedy and none the less terrible than that of J. Wilkes Booth.

As a Christian wife and mother, I, in behalf of the Christian homes of this Republic, repudiate the oft-repeated charge of the speakers in the theater that the lasciviousness of the age is due to monogamous or Christian marriage.

The "30,000" demi-monde of New York mentioned to-day are such in defiance of the laws of Christian homes over whose threshold they can not pass.

And be it known to the women of this Territory that nowhere in the States did woman ever sink to such depths of dishonor as to stand before a public audience and vindicate their illicit alliances, much less declare they were entered into and perpetuated by direct command of God.

Again, there is not to be gathered out of the vilest slums of our cities, from the most abandoned classes, an audience who would listen to such monstrous blasphemy. I speak whereof I know, and my woman's soul hurls back the insinuation of dishonor in Christian domestic life.

I agree with Dr. Eliss Shipp. "It is no longer a virtue to be silent," and there are women in this nation whose "indignant protest" may now be felt in Congress with a potency and in a line unfelt before. It may yet appear that the women of this Territory are "building the gallows to hang themselves." Building it with their own hands (since they declare themselves free from priestly authority), building it faster than they know.

The blessed Stars and Stripes which hung in mocking irony above the heads of disloyal women, to-day are crimson with the blood of sons of loyal mothers. The stars have been set in that field of blue through tears and toil and prayer to the God of battles, to the Christian's God (not Mormon god), to the God of Christian homes.

Homes are the rock on which this Republic is built. Homes where one woman reigns as queen sitting upon a throne whose honor knows neither compromise nor division. And I, in whose veins flow the blood of the Pilgrim Fathers, "protest" against the unfurling of that flag above any people, over any home, where priestly edicts and the law of lust dominate.

Treason is not to find shelter under the flag, and whatever of sympathy or protection the women of Utah expect from this Government is disclaimed in their present hostile attitude. They cut the cords which bind them to the world's heart when they thus blaspheme the nation's God, repudiate the nation's sovereignty and the Christian home.

Liberty protected by law is the only liberty under the flag.

Yours,

ANGIE F. NEWMAN.

DAILY TRIBUNE, Salt Lake, March 9.

A TRUE WOMAN'S PROTEST.

[Daily Tribune editorial, Salt Lake, March 10.]

That was a stinging card from Mrs. Angie F. Newman published in yesterday's Tribune. It ought to be printed side by side with the proceedings in the theater on Saturday, and Mormon women ought to read both just to see how they stand in the estimation of civilization. Mormon men and women should read the terse closing sentence of her communication, try to grasp its meaning, and then, if possible, to estimate how far out upon the sea of uncertainty they have already drifted. "Liberty protected by law is the only liberty under the flag." That liberty which, regardless of government, makes every man the judge of what laws he shall obey, is merely license, and does not belong to civilization.

Has such a spectacle ever been witnessed since the foundation of this Government as that of polygamous women memorializing Congress against the execution of national law? It may be expedient to ask, has "veneration for American institutians" ever led any other class of law-breakers in America to memorialize Congress touching the execution of law against themselves?

The memorial thus presented made reckless charges against the Federal officers. It was my privilege to place in the hands of President Cleveland, for the use of the President and the National Congress, a copy of an affidavit which was filed by the clerk of the court, in which the deputies each declare those statements are without foundation in truth; also a personal letter from Marshal Ireland, in which he states that he has personally visited and spent weeks in the localities where the testimony submitted in the "memorial" was taken. He finds the charge of "outrages" is entirely unwarranted, and the editors who published the statements in the Southern Utonian have been arrested for criminal libel and held to answer in the district court of the third judicial district. Later—plead guilty in the courts.

Resistance to law, "as construed by the courts," is openly taught. Thus they refuse to recognize the courts as the judicial arm of the law, or the Federal judges as interpreters of the law. The "Edmunds law they designate as the Edmunds-Tucker infamy." The "highest veneration" of Mr. CAINE for the institutions of his country is vouched for in the Penrose sermon. That of his adherents is vouched for in the Penrose sermon. That of his adherents is emphasized in the "Exponent" articles from Elder Bowring and the "City of Refuge."

THE WOMAN'S EXPONENT—WOMEN CAN DO MUCH IN THE PRESENT EMERGENCY.

[By a wife in exile.]

CITY OF REFUGE.

In answer to the question, "What can women do in the present emergency?" I pen the following ideas to prove the unity of thought that exists among the Latter-Day Saints on the present situation of affairs, afflicting us as a people, particularly that class who have entered into celestial marriage.

Women of Israel, a crisis has come in our lives. With a knowledge that God had revealed the law of celestial marriage, * * * many of us took upon ourselves the sacred obligations of plural wives with the full understanding that we could henceforth bear the proud distinction of honorable wives, not concubines, not bond-women, not women of any inferior position in the marriage covenant, for the same ceremony that binds the first wife binds also the plural, and each is under exactly the same obligations. The children of each in the sight of God and angels, who bear witness of the marriage tie, are honorable.

Chief-Justice Zane may openly and maliciously insult the thousands of noble and pure women and innocent children in this community whose stations I have thus defined, but that does not alter facts. * * * Patient waiting brings its own reward, but in the mean time we will not sit idly down and allow might to triumph over right without an earnest protest and a brave struggle.

We will fearlessly assert our rights as defenders of that glorious document which guaranties to all the right of conscience and the free exercise thereof, with "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and we will maintain our true positions by virtue of conscience and birth.

The nation may cry "Unclean! "Unclean!" but until its statistics show a better state of morality under monogamic sway we will answer back, "First cast the beam out of thine own eye." "Let those who are without guilt cast the first stone." While the agonized wail from thousands and thousands of God's fair daughters, degraded and debauched by man's consuming lust, reaches up to heaven from the soil of America, is not the nation's boasted gallantry, ay humanity, to women a burning sarcasm, a stink in the nostrils of Jehovah? Congress may pass laws to imprison the virtuous brotherhood of the Latter-Day Saints. * * * It may compel us, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, to give evidence that would make us worse than widows, and our children worse than orphans. But shall we fear man who can at most only destroy the frail body in which are sown the seeds of death, and which must, sooner or later, molder in the dust?

The time has come when our husbands must entirely, both in theory and practice, take from our heads the glorious crown of wifehood, put us away, disown us, or be humiliated to a prison cell, wear the prison garb (recently enforced, it would seem, in the Utah penitentiary for the especial humiliation of the Edmunds law victims), and be placed on equal footing with men guilty of the deepest-dyed crimes.

Now, the question with us is, Shall we agree to these measures; shall we assist in any way or even urge our husbands in working out their eternal condemnation by breaking the covenants mutually made in sacred places, buying their liberty at the price of honor, and thus robbing ourselves of the cherished distinction of wives? Or shall we say to them, Stand firm for conscience' sake; yield not to the unlawful, unreasonable requiremeuts of bigoted, tyrannical lawmakers who seek to bind man's heaven-born right of conscience in all matters between himself and his Creator? Accept rather a prison or exile, as some of us women have proven that we can do willingly rather than betray you. * * *

(This writer evidently understands the law of the land. Her exile is voluntary. Her defiance is willful. The sentiment is in full harmony with the constant utterances of "the organ of the Lord" which publishes it.)

January 15, 1887.—The Woman's Exponent publishes the following articles (abbreviated) from an elder in Israel. (Surely we are a loyal people.)

SHALL WE BE LIKE THEM?

[By Elder H. E. Bowring.]

"Why can't they be like the rest of us?" This remark was made by Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, in reference to the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in Utah, and was no doubt elicited by the thought that if that people could be induced to give up their faith in the revelations of the Almighty (which the President and the majority of mankind do not recognize), it would save the Government and himself much trouble and expense, and the people vexatious prosecutions, imprisonment, and much suffering. There is no doubt that the President was honest in the thought that it would be for the benefit of those alluded to; but let us consider the question, and see what we would be like.

Would it benefit us to be like their corrupt politicians, pettifogging lawyers, and time-serving priests? Shall we conform to the practices and vices that appear inseparable with the boasted civilization of the present age, and be like "the rest of them" in their licentiousness, debauchery, and drunkenness, their swindlings, robberies, and defalcations? Shall we adopt their dreadful practices of infanticide, fœticide, and abortion; their assignations, seductions, and adulteries, their murders, suicides, and pollutions? Shall we imitate them in what is admitted by themselves to be a social evil, and have our beautiful cities infested with thousands of prostitutes, bringing disease, death, and perdition to our once happy homes, corrupting our chaste, virtuous, and lovely sons and daughters, and instead of a comparative heaven, bring a very pandemonium of evils into our midst? Shall we repudiate our wives whom we have covenanted to love and cherish, not only for time, but for eternity? Shall we turn them out and trust them to the tender mercies of a cold-hearted and cruel world, and have them branded with the name of harlot, and consign them to a life of sham? Shall we allow our much loved and cherished sons and daughters to be branded with the name of bastard? Shall we disobey the commands of God, and ally ourselves with the world, the flesh, and the devil? Our answer is no, no, no! A thousand times no!

Now, in the celestial order of marriage, to which, evidently, the President was alluding, who is injured? Who complains? Who murmurs? Have the parties who of their own free will and choice have entered into the covenant of eternal companionship asked for protection from the courts of the Federal Government? * * * Who, then, shall we imitate? Shall we not strive to be like the ancient worthies, who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, waxed valiant in fight, and put to flight the armies of the aliens? Like them, and like those noble saints of latter days, when persecuted, imprisoned, or tormented, we will not accept deliverance at the expense of our honor and integrity to our covenants, knowing that we will obtain a better resurrection and an exaltation in the kingdom of our God. We will rather follow in the footsteps of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; of Moses, Elkanah, and Hannah; of ancient apostles and prophets; also those of our own day. We will imitate the example of those noble women of Utah, who recently met in convention at the Salt Lake City Theater, where thousands of our wives and mothers, sisters and daughters, young and old, protested against the prosecutions and persecutions of their husbands and fathers for their faith in and obedience to the commandments of the Almighty. Their resolutions and protestations were echoed and indorsed by their sisters in every city, town, and hamlet of the Latter-Day Saints. In the words of our immortal poetess: "Our hearts are fixed; we know in whom we trust." We will follow their noble examples; our faith is as firm as the everlasting hills, as unchangeable as the immutable laws of Jehovah.

Eighth. "Why should this people be suspected of perjury?" In evidence the Deseret News editorially declared: "The Mormons use no other Bible than the regular orthodox book commonly known as the King James translation of the Holy Scriptures." I have in my possession the Joseph Smith revision of the King James version of the Holy Scriptures. The preface states, "This work is given to the Mormon Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and to the public in pursuance of the direct command of God;" and charges "the great and abominable church (the Christian church) have taken away plain and precious things from the book."

By most adroit interpolations the special tenets of the Mormon Church are "restored" by Joseph Smith.

This blasphemous translation is the Holy Scriptures in use by the Mormon Church (the Book of Mormon is another publication entirely).

When the Federal courts demanded in evidence the church records of marriage, the leaders of the church took oaths that no such records were kept. The following excerpt I have myself copied from the Celestial Marriage Laws of the Mormon Church.

"When the day set apart for the ceremony has arrived, the bridegroom and his wife, and also the bride, together with their relatives and guests, assemble at the appointed place. The scribe then proceeds to take the names and ages and native towns, countries, counties, or stakes of the parties to be married, which he carefully enters on the record. The president who is prophet, seer, and revelator over the whole church throughout the world, calls upon the bridegroom and his wife to arise, which they do, fronting the president. The wife stands on the left hand of her husband. The bride stands at her left. The president puts the question: 'Are you willing to give this woman to your husband, to be his lawful and wedded wife for time and all eternity? If you are you will manifest it by putting her right hand in the right hand of your husband.' This done, the usual form of ceremony is performed between the husband and the bride. The scribe then enters on the general record the date and place of marriage, together with names of witnesses."

The ordinance incorporating the Church of Latter-Day Saints reads:

"SEC. 4. And be it further ordained, That said church shall keep in every organized branch or stake a registry of marriages; free for inspection of all members." * * *

Mr. CAINE exalts the "non-sectarian school system."

After the American standard there is no public school system in Utah. The inadequate legislative appropriation thereto is supplemented by tuition. The school buildings are principally ells to ward meeting-houses, or the church itself. The special qualification of a teacher is his or her status in the church. The average grade of scholarship does not approximate the American average of forty years ago. The average mentality is strangely marked by the law of heredity. I am told by those who have had large experience, it seems impossible to carry the pupils beyond the crudest elementary knowledge. The brain capacity seems to exhaust itself at given points. They have had an ancestry of illiterates for three or four generations, and mental limitations are the sequence. The following from the Salt Lake Tribune is but a link in the chain of evidence:

"The Federal court-room was crowded to its utmost capacity last evening by an intelligent audience of ladies and gentlemen, who came to hear the able argument and arraignment of Mormonism by J. D. Stoddard, who had accepted the challenge made by the first presidency of the Mormon Church at the Coalville conference in October, 1886, which was 'The wicked and absurd construction of the Edmunds law and improper and unprecedented administration, prompted by malice and approved by Satan, and intended to crush out a system of religion which can not be overcome by truth, reason, and the agencies of civilized humanity.'

"THE NON-SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.

"It was asserted by the speaker that in a competitive examination for a position in a public school in this Territory the only requirement was, not a knowledge of the branches of education, but a prejudiced mind that would i still into the minds of his pupils the same fanaticism and superstition in which the instructor believed. He read a certificate that was awarded him after passing an examination as to his religious status, and not as to his education, and based his success in obtaining the certificate on the fact that he had been baptized a few months before and was a member in good standing in the church."

That Mr. Stoddard was born and reared in the Mormon faith and knew whereof he spoke will appear from the following:

"My father entered into a contract with a man's wife and two daughters in England that if he would furnish the money to pay their fares to Utah the two daughters would marry him in polygamy on their arrival here. They deceived the husband and father in England and before he could overtake them they had sailed from Liverpool. My father married the two girls and they are living with him yet."

The Book of Mormon has been the standard reader. Within the last year the Gentiles have gained control of some of the ward schools in Salt Lake City, which has caused general alarm to the extent that although in the several theological academies of the church Mormon theology is a distinctive feature of the curriculum, yet at the last session of the conference, September 1, 1888, the church declared in favor of exclusive sectarian education and organized a church Territorial board of education, as per resolution:

"Resolved, That we sustain Angus M. Cannon, W. B. Dougall, John Nicholson, Elias Morris, James Watson, Francis Cope, and W. A. Rossiter as members of the board of education for this State, to act in harmony with the Territorial board of education appointed at the last general conference of the church."

The following brief quotations from the conference speeches will afford glimpses of the sentiment on the subject:

"Those who are not of us are becoming numerous and wealthy in our midst, and they are obtaining control of our schools. If we remain passive and allow those who are not of us to gain control of the education of our youth we shall have occasion to mourn." (Elder C. F. Wilcox.)

"Among religionists in the East a unanimous opinion exists to the effect that the only hope of reaching the Mormons is through their children. This is no secret. They propose to entrap our children. We must therefore establish schools where our youth can be taught by and made Latter-Day Saints." (Elder Talmadge.)

"Our academy will be open Monday next. This is a church school. If we have any regard for our children, we should see that they be educated in the glorious principles of the Gospel. We know how we are surrounded, and that the enemy uses every influence to check our work and draw away our children." (Elder Watson.)

"I hope to see the day when adequate facilities of this nature will be within the reach of the poor, and when the children of the people of God will not only be able to graduate as ripe scholars, but also as full-grown Latter-Day Saints. There is an imperative obligation upon us as a community to see that a generation of Saints are reared unto the Lord, but we can take care of the future." (Nicholson—News Editor.)

"The authorities of the church have taken steps to have institutions of learning established throughout Zion. This is a very important work." (F. T. Richards.)

"At this conference we have voted in favor of establishing educational institutions of a character adapted to the proper training of the children of the Latter-Day Saints, and it is doubtless a good thing that we have been placed in a position that has made this course necessary." (W. T. Richards.)

The "opening of the mines," which Mr. CAINE imputes to the Mormon people, was a Gentile enterprise attended with Mormon legislative restriction, official proscription, and anathema, even to the extent of excommunication from the church of men who had the audacity to advocate mining interests in current literature.

Mr. CAINE says further, "No amnesty has been granted to classes." "Classes" is the saving clause in that declaration. There is but one class subject to pardon, namely, the guilty.

It is a matter of public record that one of the first official acts of Governor West was—in conjunction with the Federal officers—to make a proposition to all the polygamists in the penitentiary to unite in a petition to the President for general amnesty for the whole body of offenders, on condition of agreement to obey the law in the future. Every man of them, including the great apostle Lorenzo Snow, refused release on such terms. Every man convicted under the Edmunds law has offered him, before sentence is pronounced, the alternative of a pledge to obey the laws in the future or be sent to the penitentiary. The penitentiary is the almost universal choice.

Bishop Sharp, one of the most able men in the church, had the honor to pledge fealty to the Government. In consequence he was set at liberty by the courts, but deposed from his bishopric by the church. Thus, loyalty to national law is held as disloyalty to the church, and cost the official head of a distinguished leader in the church. Mr. CAINE does not "consider it necessary to the safety of the nation and the perpetuity of American institutions that men over seventy years of age should be imprisoned for unlawful cohabitation." The safety of the nation is the standard of the American home. It is the home that law environs, not the betrayer. Age is no defense. What of the "safety" of the young girl, the usual victim of the seventies?

The "morality" (?) and "sobriety" (?) of the Mormon people are amply attested to by their own leaders. Brigham Young, in 1856, said in a Tabernacle sermon:

"I have many a time in this stand dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can; we can beat them at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world, the cunningest and most adroit thieves, and any other shade of character you can mention. We can pick out elders in Israel right here who can beat the world at gambling, who can handle the cards, cut and shuffle them with the smoothest rogue on the face of God's foot-stool. I can produce elders here who can shave their smartest shavers and take their money from them. We can beat the world at any game."

How much this standard has been elevated in the interim of years may be seen in the following quotations from the speech of Angus Cannon, brother of George Q., at the conference, Salt Lake City, October 13, 1887, reported in Mormon papers:

"You will find seventies, you will find high priests and elders erecting houses, renting them to men bartering away fire water, that inflames men's blood, corrupts their minds, degrades their beings and makes them slaves, and other sins and a snare to other virtues. Not only do they rent houses for such purposes, but they build houses and rent them for the most infamous uses. They take the revenue coming from such a source and then pay tithes from it. When the records are exhibited revealing the degradations to which they consented to force God's daughters and the evils that strewed the paths they trod, how they can stand before that God. Not only this, but you will find men clothed upon with the priesthood disposing of these very intoxicants; and if you ask them why they follow such pursuits, they will answer: 'Because we must have bread.' Brethren holding the priesthood have deserted principle, brought trouble and affliction upon their fellow-men by vacating the lands they possessed, and letting them go into the hands of their enemies. Misery and suffering have resulted, blood been shed, and men made cripples through neglect to observe the principles of equity and justice. The saints were the sons and daughters of God."

It is in no wise a pleasant duty to have given even these glimpses of Mormon fealty. The Mormon Church has furnished brave men and heroic women—men and women of high character and high endeavor. Only such have been able to resist the gravitation abyssward, which is the law of the system. But the leaders who have gone chasmward unfortunately have their hands upon the lower end of the incline down which the masses are moving. Nor do they lessen the angle of descent. Therefore, in behalf of the loyal people of Utah who were not represented in the constitutional convention and who "seek protection" from the Federal Government, we ask, gentlemen, your careful consideration:

First. Of this official record of a people who, under the guise of love for the American flag, are seeking a statehood at your hands.

We ask, second, that on that emblem whose crimson bars have been made indelible only by the blood of heroes you will see that to its field of blue no star of dishonor is set.

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. ANGIE F. NEWMAN,
In behalf of the Loyalists of Utah Territory.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9268) to punish dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and other fraudulent devices for using the United States mails, to report the same back, together with sundry papers and correspondence that have been sent to the committee by the Postmaster-General, with the request that the committee be discharged, and that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Although this is a crimes bill, and would properly, if it were entirely by itself, go to the Committee on the Judiciary, we thought, inasmuch as the Post-Office Committee have usually taken charge of the post-office criminal legislation, it would be better for them to have it than for us to endeavor on one single bill to go into this branch of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee on the Judiciary will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9371) granting a pension to Betsey Williams, widow of William R. Williams, private Company C, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 5740) granting a pension to Anson Ward;

A bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Joseph W. Filler; and

A bill (H. R. 11332) granting a pension to Eliza S. Glass.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10881) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cotner, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WILLIAM R. DEAN.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call up the bill (S. 2862) for the relief of William M. Dean for action on the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill referred to by the Senator from Minnesota, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, strike out "William M. Dean" and insert "William R. Dean;" in line 5, before the word "dollars," strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty;" and amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to William R. Dean;" so as to make the bill read:

An act granting a pension to William R. Dean.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William R. Dean, late a member of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3576) regulating the presentation of bills and resolutions to the President; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STEWART. I think the bill should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SHERMAN. It should go to the Committee on Rules, properly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the proper reference would be to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection, though I think, as it relates to the privileges of the two bodies, it should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the title be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a bill or resolution requiring the signature of the President shall have passed both Houses of Congress and been enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, it shall be the duty of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, when the bill or resolution originated in that body, and of the President of the Senate, when the bill or resolution originated in the Senate, to cause such bill or resolution to be forthwith presented to the President of the United States in person, and a report of the fact to be made to the House in which the bill or resolution originated, and the date of such presentation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Constitution provides that each House shall govern its own proceedings, and as a matter of course we can not interfere with the enrollment of bills in the other House and their presentation to the President. It is only within the power of the Senate so far as Senate bills are concerned. So far as House bills are concerned, we have no power by law to regulate their mode of managing and delivering their bills. Therefore this is a matter proper for the Committee on Rules, and no doubt they will provide, if there is any necessity for it, for the prompt sending of bills backward and forward between the two Houses or to the President of the United States. Each body must regulate that matter for itself.

Mr. STEWART. I differ with the Senator on that point. I think that Congress, after a bill has passed, has the right to have it presented to the President, and it is for the two Houses to see that the bill is presented. The Constitution provides that a bill shall be presented before it becomes a law, and it may be necessary to have a law passed for the purpose of securing such a presentation. The Senate rule provides that a bill shall be presented forthwith to the President. I shall offer also a resolution when that order is reached, and then I should like to make a few remarks referring to the rules, which may meet the whole case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As casting some light on this subject the Chair will have the clause of Rule XXV, referring to the subject, read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXV.

* * * * * * *

A Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I was about to remark on that rule, which I have here, and some other rules connected with the same subject, upon the presentation of a resolution which I have to offer, which, I think, is a legitimate way of reaching this subject. I think, however, there should be a law passed on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate can proceed only by unanimous consent, the bill having been read twice. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it go over until to-morrow. Wherever there is any debate at all, that is itself an objection.

Mr. STEWART. Is there objection to the bill being referred to the committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART. Let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Nevada object to the bill being referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. STEWART. No; I desire it to go to any committee to which the Senate seems disposed to send it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3577) to carry into effect the provisions relating to colonization of the twelfth section of the act of June 7, 1862, entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts of the United States, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it should go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that, under the precedents, it would go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. It would naturally go to the Committee on Finance, according to the title, but for the fact that it has reference to a provision in the original direct-tax law appropriating a certain portion of the proceeds of the sales of land acquired under the direct-tax law to the aid of African colonization. The bill which I offer proposes that some portion of the money shall be applied to making a contract with a projected steam-ship company, which intends to put on a line of steamers between New York and Monrovia, Liberia. In that aspect of the case it seems to me that the Committee on Commerce would be the most appropriate committee to give the subject consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the chairman of the Committee on Finance prefer otherwise?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 3578) to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRESENTATION OF BILLS TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas it is alleged in the public press and elsewhere that the presentation of bills to the President of the United States which have passed both Houses of Congress, been duly enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, is frequently delayed for several days, and sometimes for weeks, by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Senate, as a branch of the legislative department of the Government, do call the attention of the House of Representatives to said alleged delays on the part of its Committee on Enrolled Bills in presenting bills to the President of the United States which have been duly enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, and respectfully ask the House to require its officers to present such bills to the President without unnecessary delay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that resolution go over and be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to make an explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is only a word, that is all right; but it was agreed yesterday that immediately after the routine business was through the Agricultural Department bill should come up, and we ought to have all the time there is before the hour of voting to discuss that.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go over, and make the explanation to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution will go over and come up to-morrow in regular course.

Mr. STEWART. After we get through with the agricultural bill, I shall ask leave to make an explanation of the resolution. I think it is a matter of very grave importance, and I think it will appear to be of very grave importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, under objection, lies over until to-morrow, and will be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to strike out section 5.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I called the attention of the Senate on yesterday to the fact that all the existing Cabinet ministers were at the head of political departments of the Government, and that the creation of a department of agriculture with a Cabinet minister at its head would be the introduction into the Cabinet for the first time of the head of a department in no sense political in its character. I meant to indicate by the word "political" a department necessary to the conduct of a modern civilized government. It is not often that I expect to be able to explain to the Senate, at the request of a Senator, my meaning by reading from the dictionary. I find that there is no mistake about the meaning of the word "political." According to Webster's Dictionary it means:

Furnished with fixed or regular system or administration of government.

Pertaining to public policy or politics; relating to state affairs; concerned in national measures especially, pertaining to a state in distinction from a city or municipality.

Derived from office or connection with government; public; as, political character.

Of course all are familiar with the use of the word in connection with political economy.

The distinction is perfectly clear and plain, and it will be a new departure in our conduct of the Government to create this department of agriculture. It will be the introduction into the political administration of the Government of a Cabinet minister who does not perform either by himself or his subordinates any necessary function of government. There will be at the Cabinet table a secretary of the department of agriculture, and upon questions of a public character, concerning the administration of foreign affairs, involving war or peace, or affecting any of the existing Departments of the Government, submitted by the President for the advice of the members of his Cabinet, there will be this eighth member from the department of agriculture, expressing his opinion, giving his advice, exercising whatever influence may be attributed to the head of any one of the Departments.

The natural result of this will be that the other industries of the country will ask a similar representation. Agriculture is perhaps our greatest interest; it is probably the interest which occupies more of our people than any other, and the agriculturists of the country, I am satisfied, believe that the interests of agriculture are to be promoted by the measure for which we are to vote; but it is the stepping-stone to the representation in the administration of the other industries of the country. Can it be otherwise? The result is inevitable.

The outcome will be, if this department is created, the change at no very distant date of its name and the enlargement of its functions, so that instead of being the department of agriculture it will become the department of national industries. I shall vote for the bill with the expectation that we shall, as the result of its passage, have a department of national industries.

That department should take charge of all the industries which the Government of the United States may be induced in the exercise of its ample powers to care for and foster. It should have charge of all subjects relating to commerce, including ships and the revival of our mercantile marine. This subject has already been deemed of such importance that there is already in the Treasury Department a Commissioner of Commerce, and his bureau should be transferred to this new department. Our railroads and telegraphs are great national industries which have not been taken possession of by the Government in this country as in some countries, and those industries need the supervision and to some extent the care and protection of the National Government, and this subject will naturally find a place in this new department. Mines and mining, manufactures, forestry, the production of food-fishes, education, labor, and labor statistics (each of which three now has a Commissioner), immigration, the census, and generally all statistics concerning our national industries, should, if this department is created, be transferred thereto.

At some time I suppose this Government will, like all other civilized and cultivated governments, systematically extend its assistance and patronage to art, and whenever this shall be the case the department of national industries will have within it an art bureau; and I trust that we may then have some standard of art, that we may have art critics or art censors or art committees which will supervise purchases of works of art for the National Government. If such supervisors had existed hitherto when the Government has been purchasing works of art, it might have saved us from some of the purchases of abortions of art in the way of painting and so-called sculpture for which the money of the Government has been expended.

With this idea in view, asking the Senate to contemplate the result which is sure to follow, I shall vote, as I said yesterday, in favor of the establishment of this Department of Agriculture. I believe, as a personal opinion, that it would be better to defer its creation until the time has arrived for the creation of a department of national industries; but if it is to be pressed at this time I shall vote for it, feeling that it will result in the establishment, to be represented in the Cabinet of the United States, of a department of national industries, which will extend the supervision and fostering care of the United States to all branches of industry within our great and growing country.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, having been upon the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry some little time, I wish to say in reply to some of the suggestions of my colleague that the bill has at times been in the form of a bill for the establishment of a department of industries, but difficulties have arisen. The agricultural people of the country have almost universally been opposed to the establishment, at least at present, of a department which would take in the other great interests, having a feeling that they would be submerged and lost sight of and fail to receive that specific attention which they feel that the great interest of agriculture demands.

So the bill has come in these later days to assume its present form. What may be the result after it has demonstrated its usefulness in regard to the accretion to it of the other great interests of the country, of course no one can precisely foresee; but I think that no bill will be likely to receive at the present time the support of the general labor interests of the country, or of the agricultural interests either, if the whole were combined at present in one.

Mr. CALL obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask my colleague whether the agriculturists of the country do not see that the moment a secretary of agriculture takes his seat at the Cabinet board the other industries of the country will be jealous and will demand equal or similar recognition; and would it not be wise to meet that question now by substituting a department of industries for a department solely of agriculture?

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yield to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]?

Mr. BLAIR. I was not aware that the Senator from Florida had the floor. I addressed the Chair before the Senator rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Florida after the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] had taken his seat.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator to yield to me one moment just to reply to the last suggestion of my colleague. I was not aware that I was trespassing.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not aware that the farmers of the country are careful upon that subject. They want their own department. They are not particular whether others are recognized or not; but they desire a distinctive department on account of the danger which they apprehend of their being lost sight of among the more dominating and active interests of manufactures—mining and the like. They do not wish to be lost sight of by reason of the greater activity and intensity with which these other interests press attention upon themselves. For that reason the bill has in the last Congress and this embraced nothing, so far as I know, except a department of agriculture proper. There are, of course, many logical reasons to suppose that the result which my colleague suggests will follow.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it chanced a few days since, when the bill was before the Senate, on the question of agreeing to the committee's amendment to strike out the fifth section, that I made a few remarks upon the subject. I stated on that occasion that I did not think there was a single mile of military telegraph in this country. In reply to that I received a very polite note from the Chief Signal Officer, General Greely, and I think it is but just to him that before the debate is concluded I should put it in the RECORD, and the extract from the report to which he refers. The note is as follows:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, September 19, 1888.

MY DEAR SENATOR CALL: I have been informed, perhaps incorrectly, that you made the statement in the Senate to the effect that there were no military telegraph lines connected with this service. As I had letters from you regarding the employment of men in the construction and operation of Government lines I inferred that you were thoroughly familiar with the subject. This service has under its control 2,475 miles of strictly military telegraph lines used for military purposes. I am sure you must have been misinformed on this matter by some one of that class who think they can reorganize a great bureau without a knowledge of its details. You will see that military telegraph lines are treated on page 31 and seacoast lines on page 32 of the inclosed copy of my last annual report.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

The citation from the report is as follows:

There were in operation at the beginning of the year 2,475 miles of military telegraph lines, and at the close of the year 2,022 miles, showing a net decrease of 453 miles. On the recommendation of the Chief Signal Officer, as being no longer necessary, 456 miles of line were abandoned and sold at public auction, and the proceeds turned into the Treasury. The only additional new line constructed during the year was a short extension of 3 miles, rendered necessary to connect Fort Robinson with a new railroad telegraph office at Crawford, Nebr. There is now under construction, out of old material collected from abandoned lines, a connection between Fort Du Chesne and Price Station, Utah, a distance of 87 miles. This work is being done by the labor of troops and without expense to this service. Whenever a section of Government line has been abandoned and sold at public auction, it has been the rule to sell it on condition that if the purchaser maintains it as a working telegraph line the United States may have the right of transmitting its business over such line at Government rates.

It may be added that the Chief Signal Officer has followed the policy of abandoning and selling the military telegraph lines whenever the advance of railways or the extension of the general telegraph system affords the Government an opportunity of reaching military stations over a private wire. It is obvious that no private corporation would transfer messages by a circuitous route, and the maintenance of these duplicate lines would entail a considerable expense upon the Government without any corresponding benefit therefrom.

The important services which these lines have rendered to the Army at large, while obvious to the General of the Army and division and department commanders, have hardly been insisted upon in past reports. Department commanders, almost without exception, have emphasized the importance, and in some cases the military necessity, of these lines. Every exertion is now being made to put them in the most efficient working order. The abandonment of a considerable portion of the lines enables the Chief Signal Officer to considerably reduce his estimates for this branch of the service without in any way interfering with its future efficiency.

I thought it just to the Chief Signal Officer to give his statement upon this subject and to correct the statement I made to that extent. I affirm that there was no military telegraph line, because a military telegraph line must be a line that is used chiefly for military purposes, and for a military purpose there must be a military necessity. In that point of view, in the present condition of this country, without hostilities anywhere, it may properly be affirmed that there is not a mile of telegraph line now maintained and operated necessarily for military purposes. There can be no military purpose requiring the maintenance of a line of telegraph in the condition that this country now is, when there can be no military necessity for it, and even if here and there military telegraph lines have been established and are still operated in the convenience of the military service, it is only occasional and here and there, and in nearly all the lines operated by the War Department the business done for the Weather Bureau is probably ninety-nine hundredths of the whole. It is therefore not correct to describe that as a military telegraph because it is operated by the military, when the business done is not military nor in any way connected with military objects, but is altogether civil and connected with civil purposes.

When I made that observation I had not supposed that there was any one who would conceive that observations regarding the weather were a military purpose, and that a telegraph line maintained for the purpose of communicating weather observations could be regarded as maintained for a military purpose; nor did I consider that if it was built and operated by troops it would make it a military purpose or a military necessity. On the contrary, the report of the Signal Service shows conclusively that I was substantially right in the statement I made, that there is not and can not be a telegraphic line in this country now in a time of peace operated for military purposes. Says this report, on page 30:

The work of the telegraph division has involved the receipt of over a million and a half of cipher weather reports and the receipt or transmission from the central office of seventy-five thousand service telegrams. The efficiency of this division is an important matter to this bureau, and the proper and satisfactory transactions of the division, as during the past year, can only be obtained and maintained by the presence of careful and experienced men of long service.

There is the service that this military telegraph line has rendered, the sending of these weather observations, and unless the argument of the Senator from New Hampshire is a correct one, that a weather observation is a necessary part of the military service in time of peace as a means of offense or defense, this service can have no connection with the military branch of the Government. But if it were true that these telegraph lines have a connection with the Military or War Department, it does not make it military—a means of communication, an avenue of transportation. Because it may be made useful in time of war it does not become an arm or branch of the military service. Why was the Engineer Corps put in charge of the public works of the country? It was because at that time civil engineering was comparatively unknown and the whole science of engineering was made use of exclusively for military purposes. Therefore you can not assume because a thing has a possible military use, that it is in consequence of that a part, and properly a part, of the military service, of the military organization of the country.

The propriety and wisdom of this amendment depend entirely upon the proposition whether it is wiser to have a civilian as the head of the civil departments of the Government or to have a military head of the civil departments; whether the clerks of the departments should be enlisted men under military control and subject to military subordination, trial, and punishment. Those who insist on retaining this bureau in the Department must maintain the affirmative of these propositions, otherwise they admit the argument to be against them.

What has surprised me in this debate has been the number of persons in the Senate who are prepared to subordinate the civil department of the Government to the military, to make a military republic of this. There can be no argument whatever for it, except the one of mere temporary expediency, the idea that an organization already made had better not be disturbed, which was made two years ago, and which seems to be continued to be made whenever there is an effort to subordinate the strictly civil attachments of a military organization to the civil department of the Government. Every year for the past five or six years there has been an attempt to place the civil service of the Government under the control of the civil departments, and every year, as I have observed, it has been opposed, and successfully opposed.

I feel very little interest in the question whether the Signal Service Bureau be under the Agricultural Department, or the Treasury, or the Interior, or the Secretary of War; any of them may manage it with efficiency.

I should be very glad to see the present distinguished head of the Signal Service retained and retained for life, because I think a man who has adventured his life and has acquired scientific skill in lines outside of his profession, as General Greely has done, has a right to public respect and to preference in all employment for which he is equally capable with others; but the serious part of this proposition is the disposition on the part of Senators to forget that this is a Government in which the civil departments of the Government are supreme and the military is subordinate. It is a Government not for military purposes, but for the objects of peace; not for offensive war, but for defensive war, and its great object is to advance the welfare of the great body of the people, not through military organizations, but through the arts of peace and their development. It is a Government in which the civil power is supreme and the military subordinate, and thereby limited and confined to military purposes.

If the argument used by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] yesterday be true as he has stated it, then the only hope of this country is in a government of classes, and that class a military class gradually absorbing all the Executive Departments of the Government. It is for that reason that I, having no very great interest in this subject, could not conceive why there should be an objection to making this Signal Service a part of the civil Executive Departments of the Government, why it should not be put either in the Agricultural or in the Treasury or in the Interior Department, why we should have enlisted men for telegraph operators and for clerks and sergeants and brigadier-generals and lieutenants commanding a company of men operating the telegraph lines, which, as this report itself shows, have practically no other duty to perform but the duty which relates to the observations of the weather and of their being reported for the benefit of commerce and agriculture, and whomsoever they may benefit.

That is the only point I have made in the matter, and while giving to General Greely, for whom I have very great respect from all I have heard of him, having very little personal acquaintance with him, great respect for his heroism, for his devotion to the interests of science, and for the hardships which he has had the courage to endure, I still think the fact was as I stated it, that there is not now in this country any telegraph line, or a very small proportion of them, if any, which is required to be maintained for military purposes and in the necessary interests of the military service separate from the Weather Bureau.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who has charge of this bill, in his remarks the other day took occasion to criticise the letter of the Acting Chief Signal Officer, which had been communicated to one or more members of the Senate in favor of the pending amendment, and stated that the argument of that letter lost its force for the reason that it was written in self-interest, and that the author of it was arguing for the purpose of remaining away from his proper military command, and that he was of the class of officers who never return to duty with their companies if they can avoid it.

Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Kansas were entirely unjust toward that officer and without foundation to support them. He does not know Lieutenant Dunwoody as well as I do. I have known him since his boyhood. He went as cadet to the Military Academy at West Point in 1862 upon my nomination. I have watched his course with interest from that day down to the present. His career in the Military Academy was a creditable one; his graduation was one of honor, and in every particular he has been a faithful officer since, competent and skillful. He has not resorted to the influences referred to by the Senator from Kansas the other day in order to retain his place in Washington. It was not necessary that he should do so. His efficiency has kept him here. When, in 1882, an effort was made to have him returned to his battery, the Chief Signal Officer protested against it, and in an indorsement which he filed with the Adjutant-General he remarked as follows:

> Lieutenant Dunwoody is one of the three only officers now available for the indispensable work of weather indications who is thoroughly instructed in that duty. He is also in most important matters in this bureau my most valued and chief reliance and advisor, and his services can not be spared here without such great detriment to the service as to greatly outweigh any and all other considerations. I therefore most earnestly request that this application be not granted. With the loss of this officer I would feel that a large element of the work of the Signal Service Bureau was actually neutralized.

That was the opinion of his chief in 1882. Then there was an examination made by the joint commission which investigated the scientific bureaus of the Government a few years ago, and in that report I find the following paragraph:

> To make these weather indications and others within the scope of this bureau requires skill and education in the science of meteorology and experience in the practical application of the science to the conditions found each day, so that a reasonable appropriation should be made for such skilled civilians now in the employ of the bureau as may be necessary in order that their knowledge may be utilized in the practical work required. The commission also believe that the Army officers, notably Lieutenant Dunwoody, as also Captain Storey and Lieutenants Craig and Greely, have been of very great service in the past, and that their knowledge and experience should be utilized in the future, as to them is largely due the credit of building up the service to its present condition of usefulness.

Now, I suggest, Mr. President, that when such commendations as these I have read come from the chief of the bureau and from a joint commission whose definite duty was to ascertain the condition and efficiency of the various branches of the public service embraced within the resolution of its establishment—when these are given, it is a little out of place to make such assaults upon such an officer as Lieutenant Dunwoody as was made by the Senator from Kansas the other day. As I have remarked, I have known him from his boyhood. He is a conscientious, faithful, efficient officer, and because of those qualities he has been kept in his place here, as he deserved to be.

One word more with reference to this amendment. I represent in part one of the leading agricultural States in the Union. I have had no demands made upon me from that great agricultural community to support a proposition to transfer the Signal Service to the proposed Department of Agriculture. This is not because the farmers of Iowa do not give attention to their interests. They are not only numerous, but they are intelligent and practical, and if they had discovered that their interests would be promoted by this transfer, undoubtedly I should have heard from some of them, for there has been no little agitation in the public press and otherwise in respect of this proposed change. I have had no call upon me to give support to this section of the bill, and I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate longer, knowing the general wish to reach a vote upon this subject. I will content myself with saying that as one of the Senators representing one of the leading agricultural States of the Union, I shall vote in favor of the amendment and against this transfer.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word by way of supplementing what the Senator from Iowa has just stated in regard to the letter which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] received from Lieutenant Dunwoody. I would say that it was not sent unsolicited. I sent to the Signal Service Office to hear if we could get a little information on this subject. It struck me that we were dealing with a very grave question involving great public interests, and we should proceed cautiously. I found that the Senator from Mississippi had preceded me and solicited the same information, and in that way the letter was written. I think that Lieutenant Dunwoody could have done nothing else in the matter than to respond to our request by sending us information on the subject; and I think if the party that drew the bill—I have forgotten now by whom it was introduced—had consulted with him before introducing it, section 5 would have been left out. I think possibly the phraseology might have been changed so as to have given us the transfer in a proper manner, and there would have been no discussion over this section.

In regard to what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] states as to the impropriety of establishing the new department, I would say that I believe it is the wish of the farmers generally throughout the country that this department should be made an executive department. They feel that it would dignify their occupation. I know in other countries there are ministers of agriculture as part of the cabinet, and this great interest, representing half, or nearly half, of those in the enumerated employments according to the census, I think is entitled to recognition in this way. If hereafter it shall appear that trade and transportation, professional and personal services, manufactures and mining require a department, they possibly will be accommodated, or else they can be ingrafted upon the Department of Agriculture, and the title of it changed to make it a department of agriculture and industry.

I hope that the bill will pass, and I hope that section 5 will be stricken out in accordance with the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. PLUMB. I think that probably some Senator may be absent, relying on the unanimous consent of yesterday for an assurance that the vote will not be taken until 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding was that it should be taken earlier if the debate was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. Earlier, by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senate seems to be now considering an amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture to strike out the section transferring the Signal Service. I do not care to speak on the pending amendment; but if the Senate is not now going to act on the bill, I will ask if it be in order to offer a substitute for the pending bill, and I will state to the Senate that it is the same substitute which I offered for the bill creating a department of labor, and I would like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order to have the amendment read for information, but the Chair can not recognize the Senator to offer it now under the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not apprised what the agreement of the Senate was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement of the Senate was that the vote should be taken on the pending amendment, which is that offered by the committee to strike out section 5, at 3 o'clock or earlier, if unanimous consent could be obtained, and the debate was concluded, and that amendments submitted after that time should be considered under Rule VIII.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no disposition to interfere with any arrangement adopted by the Senate. I desired to submit my amendment now, in order that Senators may be considering it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes that the proposed amendment may be read for information by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I then ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I shall object to any amendment being offered now until we can dispose of the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is merely to be read for information.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state to the Senator that if he desires to address the Senate it is in order for him to do so now, and there will be plenty of time between now and the hour fixed for the execution of the order of the Senate when the vote is to be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that the proposed amendment could be read for information, if the Senator from Kansas had no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of agriculture, and to superintend said division a commissioner of agriculture, who shall be a practical agriculturist, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be entitled to receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. —. That for the purpose of collecting and disseminating all important and useful information concerning agriculture, and also concerning such scientific matters and industrial pursuits as relate to the interests of agriculture, the secretary of industries shall organize the following bureaus in the division of agriculture, namely:

First. The bureau of agricultural products, which shall include divisions of botany, entomology, and chemistry; and the chief of which bureau, who shall be a practical agriculturist, shall investigate the modes of farming in the several States and Territories, and shall report such practical information as shall tend to increase the profits of the farmer respecting the various methods; the crops most profitable in the several sections; the preferable varieties of seeds, vines, plants, and fruits; fertilizers; implements; buildings, and similar matters.

Second. The bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and use; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

Third. The bureau of lands, the chief of which shall investigate and report upon the resources or capabilities of the public or other lands for farming, stock-raising, timber, manufacturing, mining, or other industrial uses. And all powers and duties vested in the commission now known as the Geological Survey, together with all clerks, employés, and agents, and all instruments, records, books, papers, etc., are hereby transferred to the department of industries. And the secretary of industries shall institute such investigations and collect and report such information, facts, and statistics relative to the mines and mining of the United States, and facilities for their ventilation and general operation, as may be deemed of value and importance.

SEC. —. That in addition to the duties imposed by chapter 10, Title VII, of the Revised Statutes, the secretary of industries shall cause to be collected and report the agricultural statistics of the United States; and, in addition, all important information or statistics relating to industrial education and agricultural colleges; to markets and prices; to modes and cost of transporting agricultural products and live-stock to their final market; to the demand, supply, and prices in foreign markets; to the location, number, and products of manufacturing establishments of whatever sort, their sources of raw material, methods, markets, cost of transportation, and prices; to such commercial or other conditions as may affect the market value of farm products or the interests of the industrial classes of the United States. And the secretary is hereby authorized to establish such divisions in this bureau, and to make such monthly or other reports, as he shall deem most effective for the prompt dissemination of such reliable information respecting crops and domestic and foreign markets as will be of service to the farmers, miners, mechanics, laborers, or other industrialists of the United States.

SEC. —. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of labor, which shall be under the superintendence of the Commissioner of Labor; and the Bureau of Labor, as provided for in chapter 127 of the acts of the Forty-eighth Congress, with its officers and duties, shall be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of industries.

SEC. —. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of commerce, and to superintend said division a commissioner of commerce, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. —. That all divisions and subdivisions, bureaus or parts thereof, heretofore attaching to the Treasury Department by virtue of the provisions of chapter 10 of Title VII of the Revised Statutes, relating to the Bureau of Statistics, which shall hereafter be known as the Bureau of External Commerce; Title XLVIII, relating to commerce and navigation; Title XLIX, relating to the regulation of vessels in foreign commerce; Title L, relating to the regulation of vessels in domestic commerce; Title LII, relating to the regulation of steam-vessels; Title LVI, relating to the Coast Survey; Title LV, relating to lights and buoys; sections 4801, 4802, 4803, 4804, 4805, and 4806 of chapter 1, Title LIX, relating to hospital relief for seamen, and chapter 265 of the acts of the Forty-fifth Congress, second session, relating to the Life-Saving Service, or by virtue of any law amendatory of said several provisions or regulations in pursuance thereof, shall from and after the passage of this act be parts of the division of commerce in the department of industries, and the secretary of industries shall establish in said division of commerce a bureau of internal commerce, to be organized and governed as other bureaus in said division.

SEC. —. That all duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the several provisions mentioned in the preceding section shall, from and after the passage of this act, be performed by the secretary of industries. The authority conferred and the duties imposed by said several provisions upon the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be exercised and discharged by the commissioner of commerce. All bonds authorized by any of the provisions aforesaid to be made payable to the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be made payable to the commissioner of commerce.

SEC. —. That section 158, Title IV, of the Revised Statutes, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the words: "Eighth. The department of industries."

SEC. —. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with the present organization of the various departments, divisions, subdivisions, and bureaus embraced herein, except with reference to the transfer thereof to the department of industries, subject to the general provisions of law relating to regulations in the various Departments of the Government and appointments to office therein.

SEC. —. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. My attention was diverted from the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Texas. Does it include the Geological Survey?

Mr. REAGAN. I believe it does.

Mr. HALE. I think it should be included.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not sure as to that, but I believe it is.

Mr. President, I do not feel strong enough to discuss this subject to any extent, but I will submit a few remarks for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators to it. I believe that an additional executive department is proper and necessary. Instead of making that department a department of agriculture alone, I think the best interests of the country require that the new department should embrace commerce as well as agriculture, both internal and foreign commerce; and as it should be made to cover that subject, it was deemed advisable in the amendment to suggest that it be styled a department of industries.

The agricultural and commercial interests of the country are its two great interests. Other governments have seen proper to establish departments embracing one or both of these great interests. It seems to me that they are so paramount that they ought to have the supervision and direction of a first-class man, as much so as any of the other departments of the Government.

The duties of the Secretary of the Treasury are very onerous, as all persons familiar with the operations of the Government understand. They are made so, not only by the duties that legitimately devolve on the Secretary of the Treasury, but by the fact that a number of bureaus have been added to the Treasury Department, seemingly because it was not known where else to put them. I need not enumerate them. They are specified in the amendment which I have offered. The duties of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the financial interests of the country alone are sufficient to occupy the full time of the best of intellects.

The preparation of this amendment is the work of a year or two occasionally, after conference with the various Departments whose jurisdiction is to be affected by the measure if it becomes a law. This work was mainly done by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] some years ago in the House of Representatives. He and myself worked together with a view to try to secure the establishment of a department of industry, embracing agriculture and commerce, as provided for in this amendment.

It will be seen that the amendment specifies the various bureaus in the Treasury Department and in the Interior Department which are to be transferred to this new department. It specifies some new bureaus and defines the duties which are to be devolved on them, and enlarges the duties of some of the additional bureaus, so as to cover as completely as it was thought we could do the necessities of the country with respect to these two great interests.

All I desire to do now is to invoke the attention of Senators to the amendment, so that, if they feel disposed to do so—it will appear in the RECORD in the morning, having been read at the desk—they can see the amendment and see what it means, and verify, if they desire to do so, the provisions of it by reference to the statutes and by reference to the various departments affected.

The interests of agriculture and of commerce are inseparable; they are equally important to each other and to the country. Neither of them can be neglected without injury to the best interests of the country, and the promotion of the welfare of either is the promotion of the welfare of the other. Successful agriculture gives us larger exports, more active business, and more extended commerce. Successful commerce rewards agricultural labor by furnishing markets and transportation for the articles created by agriculture.

It seems to me that it will be a mistake to pass a bill on this subject which omits either, and I am not inclined to think that either the Senate or the country would sanction the creation of two new executive departments at this time; I think one executive department, to be denominated the department of industries, will be sufficient, embracing a commissioner of agriculture, who shall be a practical agriculturist, with a salary of $5,000, which would secure a first-class man for that position, and a commissioner of commerce, with a like salary of $5,000, which would secure a first-class man for the head of that division, and then the various bureaus which are specified by the amendment would show exactly what is necessary to be done.

It will be seen by reading the committee's bill which has been reported for a department of agriculture, that it falls far short of indicating the full extent to which it is necessary such a bill should go, and I invite a comparison between the provisions of the two bills, in order that we may see what it is our duty to do and what the best interests of the country require that we should do in acting upon this subject.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I did not desire to detain the Senate at all and would not now except for the period of time to elapse before the vote is taken unless the order is changed; but I will say to the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that, while I am familiar with the general scope of his proposed amendment and there is very much in it to which I could subscribe, it is so radical a change of the existing order of things that I do not think it will be worth while to impede the passage of that which is, I think, entirely obvious, which has been long considered, and which now is in a fair way to go through if it is not impeded by the adoption of amendments bringing up new subjects.

I do not at all believe with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that the Cabinet of the President as now constituted covers the entire scope of proper administration, such as may be properly assembled around the President's table and brought directly into his consultations. I think the Senator's distinction between what he calls political office and the functions of a Commissioner of Agriculture or of a secretary of agriculture, if we bestow upon him that title, is entirely without merit. All the officials of this Government exist for the purpose of carrying out existing law primarily. None of them, except the President himself, are expected by law to do anything else except incidentally to communicate to Congress the things which come within the purview of their administration. But practically what they are for is to carry out the statutes relating to their respective duties. Wherever, therefore, we provide a duty, we provide an officer to perform that duty, and give the proper character of the duty, its extent, and its general relation to the welfare of the American people, and it is entirely competent and proper in every respect that the person who performs this duty should be drawn into as close association as possible with the Chief Executive. If it is more important that a suit should be brought and defended in the name of the United States than that consideration should be given to that occupation which underlies all other industries and all other occupations, and is more essential than all of them put together, then I am entirely lacking in an appreciation of the situation.

The first Napoleon in the plenitude of his power gave great personal attention to the development of the agricultural interests of France. All statesmen of all ages have done the same thing, and it is a question now, and the only question, whether this interest is of sufficient importance in itself, with reference to the other interests which have been depicted, to warrant the Congress of the United States in practically requiring the President to take into his councils, with a view to such recommendation as he may make to Congress, the person who presides over the Department of Agriculture, and to whom are committed the interests of that great calling, so far as they can be promoted or as they are related to the administration of the affairs of this country, and it is not a matter about which it is proper to draw fine distinctions.

As I said the other day, these gentlemen are assembled by the President not only to advise him in regard to matters occurring in their respective departments, but to advise him or to be consulted by him in regard to all things that concern the people of the United States, so far as they are embraced within the purview of the general executive functions, and in adding to that number the person who represents this great interest we are taking, I think, a step in the right direction. It may be desirable, it may be necessary that there shall be added other officials of the same kind. We have now a Department of Labor. Experience with that department may prove after a time that it is desirable to make the person who presides over that department also a secretary. It is only a question of the importance of the duties to be performed actually and relatively; and while I can appreciate to some extent the feeling which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has derived no doubt from his experience in the Cabinet of President Arthur, that when you have got a good thing it is well to have it at pretty close quarters and distributed among a very few persons, to make the crowd as small and therefore as select as possible, yet that idea is opposed to the republican theory of government.

We want a larger foundation, and I can conceive that the presence of the proper person as secretary of agriculture, who has given his attention to this great interest, who has made a study of the resources of the country in that line, who has seen the bearing which the existing condition of things has upon the welfare of the people engaged in agriculture, and all the other people—that the presence of such an officer in the Cabinet councils of the President of the United States might be a thousand-fold more significant for good than the presence of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War.

In fact, in time of peace there is no reason why the Secretary of War, as such, or the Secretary of the Navy, as such, should be a member of the Cabinet. The duties are merely nominal; they are never performed by other than civilians; and if there were no purpose beyond that of giving the President information in regard to what was going on in those Departments, I venture to say he would not have them there at all. It is because he has chosen to place at the head of these Departments persons with whom he wishes to consult in regard to matters generally, whose advice he wants in matters not connected with the building of ships, or the cut of the uniform of the cadets or officers, or something of that trivial character, but because in that larger sphere in which he himself moves in the performance of duties committed to him by the Constitution and by law he wants the advice of such persons, he wants their counsel, and they might as well for any practical purpose be called the secretaries of the exterior as to be called the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. They are simply councilors of the President.

It is perfectly plain to be seen that the opposition to the transfer of the Weather Service Bureau is designed to keep the Department of Agriculture in its present unsatisfactory condition, lacking in dignity, lacking in power, lacking in breadth of operation and purpose, and that what is assumed now to be a temporary opposition to this transfer is a permanent one. Since the manifestation of interest on this subject by some staff officers of the Government, I do not believe it will ever be made, because I have never known a controversy between the staff of the Army and Navy and Congress to result otherwise than in the victory of the staff. I have been here long enough to know that when the staff sets out to say that a thing shall not be done by Congress, it never is done.

I was not entirely prepared to hear the Senator from New Hampshire say that the only way you can get on with the administration of this service is to have officers of the Army in control of it, but I hear that every day of my life. That is the whole theory upon which they proceed, that they are of the elect, and when once they get into a good place they are to stay there; it does not make any difference what the public interest calls for. I do not seek to depreciate them as men, or to say that they are not honorable persons, but what I do say is that when one of them gets located in Washington once, the one thing that he fears more than war or famine or pestilence is to return to his command.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests that there is a great deal of human nature in that, and it is applicable in other places as well as to members of the Army and Navy. That I admit. I am speaking now of that unequal contest which has been going on ever since I have been here, which arises in different ways, and which manifests itself at different periods, and in which Congress is always at a disadvantage, and so these staff officers having made up their minds that the Signal Service Bureau shall not be transferred, I am constrained to say that I believe they will prevail. I am only glad they did not make up their minds that there should be no Department of Agriculture, for they would have had their way about that, too, of course.

The fact that it is that and nothing else practically is shown by what I consider the trifling character of the arguments against it. The Senator from New Hampshire, fresh from his contact with these people, called the attention of the Senate in blood-curdling tones yesterday to the idea as proposed by this bill that a record of a storm which affected a ship at sea or along our coast anywhere should be by means of a bulletin issued by the Agricultural Department, and it did seem to me when I heard that as though the foundations of the Constitution itself were tumbling down. That only shows the regard in which the Agricultural Department is held by the staff officers of the Army of the United States and the ease with which they can get their ideas repeated upon this floor. The idea that the Department of Agriculture, presided over by somebody equal in personal dignity and ability and character to any one who has ever presided over either the War or the Navy Department, selected as the President's councilor, engaged in looking after the interests of that which concerns directly or indirectly all the people of the United States—the idea that the Agricultural Department representing the agricultural interest should have to do with the transmission of the intelligence of storms which concerns shipping, although they may well concern the people who raise the crops, is something to affright those who believe in the existing order of things and who are specially concerned about their soft places!

And so the Senator from New Hampshire, looking forward to that millennial period when our Army shall go out with white clothes and stove-pipe hats, conjured up the terrible consequences of their getting a weather report from the Agricultural Bureau which would enable them to save their fine clothes from being spoiled! But the Senator from New Hampshire once presided with grace, if not with efficiency, over the Navy Department. This record of storms at sea and along the coast is of consequence to the ships. I suppose, and the men who go down to the sea in them; and yet I suppose he would not object or have any hesitancy in taking his record of approaching storms for the purpose of enabling the Tallapoosa to put in or put out, as the case might be, from the War Department; but I think on the whole that some of those who might want an excuse for not fighting a battle and not moving troops might be willing to take the report of the weather, present and prospective, from the Agricultural Department.

However, this but thinly veils what is at the bottom of this whole thing, and that is that there shall be no Agricultural Department. The Senate, when the bill was before it, and on the very report the Senator from New Hampshire discussed yesterday, in a preceding Congress, said that it was proper and desirable, and in fact necessary to the useful control of the Signal Service Bureau that the weather service of it should be transferred to the Agricultural Department, and by a vote of 37 to 15 put the amendment on making that transfer. It went back to the House, and because the House undertook to put that amendment on the bill it did not pass at that Congress. It led to some controversy over there, and so the House wanted to look at it and the bill failed. This time when the House took up this bill they said in substance "We will accommodate ourselves to the Senate's desire in this matter, and we will provide in the same language in which the Senate provided in the former bill for the transfer of the weather branch of the Signal Service Bureau to the Agricultural Department."

It comes over to the Senate, and the Senate now proposes to change its mind and to strike it off and send the bill back, and thus to inaugurate and promote a little game of battle-dore and shuttle-cock, by which the purpose of this bill shall be defeated. That is entirely legitimate; it is parliamentary, and it will very likely accomplish its purpose. So I think that I can congratulate the Senator from New Hampshire in advance that his determination that there shall be no Agricultural Department created, because the idea of it is, as he thinks, a monstrosity, totally unwarranted by the Constitution and by the natural and proper order of things, will be carried out. I hope that in due time he will be candid enough to put his opposition on the true ground and vote against the bill, in order that it may be known who is and who is not in favor of the creation of this department.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I believe the immediate question is upon the transfer of the Signal Service Bureau to the Agricultural Department. I have heard no arguments sufficient to satisfy me that that transfer will at all improve the service. If the service can be improved by a transfer I shall certainly be willing to consent to it; but I have heard no one say in this debate that the service will be at all improved by the transfer proposed. If that is true, then I can see no reason why we should take this Signal Service Bureau and put it in the Agricultural Department.

It occurs to me, however, that the present arrangement is the best for that service, because it is under military rule. Parties are sent out to the different sections of the country, and any dereliction of duty is subject to be inquired into more vigorously and energetically than would be the case under a civil department. In my opinion, therefore, this service can be rendered more efficient by the discipline required and the strict observance of duty which must be rendered than it can be by a transfer to the Agricultural Department, which is a civil department and which has not the same means of enforcing its orders upon the employés.

In reference to making the Agricultural Bureau a Department and the head of it a Cabinet officer, if I were satisfied that that would improve the agricultural interests of the country, I would certainly vote for it. There is no greater interest in the country than the agricultural interest, and no interest, in my opinion, that has been as much neglected as the agricultural; but I do not know that it would improve the advantages of this bureau by making the head of that office a Cabinet officer. I suppose if he went to a Cabinet meeting and sat down and discussed the agricultural interests at all, he could derive but very little assistance from the President and the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior. If he wanted to inquire about the character of fertilizers, I do not know that they could give him any information on the subject. I am very certain they could not make any suggestions to him by which the improvement of the soil would be advanced, and I can not see, therefore, that his being a member of the President's Cabinet would promote the interests of agriculture in the least. If I could believe it would I would gladly see him around the council table of the President. I do not know of any good that will arise to the agricultural interests of the country by making the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there not a little chance that it may do the President and his other councilors good to receive the assistance of a man who is specially conversant with the agricultural interests of the country? It may not do them much good, but it has been the idea of the friends of this bill that such an officer thus instructed might do some good and improve this Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe it is written in the Book that "in the multitude of counselors there is safety," but I am not certain but what there is such a thing as the possibility of having too much counsel for the President, and I have heard it said in reference to some President that he sometimes took counsel of other people than those immediately around him, and I am not sure that all Presidents would not sometimes advance the interests of the country if they would do a little more of that thing.

Mr. BLAIR. I presume the Senator has never heard of that until within the last two or three years. I do not know that I ever heard of it before.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There are none so deaf as those who will not hear. [Laughter.] I have no very strong objection to the Commissioner of Agriculture being made a Cabinet officer, but I can not for my life see any advantage it is going to be to the agricultural interests.

I would gladly see anything adopted that would advance the interests of the agriculturists of this country. There is no class of men today who labor more assiduously and have less remuneration for the service they perform. If there is any man in this country who is entirely dependent upon other people it is the farmer. He scarcely raises an article but what he has to ask somebody what he will give for it, and when he goes to buy anything he has to ask what the seller will take for it.

If, therefore, this bill could promote in any way the interests of the farmer—advance the price of his products in any way—I should favor it. Perhaps if we were to get a man around the council board representing them he might insist that the protective-tariff system of this country was operating disadvantageously to the farmer by shutting him off from the market he ought to have and by depressing the price of his products. He might perhaps in that direction be of some service. But I do not know that his counsel would be taken, especially if certain parties in this country should come into power in the executive department.

I shall vote against the transfer of the Signal Service Bureau to the Agricultural Department because I do not believe it will improve that service. On the contrary, I am fearful and apprehensive that it would militate against that service, and therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I understand the Senator from Delaware to say that he is opposed to the transfer of this service to the civil department of the Government on the ground that its employés will be held to a more rigid and severe responsibility under military control by court-martial and otherwise?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I meant to say that they are under rules which hold them to a more strict accountability than the employés in the civil service.

Mr. CALL. The Senator then would favor the strict rule of the military service as to the employés of the Government in the Signal Service?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe if we have that service we ought to have such a system of administration as will secure the most efficient service that we can have from the persons employed therein.

Mr. CALL. That is the military. Now I wish to ask the Senator if that is not equally true of all the clerks in the Treasury Department, in the War Department, and all the other Departments of the Government; and if upon his own proposition he is an advocate of having them all enlisted men, subject to trial by court-martial, and excluding from the position of Secretary of the Navy and the War Department and the Treasury Department and the Interior Department, which by our established policy have been required to be civilians, from all these places?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator certainly knows that there is a very great difference between the service of persons employed in the Signal Service and those employed in the Departments. There are men out on the mountain tops, on Mount Washington and other high peaks, away from the supervision of the men to whom they are responsible, whereas in all the Departments of the Government the clerks to whom the Senator refers are under the immediate supervision of the head of the Department or some person in charge of one of the bureaus of the Department. It is a very different service, entirely different.

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware another question. I should like to ask him if for the one man who is upon the peaks of Mount Washington, or any mountain peak, or any other isolated place, there are not a hundred men in this service who are employed in places where there is commerce and population, and in all other respects like the employés of the other Departments of the Government? Where there is one in an isolated place there are perhaps a hundred, or in that proportion, in Washington City and in other places where commerce is carried on and the ordinary civil conditions exist.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should say that if we were starting out to establish a weather bureau as a part of the administration of the Government, with no knowledge or experience as to its being conducted in the War Department, we should probably create it as a civilian department. But the situation is not that by any means.

Some years ago, as a member of a commission which examined into the workings of the semi-scientific branches of the Government, the surveys and the Signal Service, I gave much attention to this subject, in common with other Senators upon that commission. The question whether or not we should recommend the transfer of this important work to any other Department of the Government than the War Department, which now administers it, came before us, and we were not able to arrive at that conclusion. In a long investigation as to the workings of this service, in which we summoned its chief and dozens, and perhaps scores, of its subordinate officers, we were led to see certain great advantages in this service arising from the military conduct of it. It is not intrinsically a military branch of the Government. That I grant; but it is a service, though civilian in its nature, that requires certain things, a certain discipline, which result rather from a military organization than a civilian one. The work and the results of the Weather Bureau are military in their immediate operations, so far as speed, swiftness, definiteness, and immediate results go. It will not do for the work of this bureau to be delayed and postponed and go through the red tape that characterizes all civilian departments, which results in delay as to conclusions.

It is as important that all the results gained from observation of winds and rains and weather currents throughout the United States should be brought to one conclusion unerringly and swiftly to be of any service, as that the orders of a commander-in-chief on a battle-field shall be at once delivered; and the commission that investigated this subject were impressed with this feature of its work, and this feature has been constantly insisted upon, advanced, and, I think, improved under the present management. I give General Greely great credit for having given his days and nights to the work of this bureau, and having made it as efficient as perhaps it is possible for man to make it. The discipline, I know, is hard, arduous, and exacting, and it ought to be. General Greely has the instincts of a military man, and he knows that every observer, every subordinate, wherever he may be situated, whether it is upon the shore by the sea or off in the far mountains or on the plains or on the hill-tops, shall be at his place at the moment and make his returns with military precision, exactness, and promptness, and, if he does not, that subordinate of his is at once dealt with in the military fashion, and a better man is put in his place.

I doubt whether you can make the work of a bureau of the sort I have so imperfectly delineated efficient, accurate, prompt, and swift in dispatch, unless you have that discipline. I was impressed in the examination we made on this subject three or four years ago with this view, although my natural predilections went in favor of making it a civilian service.

For these reasons I can not see my way clear to vote for the transfer.

I am glad to see the officers of these military establishments of the Government, wherever we can do it, put to important civilian work. There is not any too much for the Army or Navy to do in time of peace that we may begrudge their entrance into any civilian avocation. We may pay them and ought to pay them, and we educate them at the public expense. We turn out an accomplished set of men in both branches, with an education higher and better in some fields, in some lines of scholarship, than any institution in the country that is not maintained by the Government. These men stand equipped for the work of the country. Wherever that can be done by officers of the Army and the Navy it is done with profit to the country; it is done with saving to the Treasury; it is done with benefit to the people. The work that the Engineer Corps does in the examination and surveys with reference to river and harbor improvements and the expenditure of money thereon is better done, I presume, than it could be done by any other set of men.

The work that is done upon the light-houses all along our shores is of an admirable kind, and has kept that branch of the service from the objections and the scandals that have arisen in some other branches of the Government. I always bid them welcome when they enter into that field of duty.

Take the Navy. The work that it does upon the coast survey is valuable, and gives employment to its officers that prevents their life from rusting. If I had a bright boy of my own that was to enter into the military or naval service of the Government I should look forward to his life being a comparatively useless and sterile life but for this civilian or semi-civilian vocation into which he might be launched.

For a young officer entering the service now or in the last twenty-five years, having had no participation in the great military strife that his elders joined in, living under the shadow of the recollection, the observation of other men, with nothing to do, there would be little to invite a bright lad into either of these branches of the military service; but if you can put them to surveying, if you can put them to river and harbor work, to light-house work, to coast-survey work, not to engross, not to monopolize, but to add and supplement, you are doing a good thing both for the officer and for the country.

Take the surveys that are made of ocean regions all over the habitable globe by the naval officers. That is not naval work. It has nothing more to do with the fighting of a battle-ship than would be the erecting of stately mansions or of palaces or of public buildings; and yet it is a valuable and important work, and the naval officers do it better than anybody else. Here in this field there has been trained from the Army a set of men who have a wonderful expertness in their work; they have been devoted to it for years. They are, some of them, enthusiasts upon it. Change all this, subvert this structure, raise in its place a civilian bureau, and it will be attended, of course, with friction, of course with damage immediately, that perhaps can not be cured in a long time.

For all these reasons, which to me are strong, my original predilections in favor of transferring this bureau to a civilian branch of the Government have passed away. I believe it will be better policy, better legislation to keep it where it is.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this debate is now placed upon its true ground. The retention of the Signal Service in the War Department is advocated upon the idea that a separate class of men, educated at the public expense, shall be assigned to the civil departments of the Government, that the area of official employment for them, holding their offices for life, supported by the labor of the great body of the people, shall be enlarged, and that they shall have a monopoly of public place and of the high official positions of the Government, that this line of employment shall be extended instead of being limited, as it is required to be by the institutions of this country and the principles on which government is founded. The proposition is that only men educated at the public expense at West Point shall be employed in high official place, and that they shall hold office for life, and those who serve the public in inferior places shall be under them and be subject to martial law and military discipline; we shall have brigadier-generals and captains and sergeants of clerks engaged in the military but bloodless business of observing the weather and reporting whether it is wet or dry, cold or warm.

I wish to put on record my dissent from these propositions. I do not believe that the men educated at West Point or at the Naval Academy are the superiors of the boys who are educated with no contribution from the public. I do not believe that the proposition can be sustained that in any department of scientific research or practical ability they are above the people who are employed in civil life. I am aware that there is a greater efficiency in some respects and a greater despotism, and one very unfriendly to the perpetuation of republican government, in the existence of a large military class performing the civil functions of government, but where there is efficiency there is a lack of superior talent and knowledge, and where there is greater efficiency it is accompanied by a greater despotism and by habits of life and opinions and action which are unfriendly to the government of the people.

It is subjection of one man to another's obedience that gives efficiency; it is the movement of a body of men at the will of one man under the severe penalties of martial law that makes the greater efficiency, and it is the want of the broader and deeper culture of civil life which makes the deficiency in ability and scientific and general knowledge of the military as compared with the civilian class of people.

Suppose we take a look at the desertions from the Army of the United States and see what the people think who are placed under the lawless despotism of military rule. Suppose we look at the compensation these people receive, with the exception of this favored branch of the Signal Service, and see at how great a distance they are from the great mass of the people in the compensation for their labor which they receive. This will instruct us that this method of military government is not one agreeable to the American people. The habit of absolute subjection, which gives greater efficiency; the apprehension of a court-martial, in which none but a privileged and separate class shall sit in judgment on inferiors, and the absolute immunity of these judges from responsibility is not a kind of government to be extended further than the absolute necessities of the public service require, and that it should not be extended beyond the military service strictly considered.

I am entirely indifferent as to what executive department of this Government shall control the Signal Service, devoted as it is alone to observations upon the weather, and which can have no possible connection with the War Department or with the military service, for the idea can not be maintained that a weather observation can be made the basis of any military campaign or any strategic operation; its uncertainties are too great; the necessities of military life are absolute in time of war, and wait not upon either time or tide; but it is the opinion that seems to be growing in the Senate of indifference to the extension of military rule and military methods over the civil departments, and placing the people of the country under court-martial and martial law and removing them from the responsibilities and obligations of civil life that needs to be checked by the representatives of the people. The public opinion of this country, in my opinion, does not approve the extension of military rule over the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Will the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. PALMER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if it is his pleasure that the vote shall be taken now?

Mr. PLUMB. I should be very glad to have it taken now.

Mr. PALMER. I see no objection to that. I should like first, however, to read a telegram handed to me by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], which is as follows:

NORTH FIELD DEPOT, MINN., September 17, 1888.

Senator D. M. SABIN, 1213 Connecticut avenue:

It is the desire of the meteorological committee of the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce that the United States Signal Service be not transferred from the War Department.

WILLIAIM M. PAYNE.

I do not wish to make any remarks, but I wish the Chair would state what the status of the bill is and what the effect of the vote will be, so that Senators may vote intelligently upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is a House bill. The fifth section of the bill, as the Chair understands, transfers the weather branch of the Signal Service Bureau to the proposed new department of agriculture. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommend that the section making the transfer be stricken out. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be to leave the Signal Service where it now is. Senators in the affirmative will say ay——

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to strike out the fifth section of the bill. If the amendment is adopted, it will leave the Signal Service where it now is.

Mr. HALE. Let me see if I understand this. The fifth section transfers the weather branch of the Signal Service to the Agricultural Department. The amendment of the committee is to strike out that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out section 5. If the fifth section remains, the transfer is made; if stricken out, it is not.

Mr. PALMER. A vote in the affirmative on this amendment means to strike out the fifth section and leave the Signal Service Bureau in the War Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SABIN. Before the vote is taken upon this motion, by way of explanation of the vote I shall give, I desire to say a single word.

My sympathies are entirely with the bill as it is, but there seems to have arisen doubt in the minds of Senators who have paid much attention to this question as to the advisability of making the transfer at this time, and it is believed by many that the fifth section of the bill is crude and that the Weather Bureau will be injured by an immediate transfer. I hope at an early day that a bill will be perfected which will look to the transfer of the Signal Service Bureau to the Agricultural Department, which, I think, will be of great benefit and add dignity to that Department, and I hope such a bill will receive the carefull attention of the proper committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If present, my colleague I presume would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas now occupying the chair [Mr. BERRY]. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. On this question I feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], who is now absent, but before he left the Chamber he informed me that I might vote as I pleased on this amendment. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I have a standing pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is absent, and record my vote "nay." I announce, however, while on the floor, that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I do not know how the gentleman from Kentucky would vote on this question if present. He is detained from the Senate Chamber by illness.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I was proposing to transfer that to my colleague [Mr. FRYE], who is absent. I have voted, but I learn from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that my colleague is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If that is so, I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine withdraws his vote.

Mr. TELLER. I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is kept away from the Senate by illness. I am informed that he would "yea," if present. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I wish to say that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], being compelled to go away from the Senate, wished me to state that he was paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and that if present he would vote for the amendment, but he did not know how the Senator from Maryland would vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], but consider myself at liberty to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and before leaving he requested me to announce that he is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I should say that I neglected to make that statement when the roll was called on the Chinese bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I made the statement at that time.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I do not perceive him now in his seat, and I suppose he has not voted; but, as I do not regard the position as precluding my voting, I will vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I am requested to give notice that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 9; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Before the vote is taken upon the bill, I desire to put in the RECORD an extract from the report of the Secretary of War for 1887. On page 33 the Secretary of War says in regard to the Signal Service Bureau:

Both the tendency of legislation and the demands of the Weather Bureau have led the Signal Service further and further away from military duties to scientific and meteorological observations and labors, which grow and extend with each year. Even if this semi-military organization should continue, it is obvious that it must be devoted eventually to meteorological and kindred scientific studies alone. In view of this prospect, the Army has ceased to place reliance on the Signal Corps, but provides for its own instruction in military signaling. It is taught at West Point, at the schools of instruction, and at all Army posts. In 1885 General Hazen recommended a more military organization of his bureau by adding a colonel and lieutenant-colonel, a major, and eight captains, and in the report of that year the recommendation was disapproved by the Secretary of War, as follows:

"The duties in which the corps is now engaged are civil and not military. It performs no military service; its only exercise that is military in its character is the art of military signaling, which, owing to the pressure of meteorological duties, has been neglected in the past, though it is proposed to press the study more vigorously in the future. Nor is this study as pursued in the corps important to the Army, which receives, through its own officers, all the necessary instruction. It is evident that the studies and labors of the Signal Service in the scientific field upon which it has entered will more and more absorb and engross its energies, and it must ultimately become a purely civil organization. It would therefore be unwise, with this prospect before us, to provide for its permanent attachment to the Army, and to give to it the unbending organization and discipline of a military body. It must depend upon the efforts of men who are engaged in technical study, and any officer who takes part in its work must be valuable for his studious and scientific labor, rather than for his military ability and his soldierly qualities."

I only desired to have it go upon the record that this bureau is retained in the Army against the recommendation and the opinion of those in control of military affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. I was not present when the vote was taken upon the amendment. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], and could not have voted. If I had been present I should have stated, as I state now, that I should vote against the amendment and in favor of the transfer of this bureau.

Mr. GEORGE. In order to correct the phraseology of the bill, I move, in section 1, line 3, after the word "agriculture," to strike out the words "established at the seat of Government of the United States;" and in line 5, after the word "department," to strike out "to be known as the Department of Agriculture;" so as to read:

That the Department of Agriculture shall be an Executive Department, under the supervision and control of a Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. At the proper time I desire to offer a substitute for the bill. Is it now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendments are in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I will offer, then, the substitute which I had read this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. I will state—and I call the attention of Senators who did not hear the amendment read—that the object of the substitute is to provide for a department of industries, which shall embrace both commerce and agriculture, instead of a department of agriculture alone. The amendment is, I think, very well matured. It provides for the transfer of the various bureaus connected with the Treasury Department and the Interior Department that may properly go to this department of industries. It enlarges the powers of the Department of Labor and it enlarges the duties of the bureaus in relation to commerce.

The amendment has been carefully prepared, after consultation with the Departments of the Government that are affected by it. It makes specific provisions for the transfer of the several bureaus from the Treasury Department and the Interior Department to this department.

I shall only occupy the attention of the Senate far enough to repeat that agriculture and commerce go together and must prosper or be in adversity together. Neither can prosper without the aid of the other. They are the two great material interests of this country; and it seems to me that provision ought to be made for both of them to have a more thorough and an abler supervision than is now provided for.

While I say this I desire to say that I favor the creation of an additional executive department, but I do not think that the country or that the Senate is prepared to agree now upon two additional executive departments. I believe the best interests of the country will be subserved by adopting the amendment.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the substitute offered by my colleague is, in my judgment, a better bill than the House bill before us; but there is no earthly chance to pass it, while I believe we can and will pass the House bill. The House bill, while not embracing all I desire in such a bill, is still a good beginning. The great subject of agriculture which it is wholly devoted to and thoroughly covers and embraces may hereafter by amendment be added to, and the other subjects embraced in my colleague's substitute become in that way incorporated in the law. I vote for the pending bill as a beginning, to be advanced and improved hereafter.

Mr. PALMER. I do not wish to be regarded as wanting in deference to the junior Senator from Texas, but I think that if we proceed to discuss the amendment it will take another two or three weeks. Therefore I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PALMER, Mr. SABIN, and Mr. GEORGE were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams; and

A bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on river and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension cases on the Calendar favorably reported and unobjected to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to yield to me that I may submit the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 108, 107, 118, 222, 223, 233, 236, 238, 239, 243, 244, 248, 254, 255, 256, and 257.

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, after the word "industrial," the words "and primary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Catalogue of the Congressional Library: To enable the Librarian of Congress to continue the work upon the catalogue of the Congressional Library, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,067,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendment numbered 110 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAS. N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what disposition has been made of the amendment of the Senate prohibiting the use of any money appropriated by this bill to prosecute miners for cutting timber in the mining regions for mining and domestic purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate conferees yielded that amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The reply of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the resolution of the Senate calling for information on that subject having been received, I had reason to hope that the committee would sustain the Senate amendment, inasmuch as the reply of the Commissioner furnishes no justification whatever for his opposition to the amendment. On the contrary, it abundantly proves the necessity and propriety of withholding from him money to squander on spies, informers, special counsel, and other favorites for the purpose of harassing the people of my State.

There are contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill now under consideration the following items, which enable the Land Department to maintain an army of spies and leeches, who infest the States and Territories where public lands are situated, with power to levy blackmail on the rich, who will buy their peace, and annoy and oppress poor settlers, namely:

To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $75,000.

For the protection of public lands from illegal or fraudulent appropriation, $100,000.

For expenses of hearings held by order of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character, or have been made in compliance with law, $30,000.

For salaries and expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp lands and for indemnity for swamp lands, $20,000.

And it is provided that of the $100,000 nominally appropriated for surveys, $20,000 shall be used for various investigations, aggregating $245,000, which is mainly used for the support of a detective bureau, which has no place in our form of Government.

I was well aware that a bureau with such an enormous sum of Government money to use at discretion must necessarily be very powerful and influential in securing appropriations. Unjust and illegal prosecutions having been commenced, and others threatened against the miners of my State for cutting wood in the mining regions for mining and domestic purposes, I sought to avert the evil by the following amendment:

That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case, or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States, for cutting, for mining, or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 1, page 7776, shows that my amendment was offered by me to follow immediately after the item appropriating $75,000 to protect timber, as is shown by the following entry in the RECORD:

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after the word "dollars," in line 22, it is proposed to insert, etc.,

reciting the amendment I offered. By the print of the sundry civil bill of July 17, then under consideration, it will be seen that the word "dollars" in line 22 was the last word of the paragraph providing for an appropriation for the protection of public timber. By a mistake of the Clerk the amendment was inserted after the word "dollars" in line 19 of the same page, which was the last word of the paragraph appropriating $10,000 for expenses in depositing public moneys. This clerical mistake was the occasion of the following remarks by a Democratic member of the Committee on Appropriations, made elsewhere:

The amendment of the Senate is placed upon the House bill, and is now urged upon us by the Senate conferees with full knowledge that its principal, if not only, object is to effect the dismissal of various suits of law instituted and to be instituted by the law officers of the Government against six or seven of the great mining corporations of Nevada for timber cut on public lands of the United States and converted to their own use, amounting to the handsome sum of $10,000,000. This being the issue, let us consider it in its nakedness and view it in all its deformity.

The House bill as sent to the Senate contained the following provision:

"For expenses of depositing public moneys received from the disposal of public lands, $10,000."

This was the innocent and harmless little provision upon which the Senate draughted its rider, without kinship or parliamentary connection, and obnoxious to the rules of the Senate, as well as of this House, prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills.

Upon that provision, relating only to the transportation of certain public moneys of the United States, the Senate amendment now under consideration is before you, and was before us in conference, as follows:

"No part of the money appropriated by this act"—

Not this provision, mark you, but no part of the money appropriated by this entire bill—

"shall be used in the investigation of any case"—

Observe, Mr. Speaker, the audacious proposition, that investigation must cease, and in every case, too—

"or in the prosecution of any person in the mining regions of the United States, for cutting for mining or domestic purposes dwarf or scrub timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into timber of commercial value."

I have called the attention of the Senate to this matter to refute the charge that I was attempting to do anything by indirection, and to show that it was not my fault that the amendment was not inserted in its right place. The following extract from the remarks I made when I offered the amendment will show that I informed the Senate of the exact object for which it was offered:

I offer this for the reason that some question has arisen in the last year with regard to which there is a difference of opinion. I think it would be well to guard this appropriation—it is a large one, $75,000—so that all parties may be advised and so that no misunderstanding shall occur and no oppression be practiced. There were a few arrests made in Nevada during the last year, but the court discharged the men, and I understand that there has been some other investigation. I do not apprehend any convictions, because it has been sanctioned so thoroughly for years. But still, in making a large appropriation like $75,000 for this purpose, it might as well be so fixed that there can be no misunderstanding about it. (RECORD, page 7777.)

Before I proceed to show the conspiracy to absorb the public money and annoy innocent citizens of Nevada, which originated with a Democratic district attorney in my State and has been indorsed by a Department of this Government, and by a Democratic House of Representatives, I desire to state how differently the miners were treated by the Republican party. I am sorry that the right of my people to live in the mining regions and cut fire-wood for mining and domestic purposes according to law has been made a party question, and that the exigencies of the Democratic party are such as to make it necessary for its success to harass miners for doing that which the law authorizes.

From 1849 until 1866 there was no law of Congress which authorized mining or the cutting of timber on the public lands for mining purposes. Under the letter of the statute it was a trespass either to mine or to cut timber for that purpose, but the Supreme Court of the United States declared that it would recognize the fact that the people of the mining regions had possessory rights which the law would protect, the statutes to the contrary notwithstanding; that eighteen years of non-action by the Government, during which time a great community, consisting of near 1,000,000 people, had been allowed to occupy the public lands for mining purposes, had conferred upon them something more than the character of trespassers; that they were settlers in good faith, whose rights would be protected.

In March, 1865, the United States district attorney for Nevada and the receiver of the land office commenced to investigate and prosecute miners for cutting timber for use of the mines on the Comstock.

There was then no law under which timber land could be purchased. The State had just been admitted into the Union, but there was no legislation of Congress authorizing either mining or cutting timber for mining purposes. In the technical sense of the term nearly every inhabitant of the State was a trespasser. I called on the Commissioner of the General Land Office and explained to him the situation. He said no recent instructions had been given and that he had no authority to revoke the existing instructions or to change the law, and that the district attorney and local land officer had authority to institute the prosecutions and that he had no power to prevent them from doing so, although he regarded it as a great hardship on the people of Nevada. I then called on the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Browning, and received substantially the same reply which I had received from the Commissioner. I then called on President Lincoln and explained the situation to him. After a moment's reflection he asked me if I could give him the names of two gentlemen in Nevada in whom I had confidence. I gave him the names of Robert M. Clarke for district attorney and David L. Gregg for receiver. He appointed them at once, and the prosecutions ceased.

During the following session a law was passed allowing the State of Nevada to sell the 500,000 acres which were granted to her for internal improvements and devote the money to the cause of education. The people of the Comstock Lode thereafter purchased timber land from the State on the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and have ever since refrained from cutting timber on the public lands, and no prosecutions have ever been attempted by the Government officers in my State, as I recollect, until the appointment of Mr. Haydon, the present United States district attorney for Nevada.

In 1878, prosecutions having been instituted in various Territories in the mining regions for cutting timber for mining and domestic purposes, the following law was passed by Congress:

Be it enacted, etc., That all citizens of the United States, bona fide residents of the State of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being upon the public lands, said lands being mineral and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which said citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes: Provided, The provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations.

This act was based upon the following report of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, which concisely states the reason and the necessity for a law prohibiting the prosecution of miners for cutting timber on the public lands for mining and domestic purposes:

The committee have carefully considered the subject of timber and timberlands and, after mature deliberation with the view of devising the best methods of preserving, cultivating, and disposing of the same, have come to the conclusion that a distinction should be made between such trees as grow upon the mountains in the mineral districts and the forests of pine, oak, and other timber that grow in the more level portions of the country.

While the lumber of the latter is a regular and important article of commerce and is constantly being cut and transported in large quantities to ready markets, the character of the former renders the timber unfit for commercial purposes. Even were this otherwise, it is usually found in such inaccessible places as to preclude its transportation to market. Consequently it is used by the prospector, the miner, and other members of mining communities for domestic and other practical purposes incidental to the development of mineral districts. The committee do not believe that it would be wise policy on the part of the Government to seek to profit directly by the sale of this kind of timber nor to tax the pioneer by compelling him to purchase it. Except as a source of revenue, by sale to the settler, it never can be of any value to the Government. Should the experiment be tried of requiring payment for it, it would be found that the cost of keeping agents for its sale and officers to prevent or punish infractions of the law at remote and widely-separated settlements would largely consume all sums received for this timber by the Government.

Thus, while it is practically of but little value to the Government, it is essential to the settler and indispensable to his occupation and development of the mineral lands. It has been the custom of Congress to encourage the exploration and development of the mineral regions of the United States; and in this connection it should be borne in mind that it is mainly to the indomitable energy, hardihood, and daring of the pioneer that we are indebted for the discovery and development of the rich gold and silver districts of the country. What would be the condition of this country to-day had it not been for our product of gold and silver during the last quarter of a century? The $100,000,000 annually added by the United States to the world's stock of bullion will amply pay for the use of the scattering timber found in those localities. Instead of imposing this timber as a tax upon this important branch of industry the committee are of opinion that, under the restrictions provided in this bill and on grounds of equity and public policy, the Government should allow its free use by the actual settler for the purposes alluded to herein.

In 1866 Congress, by express statute, authorized the occupation and use of these mineral lands, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local customs and rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not conflict with the laws of the United States."

This is an express grant by the Government to the people who occupy this portion of the public domain. There was no law by which settlers could purchase either the timber necessary for such occupation or the land upon which that timber is found. It is a well-settled principle applied to grants that the grant carries with it all the incidents necessary to enable the grantee to make the grant available. It is absolutely necessary for settlers to have timber for domestic use in order to enable them to occupy these mineral lands. It would have been a mockery to make this grant without including such use of timber. It can not be said that it was ever intended the occupants should pay for this timber, since no provision has ever been made for its sale or purchase. The Government is more than paid for its value by the increased wealth added by mining operations to the grand total of taxable property.

This law made it lawful to cut timber for mining and domestic purposes in every part of the State of Nevada, the whole State being in the mining region. The timber in Nevada east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains consists of a scrubby growth of nut pine, juniper, and mountain mahogany. This timber—if such a scrubby growth, which is only fit for fire-wood, can be called timber—is found at an elevation above 5,000 feet and generally in the rough and often almost inaccessible mountains. It is scattered, very difficult to get, and exceedingly expensive, wood in the mining camps ranging from $8 to $24 a cord and coal from 25 to 30 cents per bushel. As difficult as it is to obtain this wood, it is all the people have, and without it no mining could be done.

It will be observed that the act of 1878 expressly authorizes the cutting of this wood for mining and domestic purposes. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, however, attempted to repeal this law, so far as Nevada was concerned, by a regulation prohibiting the cutting of timber under 8 inches in diameter. As nearly all of the timber in Nevada is less than that size, the instruction, if enforced, will abrogate the law. Soon after Mr. Haydon was appointed district attorney he addressed a communication to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a part of which the Commissioner has graciously permitted the Senate to see, in compliance with the resolution adopted on August 27, calling for information in regard to this matter. The letter is as follows:

EXHIBIT D.

RENO, NEV., April 28, 1887.

DEAR SIRS: As the subject of this communication falls within scope of your circular of date May 7, 1886, to registers and receivers of United States land office and special agent of General Land Office, issued by honorable Commissioner and approved by honorable Secretary, and is of importance to the Department as well as to the General Land Office, I trust will prove a sufficient excuse for making this communication a joint one. As you are doubtless aware, I have been appointed recently as attorney for United States of district of Nevada. Complaints have been made to United States Marshal Thomas E. Kelly, of this district, and to myself, as district attorney, within a few days past that for years past, and still continuing, hundreds of men—mostly Italians, maybe thousands of them—have been systematically engaged in cutting off into cordwood or burning into charcoal thousands of acres of timber on land belonging to the Government without even the pretense of pre-empting it or buying it from either State or United States. In the region about Eureka, in this State alone, there have probably been several hundred square miles of land covered with a growth of nut-pine timber from 8 to 10 inches in diameter to 30, and from 8 or 10 feet to 30 feet in height, and with cedar considerably less in diameter and height, have been swept bare, and probably 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 cords of wood have thus been taken off of public land and mostly consisting of mineral land without any color or pretense of right to the same, all, too, for purposes of commerce, not by miners for their mines or for improvements on the land. In a district of mineral land 30 to 40 miles away from Eureka and outside of the mining district that embraces Eureka on or near the Eureka and Palisade Railroad, at or near what is called Pine Station, Alpha, Antelope mining district, Cedar Station, etc., there are boss Italians or leaders among their countrymen who have grown quite rich on these peculations, or rather wholesale robberies of the timber on the public lands.

That railroad is constantly engaged in carrying and in buying and selling this wood at Eureka and other points, all directly contrary to the act of June 3, 1878, referred to by you in your circular above referred to, and contrary also to section 4 of act of same date, providing for sale of timber land in Nevada, etc. (pages 89 and 90, 20 Statutes at Large). C. Boltiere has now 500 cords cut, Gabriel Zonola, at Alpha, over 1,000 cords, and eight or ten other leading men have considerable amounts. The Eureka and Palisade Narrow-gauge Railroad is engaged in hauling it in their cars every day. This wood spoken of, four-fifths of it, is not over 5 inches in diameter, and scarce one tree out of fifty is over 8 inches in diameter. The fact is all that land was culled and cut over once, taking all trees of any size, and now they are cutting it over a second time and sweeping every young tree and bush over 2 or 3 inches in diameter.

These men have all been notified by men owning mines right among this timber to desist from cutting it; told if they would leave what was standing and haul off only that already cut they would not be complained of. The railroad company aforesaid has been notified to desist hauling the wood thus cut, but the parties thus complaining have been treated with contempt.

This information I have from a mining man, the president and superintendent of several mines in the immediate vicinity of this timber land. His motive, of course, is to preserve the timber for the lawful purposes provided for by the acts above referred to, namely, for purchase and for mining and domestic purposes, etc., as permitted by the act. He is verified in his statements by the observation of the marshal, Thomas E. Kelly, who has been very recently, namely, within ten days or so last past, through this country. In fact, the same state of facts of my own knowledge will be found to exist in the vicinity of Austin, White Pine, Belmont, Pioche, and every other large mining camp in this State and throughout all the mountainous timbered regions of California where examples have not been made.

I have no doubt that many thousand cords of wood could now be found and seized in various parts of this State, cut off of mineral land reserved from sale and public land not sold. I have no doubt this state of affairs will continue unless examples are made. I have no doubt large recoveries could be made and large seizures made from persons taken red-handed in the act. I have no doubt the former register and receiver of the Eureka land office must have known, or shut his eyes and ears to keep from knowing, about this wholesale robbery of the timber of the United States cut in the eastern part of the State. There is but little timber of any kind near Carson, east of California State line, except what was fairly purchased or at least pre-empted or purchased by men who appeared to have fairly pre-empted or purchased such timber bona fide.

These complaints have only come to my ears since I have been officiating as United States district attorney, yet I feel they are true, or far less than the truth, and that any honest, capable investigation will demonstrate the entire truth of all that has been said. The General Land Office has been promising in one or two cases I know of to send out a special agent to investigate land irregularities in this State.

To develop the amount of these timber spoliations, to punish the offender, to recoup what can be done, would require a smart, quick, active agent, with largely-developed detective faculties, to go around in these several mining districts and ascertain approximately what amount of timber or wood has been stolen, who stole it, what witnesses can prove it, then like a thunderbolt make or have made his arrest, and seizures of wood and timber remaining, and inaugurate suits to recover values from all solvent persons and corporations.

Would do all in our individual power to prosecute, convict, and punish these bold robbers of the public domain, but without the direction and assistance of the proper department, its influence, direction, and means at our back, we can do but little and might be blamed for that, both by the Government on account of the expense incurred and the citizens and communities affected.

So, gentlemen, we most respectfully refer these matters to you. If you think these people ought to be prosecuted for laying waste the small amount of not very high or very thick timber in this State, and that acts of Congress should be enforced, then send a special agent or appoint one here (to the manner born) to investigate these charges, to marshal the evidence, array the witnesses. I can put him on track in some cases, refer him to persons and their residences that will take warm interest in giving him all the information and assistance in their power.

If you do not think that course advisable, please inform me of your views and wishes in the premises.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

THOS. HAYDON,
United States District Attorney for Nevada.

Hon L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior, and
Hon. WM. A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner General Land Office.

If the portion of this letter which is suppressed was worse than that which we have, it is perhaps well for public decency that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] modified my resolution and left it to the Commissioner to give the Senate such scraps of information as he thought proper. The eager ferocity of this letter is one of its principal characteristics. It is a pity that the fact that this patriotic district attorney holds an office the emoluments of which depend upon fees, and the fees upon the amount of litigation which can be stirred up must be taken into consideration in estimating his motives. His idea of pouncing down on every woodchopper like a thunderbolt and seizing his wood is a sad commentary either upon his knowledge of law or his moral perception. He appears to have a special spite against the Italians, and tells us that—

C. Boltiere has now 500 cords cut; Gabriel Zonola, at Alpha, over 1,000 cords, and eight or ten other leading men have considerable amounts.

He says further that—

I have no doubt that many thousand cords of wood could now be found and seized in various parts of this State, cut off of mineral lands reserved from sale and public land not sold.

He wants—

A smart, quick, active agent, with largely developed detective faculties, to go around in these several mining districts and ascertain approximately what amount of timber or wood has been stolen, who stole it, what witnesses can prove it, and then, like a thunderbolt, make, or have made, arrests and seizure of wood and timber remaining and inaugurate suits to recover value from all solvent persons and corporations.

In pursuance of this policy Mr. Haydon had a number of Italians arrested for cutting wood near Battle Mountain, Nevada, and taken before Judge Sabin, of the United States district court for Nevada. After full hearing the judge discharged the defendants and gave a correct interpretation to the law of 1878. This I find in another communication from Mr. Haydon, dated April 18, 1888, which is as follows:

EXHIBIT H.

RENO, NEV., April 18, 1888.

SIR: As required under section 2 of instructions to district attorneys, etc., of your office, that a United States attorney should report any information of importance that he in any manner may become possessed of, I desire to say that last fall among many other miners at Bullion mining district, near Battle Mountain, Lander County, Nevada, made complaint under oath that one J. C. Latta, Joaquin Estrada, Jesus Maria Eucinas, Hillano Meza, Refino Mamfo, and Serafino Crimnia were cutting and causing to be cut, for sale and commerce alone to whomsoever would buy, the timber and other trees and undergrowth on the public land in Bullion mining district, and were severally packing and hauling such wood and timber chiefly to the Pittsburgh mines and to dealers in wood and others, some to the railroads, etc.

Other complaints were made by parties at Pine Station, near Eureka, others at Elko, etc. I knew this was the case all over the country wherever there were mines. I once drew the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office and your office to this state of facts in the line of asking that a special agent might be appointed for this State to prevent the wholesale spoliation of the few timbered spots in the State.

The fact is that they were sweeping the land clear of the undergrowth under 8 inches in diameter and leaving the brush and foliage to spread fires and consume the small undergrowth left.

I laid these complaints before Hon. G. M. Sabin, and he, after consideration, gave me leave to file and I filed informations against the six men above named, who had made a business for years, had them arrested and their trial set for the 2d of April, instant. Meantime the local papers in the State took up the matter, and claimed it would kill out all mining, stop all such enterprises, etc.

I arraigned these parties in the information of cutting such timbers not as miners, agriculturists, builders, or for their own domestic use or as agents of others, etc., who were of such classes, but for cutting and removing the wood purely for sale, commerce, and speculation, also of cutting trees under 8 inches in diameter, and leaving the brush to spread forest fires.

At the time of trial I proved the cutting and selling without previous contract or agency to the Pittsburgh Mining Company, proved generally such cutting under 8 inches in diameter and leaving all the brush to spread forest fires—first, as to Refino Mamfo; second, more definitely as to Serafino Crimnia; and to my astonishment and complete nonplusage the district judge directed the jury to acquit, holding that as long as the wood and timber was not exported out of the State or sold therein to railroad companies, that all other cutting and sale was warranted by chapters 150 and 151, 20 Statutes at Large, pages 88, 89-91; that the provisions of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior made in the spring of 1886, which took effect June 1, 1886, in so far as they forbid other than the felling or removing of such timber in Nevada except for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes by such classes of persons and their agents, were obiter restrictions by the Secretary of the Interior that he had no power or authority to make, granted to him by section 1 of chapter 150, above cited. Under such ruling I discontinued the other four cases.

Now, this agitation has created quite a flutter of excitement all over the State in mining communities, particularly about Eureka, where the country has been divested of timber for an area of over 30 miles from it in every direction, with scarcely a dollar paid to the Government for either land or timber.

Now, this is all premised of what I am about to inform you, which is all in a nut-shell.

A leading attorney and ex-district judge of Eureka informs me that $4,000,000 could be recovered against the Richmond and Eureka Consolidated Mining Companies alone for wood and coal unlawfully obtained by them from the mineral and other public lands of the United States, surveyed and unsurveyed.

That the mooting of this question caused by the prosecutions above referred to has thoroughly alarmed these companies, and many private individuals also, to that extent that they have sent George W. Baker to Washington City with offers to settle with the Government for their trespasses on its lands.

If Judge Sabin's decision is law (which I have vigorously protested against) these parties have nothing to settle for, as the wood was not exported from the State, but was used for mining and other domestic purposes, and he holds that every purpose in the State is a domestic purpose except selling wood to the railroad, which is inhibited by the statute.

The rules and regulations I refer to are those signed by Commissioner Sparks and approved by Secretary of the Interior Lamar, and are published in decisions of the Secretary of the Interior for 1886 (page 659 I think, or as I remember).

Now, I would like your advice on this subject—whether if persons cut no trees under 8 inches in diameter and burn the brush or dispose of it so as to prevent the spread of forest fires can they strip the whole public land, mineral and non-mineral, of timber and wood over 8 inches purely for sale and commerce if they do not export the wood and timber from the State and do not sell it to railroad companies or owners? This is the logical sequence of Judge Sabin's ruling.

I put this case to him: A man named Walmsley has fifteen or twenty Chinamen hired to cut wood for him at what is called Nut Pine, about 18 miles southwesterly from Carson City, which he intends to float down Carson River to Dayton, there to sell; and he decided if he cut no trees under 8 inches in diameter, and took care of the brush so as to prevent the spread of forest fires, then he was not liable to any penalty unless he sells it to a railroad company.

I do not think that is the law, but that in this State a miner, farmer, builder, and citizen of the United States, or bona fide resident of this State, for his or her domestic purposes can take the timber or trees over 8 inches in diameter, taking care of the brush by his own act or that of his personal agent, for the uses of the above classes of business and persons and not otherwise; and I want to put the Treasury on notice that Mr. G. W. Baker's mission is to settle for millions by paying, if anything, mills on the dollars of which the Government is defrauded.

Very respectfully,

THOS. E. HAYDON,
Attorney of the United States for Nevada.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES.

It will be observed that the Department was informed by this letter that the district court of Nevada had decided that cutting timber for mining and domestic purposes and for sale to mining companies was authorized by the act of 1878. I call particular attention to the following portion of the letter above quoted:

At the time of trial I proved the cutting and selling, without previous contract or agency, to the Pittsburgh Mining Company, proved generally such cutting under 8 inches in diameter and leaving all the brush to spread forest fires—first, as to Refino Mamfo; second, more definitely as to Serafino Crimnia; and to my astonishment and complete nonplusage the district judge directed the jury to acquit, holding that as long as the wood and timber was not exported out of the State or sold therein to railroad companies, all other cutting and sale was warranted by chapter 150 and 151, 20 Statutes at Large, pages 88, 89–91; that the provisions of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior made in the spring of 1886, which took effect June 1, 1886, in so far as they forbid other than the felling or removing of such timber in Nevada except for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes by such classes of persons and their agents, were obiter restrictions by the Secretary of the Interior that he had no power or authority to make, granted to him by section 1 of chapter 150, above cited. Under such ruling I discontinued the other four cases.

A decision of this character would have ordinarily caused an executive officer to stop and inquire before he inaugurated a general system of litigation very expensive to the United States and vexatious and ruinous to the miners; but, strange to say, its only effect upon the Commissioner was to order more prosecutions and spend more of Government money contrary to law, and not only that, but to rush into the public prints to abuse a Senator for offering an amendment to save needless waste of the public money and protect his constituents from vexatious prosecutions.

The suits instituted by Mr. Haydon caused some anxiety, and the attorney for the defendants in these cases, Mr. MacMillan, wrote me for the instructions of the Department with regard to the cutting of timber and the rulings under the act of 1878. I addressed a communication to the Commissioner of the General Land Office requesting him to forward copies of these papers to Mr. MacMillan, if he had them, for distribution. I supposed I had a right to do this either as Senator or citizen, but it seems not; on the contrary, the Commissioner has transmitted my request to the Senate in answer to its resolution of inquiry as one of his reasons for instituting these prosecutions. My letter is as follows:

EXHIBIT G.

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., April 3, 1888.

SIR: If you have copies of all decisions, instructions, and regulations of your office for distribution relating to the act of June 3, 1878, in regard to timber cutting on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes, I would be much obliged if you send copies to Hon. J. H. MacMillan, attorney-at-law, Winnemucca, Nev.

Yours, respectfully,

WM. M. STEWART.

Hon. S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The foregoing document, which is marked "Exhibit G," appears to have been regarded by the Commissioner as an intrusion upon his royal prerogatives.

> Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
> That he is grown so great?

But the fairness, decency, and judicial impartiality of this great man is more forcibly illustrated in what follows than in what has preceded. The prosecutions of the Italians, to which I have already alluded, called attention to the possibility of suits against all persons who had cut fire-wood in Nevada, and created considerable anxiety in my State, and was the occasion of the call of Mr. MacMillan and others for the laws and rulings of the Department, etc. Among others who had bought timber to be used in the mines were W. C. Price and G. W. Peltier, who conducted several mining companies at Tuscarora, Nev., a mining camp about 50 miles north of the town of Elko, on the Central Pacific Railroad. These gentlemen, having been the responsible agents of several mining corporations, were anxious to have the business of those corporations settled before the mines were exhausted, and preferred to pay for what wood they had purchased rather than be annoyed by lawsuits after the mining companies had gone out of existence. They made a statement from their books as to the amount of wood used by the several mining companies under their charge, and offered to pay 50 cents a cord for it to the Government.

Mr. G. W. Baker and Mr. J. W. Dorsey came to Washington as the agents of Messrs. Price and Peltier. They showed me their statement and told me the object of their visit. I told them that the law authorized the cutting of this timber to be used for mining and domestic purposes, and that they did not owe the Government a cent. They said that they were perfectly aware of that, but that they had rather pay 50 cents a cord for the wood, which was the highest price paid for stumpage on private land in the State, than to be sued. I indorsed their application and my indorsement is transmitted to the Senate in answer to its resolution and for the purpose of showing that the amendment which I offered ought not to be adopted. My indorsement is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1888.

I, WILLIAM M. STEWART, Senator of the United States from the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that I am personally acquainted with G. W. Baker and J. W. Dorsey, the attorneys representing the parties herein named, and also with George W. Peltier and W. C. Price, comprising the firm of G. W. Peltier & Co., and also with the mining corporations mentioned in this proposition of settlement and the mining claims and mining operations carried on by each of them respectively in the Tuscarora mining district, county of Elko and State of Nevada.

That I have visited Tuscarora and am familiar with the character of the wood and fuel consumed by said mining companies, and am satisfied that the representations herein contained are candid and truthful and fully and fairly present the volume and value of the wood and timber consumed by each of said companies respectively; and further, that the scattered and scrubby pine and cedar which is gathered in the region within a radius of more than 40 miles about Tuscarora never has been regarded as timber within the prohibition of the statutes. These scattered and scrubby bushes would never be used for any purpose if any other timber existed in that region, and besides there would be no necessity for using it if mines had not been discovered.

There would be very little of this scrubby stuff gathered from the crags of the mountains, where it grows, if only ordinary firewood was required; but it is necessary to have some hard wood to roast ores. The principal fuel, however, at Tuscarora, and which is consumed by the mining companies in carrying forward their operations, is sage-brush, which is gathered from the surrounding country. Under these circumstances I think that the offer of a compromise made is extremely liberal and should be accepted by the Government without hesitation, particularly in this case, where it would be extremely doubtful whether the Government would be able to make proof the cutting of any wood (because it is a misnomer to call this scrubby stuff timber) or to establish any violation of the timber laws upon the part of any of the parties to this offer if they had put themselves upon the defensive and denied the commission of such trespass. Their frank admission and offer of settlement should insure for them fair treatment and prompt response on the part of the United States.

WM. M. STEWART.

The foregoing indorsement was read in the House and prefaced by the following statement:

One of the pending prosecutions is for the recovery of $126,880.94. The defendants made overtures for a compromise, and finally submitted an offer to pay $3,000 for a release and acquittance. Three thousand dollars for $126,880.94 of Government property! The offer was of course rejected by the faithful representative of our Government, but not until such offer had received the following eminent indorsement, which I send to the desk to be read.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office states in his reply to the Senate resolution that—

This office has recommended no suits in Nevada except against the two powerful and wealthy corporations (meaning the Eureka and Richmond Mining Companies) referred to in my letter to Mr. BURNES.

The Commissioner has also given us the information which he has in regard to the matter of the compromise with Messrs. Price and Peltier on account of the wood cut by them, and which compromise I indorsed, and for which he has taken occasion to represent, or have represented, that I indorsed a compromise for $3,000 of a claim of $126,880.94. The following is the report of Special Agent George D. Temple on that subject:

EXHIBIT N.

BLACKFOOT, IDAHO, July 26, 1888.

SIR: By same mail with this I forward reports in duplicate of timber trespass by the following-named mining companies whose mines are located at Tuscarora, Nev., namely, Navajo, Grand Prize, North Belle Isle, Nevada Queen, Commonwealth, and Independence, having been detailed to such duty by your letter "P" of May 25 last.

The total value of timber, logging, cord-wood, and charcoal involved in such trespass, as ascertained, is $126,880.94. This amount appears small when the number of companies concerned and the length of time covered by the reports is considered, but an explanation is found on reference to their books, which shows that no one of the mines has been operated continuously, that through dealers at Elko and Tuscarora large quantities of mining timber and logging were obtained from mills on the Truckee River on the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada range, and that for at least ten years past immense quantities of sage-brush have been used for fuel.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid out for sage-brush alone. At this time there are estimated to be 20,000 cords of sage-brush valued at $60,000 at the mills of the Navajo and Grand Prize mines. Wood is now used for the purpose of roasting ore only.

In the proposition for settlement made by these companies under date of April 27, 1888, they claim a deduction of 25 per cent. on account of timber alleged to have been cut on State lands. I can not believe them entitled to such deduction. The timber in question, from the best information I could get, came from the crests and cañons of the mountains (the only places where it grows in Nevada), having, in large part, to be transported therefrom to the wagon-road below, upon the backs of mules and asses.

These lands being, as I suppose, unsurveyed, are not in condition to be and are not desirable as State selections.

In the course of my investigation every facility was afforded me by the persons in charge of the offices of the companies named, and I saw no disposition to evade a full showing of their timber transactions.

Very respectfully,

GEO. D. TEMPLE,
Special Timber Agent.

COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.

It will be observed that these mining companies furnished the special agent their books and gave him every facility in their power to make the investigation. He could not have investigated the matter in the field in five years, if at all. It would have been utterly impossible for him to ascertain the amount of wood consumed by these companies if they had not furnished it. The companies estimated that one-fourth of the wood they purchased had been cut on private land, and offered to pay for the other three-fourths. The agent reasons, for he had no means of knowing, that they probably got more than three-fourths of the wood from the public land. He says that this wood, timber, etc., was worth just $126,880.94. He does not tell us how he arrived at this conclusion; whether he estimated the value of the wood where it grew in the cañons and cliffs of the mountains and before it was cut, or after it was packed on mules and asses to where it could be reached by wagons, or after it was hauled to the mines, or whether he arrived at this conclusion by estimating the amount of bullion produced from the mines by the use of the wood. Here again the Commissioner is willing to make the impression that a Senator attempted to defraud the Government by recommending a compromise of a claim of $126,880.94 for the paltry sum of $3,000, and either fails or declines to give any authority for his statements.

This is not all. He makes this insinuation after he had been informed by the district attorney that the district court of the United States had decided that the cutting of timber on the public lands in the mining region to be used in reducing ores was lawful and proper, and he had been particularly advised by that official that the mining companies proposing to compromise were not liable under the rulings of the court. The following is from the letter of District Attorney Haydon of April 18, 1888, which I have already quoted:

That the mooting of this question caused by the prosecutions above referred to has thoroughly alarmed these companies, and many private individuals also, to that extent that they have sent George W. Baker to Washington City with offers to settle with the Government for their trespasses on its lands.

If Judge Sabin's decision is law (which I have vigorously protested against) these parties have nothing to settle for, as the wood was not exported from the State, but was used for mining and other domestic purposes, and he holds that every purpose in the State is a domestic purpose except selling wood to the railroad, which is inhibited by the statute.

It is true that the resolution of the Senate simply called for information which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, "ought not to be withheld for purposes of justice." What purposes of justice could be subserved by withholding from the Senate information showing how the special agent arrived at the exact sum of $126,880.94 as the value of the timber cut by Price and others is difficult to comprehend. If he had no information, the charge was gratuitous and ought never to have been made. If he has the information, the withholding of it shows that his ideas of justice and propriety are hardly in accord with decency and fair play. An official slander so poorly supported is a disgrace to the Land Department.

The reports of Special Agent Temple as to the timber cut by the Eureka and Richmond Companies are equally meager, and bear on their faces that they are manufactured and hearsay. Temple could not have gathered the alleged information by a personal examination in twenty years. He evidently was stuffed by somebody to make up a sensational report as a justification for lawsuits. It is not pretended that the timber used by these companies was transported out of the State or that they dealt in it as a matter of commerce; on the contrary, it is admitted that it was used in mining operations in reducing the galena ores which that camp produces, and without it no mining could have been done in that part of the State. It is conceded that the companies have done with the wood just what the court decided they might do, and just what the statute declared they might do.

The gratuitous attack of the Commissioner on Mr. Probert, the manager of the Richmond Mining Company, because he is an Englishman, is equally reprehensible with the attack of the district attorney on the Italians who cut the wood. The Richmond Company is a Nevada corporation, not an English corporation. The fact that a larger portion of the stock is owned by Englishmen does not depriye it of the right to work mines in Nevada. The Richmond and Eureka Companies have paid for their coal and wood very large sums of money to thousands of poor men who have gathered it from the cliffs and cañons of the mountains and sold it to these companies for mining purposes. The value of the wood that they have cut was created by the companies themselves. If the mines had not been worked, the wood would have had no value. How this special agent ascertained that the Government had been robbed of $10,000,000 by these two companies does not appear. He either failed to give the Commissioner the facts upon which he based his estimate, or the Secretary of the Interior thought it would be injurious to the public service to inform the Senate of the facts.

The coolness with which the Department asks for hundreds of thousands of dollars for spies and prosecutions, while it declines to inform the Senate of the basis of its calculations, is worthy of remark. It seems to me we have a right to know what was the value of this timber for other purposes than the use to which it was put in working the Eureka mines, and whether it would have had any value whatever if the mines had not been discovered, and why he proposes to prosecute these companies for doing what the statute declares they may do, and what the United States court has decided they may properly do, and whether his proposed prosecutions are simply for the purpose of making fees for district attorneys and other officers, and for furnishing excuses for squandering money on special agents.

I do not ask the Senate to refuse to adopt the conference report with any expectation of eliminating from the sundry civil appropriation bill the enormous corruption fund appropriated for the use of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or for the purpose of adopting my amendment, because I am well aware that the decree has gone forth and that the Democratic party is committed to the prosecution of the miners of my State, notwithstanding the statute and the decision of the district court, and that the star-chamber must be maintained, the titles of the people of the West must remain subject to the whims and caprices of a secret tribunal, whose agents are legion and whose purposes are the acquisition of money, no matter how, whether from the Government or from persons who can afford to purchase immunity.

I am determined, however, that my people shall know from what party this blow has come. It is impossible to conceal from them the motives which have prompted it. It is a great hardship that is inflicted upon my State. It is true the Commissioner says he has authorized only two suits to be brought, while we are informed by a speech made elsewhere that the people of Tuscarora are also to be prosecuted, and that suits against the companies who offered to compromise is a part of the programme. We are told by the district attorney that Austin, White Pine, Belmont, Pioche, and every other large mining camp in Nevada and throughout all the mountainous timbered regions of California are in the same situation and subject to the same prosecution that is proposed for the people of Eureka.

The people of Nevada will not be deceived; they know very well that if these prosecutions can be sustained against the Eureka and Richmond Companies they can be sustained against every miner who has cut a stick of wood to cook his beans or to timber his tunnel; and whether these actions can be maintained or not, every citizen knows that he is liable under this Administration to be dragged from his home and prosecuted, however innocent, and left in Carson, hundreds of miles from his home, to find his way back at his own expense and as best he can. They have the example of the Italian wood-choppers, who were arrested, tried, and acquitted last winter, and they know the trouble and expense the Government of the United States has power to inflict upon honest citizens.

There is no use in the Commissioner attempting to avoid the responsibility by saying that he is only going to prosecute "powerful and wealthy corporations" and let others go free. There are no "powerful and wealthy corporations" in Nevada. The mining companies have no property when the mines are exhausted. During the life and prosperity of the mines they pay out at least 95 per cent. of their product in supplies and labor, and many of them pay out large sums and get nothing. But these mining companies are the life of the country. All the people are dependent upon them. The effect upon the country by destroying these companies by prosecutions is well stated in the following dispatch from Eureka, which is signed by the leading and responsible men of that town, including both Democrats and Republicans.

EUREKA, NEV., August 31, 1888.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

To stop cutting scrubby timber on the public mineral lands for our mining companies would ruin this community. The companies would not suffer materially, as they can shut down and await the result of the litigation without material loss, but hundreds of poor men, many of them with families, are dependent upon the companies for their daily bread. They would be thrown out of employment without the possibility of obtaining it in any other business here, and universal distress and destitution would follow amongst them, and general financial distress amongst our business men. Can there not be an open investigation by responsible parties before any action is taken?

To show that I am not drawing any fancy sketch of the evils growing out of the cherished policy of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Democratic House of Representatives, I call attention to the forcible and graphic letter of Hon. Thomas Wren, ex-Congressman from Nevada, a lawyer of eminence and resident of Eureka, published in the Eureka Sentinel on September 1. I do not do this because I expect to influence the Commissioner of the General Land Office to desist from his wicked work, but because I desire to discharge my whole duty in informing the country of the plans and purposes of the Democratic party in its treatment of Nevada. The letter is as follows:

THE TIMBER QUESTION.—WHAT WILL RESULT IN THE EVENT OF THE SUITS BEING COMMENCED.

EUREKA, August 30, 1888.

EDITOR SENTINEL: It appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 22d instant that upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of the Land Office that suits have been ordered against the Eureka Consolidated and Richmond Companies for wood cut upon the public mineral lands by parties engaged in the business and sold to those companies to enable them to mine and reduce ores.

Senator STEWART, when informed of the arrest of parties for cutting wood on public mineral land for mining purposes in the central part of the State, offered an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, then pending in the Senate, providing that no part of the appropriation made by that bill should be used for the prosecution of any person for cutting for mining and domestic purposes "dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed into lumber of commercial value" on the public lands. This amendment was proposed in the Senate, but was not concurred in by the House of Representatives. In order to prevent the House from adopting the amendment the Commissioner of the Land Office wrote a letter to JAMES W. BURNES, a member of the House, attacking the mining companies and STEWART violently.

On the 20th instant the New York Herald contained an editorial based upon the letter of the Commissioner, also violently attacking Senator STEWART. On the 22d instant the Senator, speaking to a question of personal privilege, vindicated himself from the charges made by the Commissioner and denounced the statements made by him as untrue, not holding the Commissioner responsible, however, for the false statements, but his informers, and so the matters stood at last advices. Now, if the Senate should recede from Senator STEWART'S amendment the suits will undoubtedly be commenced at once. In that event all smelting and mining operations must immediately cease in Eureka district. There is no timber in Central and Eastern Nevada, except the scrubby pine, cedar, and mahogany growing upon the public mineral land. The public mineral land is reserved from sale and is not surveyed, except in cases where mine owners have had surveys made for the purpose of procuring patents, and could not be sold except as mining ground if they were surveyed, and there is no way in which the title to any considerable portion of these timber lands can be acquired from the Government.

Under the law, as construed by the Commissioner, it will be his duty not only to commence the contemplated suits, but to seize all wood now cut upon the public mineral lands and prevent all persons from cutting for these companies in the future. The mining companies can only in part procure the necessary fuel elsewhere to carry on their smelting and mining purposes. Our citizens will realize at once the extent of the disaster impending over them. The ruin wrought by our great fires will be as nothing compared to it. Hundreds of our citizens are dependent for their daily bread, directly or indirectly, upon the operations of our great mining companies. Stop their operations, and what are all of these poor people to do? Many of them have not even the means to seek employment elsewhere; and where are they to go to get it? The construction of the law by the Commissioner applies to all other parts of the State, and the conditions are the same throughout Middle and Eastern Nevada; Austin, Taylor, and all of the other mining camps in the middle and eastern part of the State are equally unfortunate with ourselves, except, perhaps, that there has been no one found in their midst as despicable as the lying wretches who have brought this trouble upon us by their misrepresentations.

We may repose full faith that Senators STEWART and JONES and Representative WOODBURN will do all they can for the best interests of the State; but it is difficult, as I found while in Congress, to make Eastern Representatives understand the real state of affairs in the mining regions of the Pacific States and Territories, and while we hope for the best, let us prepare for the worst.

Yours,

THOMAS WREN.

I can not refrain from reading to the Senate a letter from Mr. Probert, the superintendent of the Richmond Mining Company, who is so gratuitously denounced by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his attempt to change the issue from the real crime against law and decency, which he himself has committed, to an attack on a gentleman who has committed no other offense than having been born in England. If this letter does not sufficiently rebuke the Commissioner for his unwarranted attack upon a private gentleman words are inadequate to reach his opaque and dormant conscience. This is Mr. Probert's letter:

306 LEAVENWORTH STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, September 3, 1888.

DEAR SIR: A copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing a report of your able defense of the mining interests of the people of Nevada as regards their right to cut timber under the law of 1878, has just been forwarded to me by Mr. Wren, and I can not but write a line to thank you in the name of my company, as well as in my own, for your vigorous denunciation of the secret service system of the Government lately put in operation against the mining companies there.

"Alien" though I am, I have never abused the hospitality of the United States by breaking its laws, and I hardly think I deserve to be branded as a timber thief, but it seems that the bare word of the secret informer, who hopes to profit by making the accusation against me, is sufficient for the Land Commissioner, who proceeds forthwith to set the law in motion, and who on the same authority falsely credits me with the (to him) invidious distinction of being a British nobleman and connected with a distinguished noble family of the highest rank—the name of which it is an outrage to drag into publicity merely to excite prejudice against my unfortunate company.

I wonder that a gentleman occupying the high position of Land Commissioner of the United States could be so easily imposed upon or allow himself to repeat in public such questionable information.

It is to be hoped that the Secretary of the Interior will see fit to order an impartial investigation before acting on the recommendation of the Land Commissioner to prosecute the two Eureka companies, who have done nothing more than avail themselves of the only possible means of obtaining fuel to smelt the ores from which the Government have derived such large revenues in the shape of taxes during the last twenty years, and against which no protest was ever entered till now * * *

Yours, truly,

EDWARD PROBERT.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART.

The editor of the Salt Lake City Tribune, Judge Goodwin, is not only one of the ablest writers in the United States, but he is a good lawyer and a pioneer of California and Nevada. He lived for several years at Eureka, and was engaged in mining there at an early day. He has a personal knowledge of the whole subject of these prosecutions. In the issues of the Tribune of September 7 and 9 he has given his views at length, and for fear that the Commissioner will not have an opportunity to read them I will insert them in my remarks. They are as follows:

IDIOTS AND ROBBERS.

If there is anything intended toward the West by the present Administration, except persecution, we should be glad to hear some friends of the powers that rule point it out. On August 18th Senator STEWART, of Nevada, as an amendment to the bill which proposed to appropriate $350,000 per annum to keep spies in the desert and prosecute poor settlers, proposed the following:

"That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value."

At once the correspondent of the New York Herald, posted by Commissioner Stockslager, telegraphed to his paper that the Stewart amendment was offered in behalf of two great corporations, the Eureka and Richmond companies, of Eureka, Nev. The Herald also treated the matter editorially as either a wrong on Senator STEWART on the part of Stockslager, or that STEWART had been grossly deceiving his fellow Senators in the interest of rich corporations. Naturally STEWART did not wait long before making a showing. He at once took the floor on a question of privilege; explained the infamy of the persecutions that are being heaped upon the men of the desert through the agencies of salaried spies, read extracts from a dozen Nevada papers, Republican and Democratic, from distinguished men, Republicans and Democrats, and showed that the use of the scraggy timber in the hills of Nevada was a necessity of civilization there, and after all Senator BECK came to Stockslager's support, read a letter from him declaring that the Stewart amendment was purely in the interest of rich corporations, and commending the action of the House in defeating the amendment.

Senator STEWART denounced the letter as a tissue of falsehoods founded on the report of spies, and with great force showed the infamy of the business of prosecuting poor settlers in the desert on a false construction of the law, which never contemplated any such prosecutions and under which the people pursued their business in peace for twenty years.

Of course in this longitude it is not necessary to expatiate much upon that policy which on the part of the Government seeks to recover from the men of the desert for having cut and used the scrubby juniper and pine trees on the barren mountains. To show how little the men in authority know of what they are doing it will only be necessary to state that Stockslager laid particular stress on the fact that these men had actually cut the mahogany timber and burned it as wood or into charcoal. It is a pity that a mountain mahogany tree can not be dug up by the roots and sent to him. He would see at a glance how infamously his spies have been imposing upon him, and how utterly contemptible and mean are the prosecutions which Sparks set on foot and which he is continuing. It is a mighty pity that all those sensitive gentlemen, whose fathers cut and burned the beautiful timber of the East, can not be forced to camp for a single month in Nevada and be compelled to provide the fuel for their cook from the native timber of the State. It is simply a shame for those educated asses—and their educations are not sufficient to excite any envy—to sit there in Washington and, without the slightest knowledge of what they are really doing, set forces in action which can have but two results. One is to supply fees to broken-down tramps who want to make a living out of the party which they disgrace; the other is to harass, annoy, and put to cruel expense the men who are building signal stations to civilization on the desert. If the men of the West can find one act of the party in power performed since the inauguration of President Cleveland that has not been apparently controlled by utter ignorance or a disposition to harass and oppress them, we should be glad to see the exception pointed out.—September 7.

MORE OF THE TIMBER FRAUDS.

The dispatches inform us that the Acting Secretary of the Interior is still intent upon making a point against the two mining companies of Eastern Nevada that have made it possible for the past eighteen years for a population of several thousand people to maintain themselves and make a fair livelihood. His spies inform him that for a circuit of 35 miles around Eureka these companies have denuded the country of timber, and the proposition is to make them reimburse the Government for the amount taken, which he estimates at several millions of dollars. One would think that some Congressman would analyze the figures of these spies and show their absurdity. The Eureka Company began to use a little charcoal in 1870; the Richmond two years later. They have not since averaged two furnaces apiece.

If four furnaces have in seventeen years denuded 850,000 acres of land of timber, or 50,000 acres annually, what kind of timber must it have been? A furnace consumes from 900 to 1,200 bushels of coal, which is equal to from 15 to 20 cords of wood. Four furnaces would average probably 75 cords per day, or 22,500 cords per annum. If it requires 50,000 acres of land to supply 22,500 cords of wood, what kind of timber land must it be? Then during the past ten years half the fuel has been coke from England. The whole business is contemptible beyond expression. It is founded in ignorance, behind which is a petit-larceny and partisan motive. As we noticed yesterday, the Stewart amendment was defeated in the House; but last Saturday it was called up again on motion of Mr. WOODBURN, of Nevada, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment. WOODBURN supported his motion by a very able speech, showing the utter fraud of the whole proposed measure, and presented a protest signed by some of the first men of Eastern Nevada. WOODBURN handled the matter in splendid form. BLAND, of Missouri, interposed a fool amendment, which WOODBURN also exposed, and then gave way to Mr. DUBOIS, who got out of a sick bed to speak on the subject.

* * * * * * *

SYMES, of Colorado, and others participated in the debate and then the motion to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment was stolidly voted down. It will result merely in putting poor men to a world of trouble and expense, and every suit will finally be beaten. No judge in the West would permit a suit of the kind to go to a judgment. Some broken-down politicians will get petty-larceny sinecures for spying out supposed cases; there will be a blow about the vigilance of the Government in prosecuting offenders, and then the whole business will fall flat.—September 9.

I desire to call attention to another very important and intelligent witness, Mr. Osborne, the editor and proprietor of the Los Angeles Express, an able and influential daily paper, published in the city of Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Osborne is also a pioneer of Nevada and California east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and is thoroughly conversant with the facts whereof he speaks. His views are expressed in the following editorial in the Express of August 30, to which I call particular attention:

TIMBER FOR MINERS.

Senator STEWART, of Nevada, has made a gallant fight in the Senate in behalf of the people of his State, and of those of Colorado and the Territories as well, on the bill authorizing them to remove timber from the public domain for mining and domestic purposes. In this righteous struggle he has been bitterly opposed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, in an interview with a correspondent of the New York Herald, charged the Senator with attempting to shield timber thieves from just punishment. To those who have lived in the mining regions of this State east of the Sierra, and in Nevada and Colorado, the situation is perfectly understood. Such timber as exists in those arid regions consists principally of scrubby pine, of no commercial value whatever. It is absolutely necessary to the people there for fuel and for timbering in mines, and scattered as it is, and usually at considerable distances from the points where mines are worked and where the sparse populations center, it ought to be free to the poor people who undergo the hardship of cutting or grubbing it, and packing it frequently from the summits of precipitous mountains on burros to the points where it is used.

There has been great uncertainty as to what the rights of people in the mining regions actually were with respect to timber, owing to contrary decisions by successive Secretaries of the Interior and Commissioners of the General Land Office. Secretary Teller, who was a resident of Colorado and thoroughly understood the situation, rendered decisions that were exceedingly favorable to the mining sections, under which it would be impossible to convict any one of wrongdoing in cutting and removing timber for any kind of use in a mining region. His successors have interpreted the laws differently, however. Commissioner Sparks went into office with a preconceived idea that everybody west of the Missouri River was endeavoring to rob the Government in connection with the public lands, and set to work a system of espionage by means of "special agents," better suited to an absolute monarchy than to the United States. Thousands of honest, hard-working, and well-intentioned settlers all over the West and of the Pacific coast have been hounded and harassed by these special agents, and the poor wood-choppers in the mining regions have been particularly badly used. In this matter Commissioner Stockslager appears to be following in the footsteps of Commissioner Sparks. Neither of these men were probably ever in a mining camp in their lives, or have traveled in the region over which they exercise so great control. Senator STEWART in his spirited fight, in which he is ably seconded by Senator JONES, has the backing of everybody on the Pacific coast who has any practical knowledge of the question involved.

The foregoing extracts furnish abundant evidence that so far as the prosecution of any mining company is concerned there is no reason or excuse for such proceeding. At Eureka and other places where the mines consist of galena ore there is no possible way of working them except by the use of the scrubby timber in the vicinity for smelting purposes. If the Eureka and Richmond Companies are restrained from the use of wood for that purpose thousands of people will be thrown out of employment and left without the means of a livelihood, and that section of the country must be abandoned. The animus of this prosecution is clearly indicated by the fierce persecution advocated by the district attorney against the rulings of the court, and by the foolish, extravagant, and absurd exaggerations of Special Agent Temple, upon which the Commissioner pretends to predicate his action. It is not true that there is a conflict between the smelters and the miners. In the regions where smelting is pursued there can be no mining without smelting, and consequently their interests are identical. But the disingenuousness of the Commissioner's reply to the Senate resolution is made manifest by the last paragraph of that reply. He says:

The amendment, if agreed to, can hardly fail, as I stated in my letter to Mr. BURNES, to operate with great injustice and hardship to the large class of honest, thrifty, and hard-working settlers who must have the timber upon the mineral lands, however worthless for "lumber of commercial value," saved to them for their individual, mining, and other domestic necessities. It will not be confined in its operations simply to the "scrubby and dwarf" timber of the mining regions, but will extend to the forests of valuable timber, and will operate as a license to cut for sale in the general market the timber demanded for mining or domestic purposes, whereby it becomes an article of traffic and commerce; which, as has always been held by this Department, the law neither authorizes nor intends.

Why will not my amendment be confined in its operations to scrubby and dwarfed timber of the mining region, and why will it authorize, or tend to authorize, the destruction of forests of valuable timber or operate as a license to cut for sale in the general market the timber demanded for mining or domestic purposes? Is it possible that the Commissioner had read my amendment and observed its contents, or was he ignorant of the intent or meaning of that amendment, or did he attempt to deceive the Senate by a false statement of its tenor and effect? The language of my amendment is as follows:

That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber, unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercal value.

In what way would this amendment prevent the Commissioner of the General Land Office from protecting our forests or from prosecuting trespassers upon timber upon the public lands? My amendment simply prevents the prosecuting for cutting scrubby timber which can not be manufactured into commercial lumber in the mining regions of the United States to be used for mining and domestic purposes. And when it is declared by the Democratic House of Representatives that my amendment would prevent the prosecution of the Eureka and Richmond Mining Companies, or any other corporation, for cutting or using timber, and would prevent the Government from recovering from those companies $10,000,000, or any other sum whatever, they admit that those companies have neither cut nor used timber of any commercial value as lumber, nor have they used it outside of the mining regions, nor that they have used it for any other purpose except for mining and domestic purposes.

The Commissioner is careful to disclaim any present intention to prosecute miners for cutting scrubby timber in the mining regions for mining and domestic purposes. On the contrary, he argues that such cutting and use are legitimate and proper. Why, then, did he, a subordinate in the Interior Department, for the first time in the history of the Government, attack a Senator in the newspapers for offering an amendment in the Senate, the correctness of which neither he nor any one else can gainsay or question? If the Commissioner did not desire and intend to prosecute the citizens of my State in the mining regions "for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber, unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value," why did he misrepresent the scope and meaning of my amendment in his letter to Mr. BURNES, and contend that I was attempting to shield railroad corporations or other great corporations, and to cheat the Government out of vast sums of money? The Commissioner either intends to prosecute, and is prosecuting suits against persons "in the mining regions of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber, unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value," or my amendment does not affect his operations in any manner whatever, and his attack on me and my amendment is gratuitous without the slightest shadow of reason or decency.

It seems to me that the orderly conduct of business between the Senate and the Departments, and decency and propriety between gentlemen, should have restrained Mr. Stockslager from falsely representing that my amendment had any tendency whatever to prevent him from protecting timber on the public lands. On the contrary, no man is more anxious for the protection of our forests than I am. I hardly think the Commissioner of the General Land Office is as watchful as he might be in that respect. There may be places in the United States where timber spoliations are not restrained, and it is barely possible that the Commissioner is raising this outcry against the people of Nevada to cover real delinquencies of himself and his subordinates in other sections of the country where our forests are being despoiled by monopolies and rich corporations. I desire to call the attention of the Senate in this connection to the following significant editorial in the Inter-Mountain of August 30, published at Butte, Mont.:

TIMBER SPOLIATION.

In the New York Herald of the 22d we find a Washington dispatch explanatory of Senator STEWART's position as to Government timber lands. In the Senate Mr. STEWART had moved that no part of any item of $300,000 for the prevention of timber spoliation should be used in the investigation of any case, or the prosecution of any person, in the mining region for cutting (for mining or domestic purposes) scrub timber unfit to be sawed into lumber. The Herald dispatch says: "Mr. STEWART proceeded to explain the matter and to defend his own action. The whole Western country, he said, was infested by innumerable spies who made their investigations and their reports secretly. Those who were really guilty of timber depredations had time to buy their peace, and did buy their peace; but the innocent settlers were persecuted. He regarded appropriations for such persecutions abominable. He had not (in his amendment) attacked the principle, but he had sought to protect the people of Nevada from special persecution. The miners had been permitted for the last forty years to cut scrub timber, which was not regarded as timber to be protected by law. He read correspondence between himself and Mr. MacMilian, of Winnemucca, and Mr. Cassidy, of Eureka, commending his action."

The point in the above explanation is that some of the spies sent out here by the Government are zealous in the persecution of poor men, but are quite willing to overlook the wholesale spoliation of forest lands by wealthy corporations for purely speculative purposes. It is fair to presume that Senator STEWART knows what he is talking about. There is solid foundation for his statements and the Inter Mountain desires to add its testimony to their entire correctness. The extent to which the Western and Northwestern public lands are being denuded of timber is little appreciated in Washington. Nor is it understood there to what extent the facts are suppressed by the very men sent out here by the Government to keep the Interior Department informed.

If the employés of the Government would do their duty, there would be no occasion for Senators to rise in their seats and demand justice for their constituents. The timber interests of this country demand immediate and intelligent action.

The public lands should all be surveyed so that land-grant railroad companies and their allies shall not be allowed to speculate in timber which does not belong to them, and when any person or corporation is found cutting timber from Government land without authority of law and for purely speculative purposes, measures should be enforced to reimburse the Government. This can only be accomplished by the appointment of competent and trustworthy agents, supported by capable public prosecutors. The Inter Mountain believes that timber for mining, domestic, and agricultural purposes should be freely allowed to the people for their own use, but it opposes and will continue to oppose the idea that monopolies shall be tolerated which, having plenty of timber of their own, ravage the forests, promiscuously helping themselves to timber belonging to the Government, and fixing thereon, in collusion with the railroads, fancy prices which they compel the people to pay. Yet that is exactly the condition of things which has been allowed to spring up under the loose administration of President Cleveland. And for the information of Senator STEWART and other champions of the people, the Inter Mountain proposes to demonstrate the exact truth of the assertion.

I know nothing personally of the matters alluded to in the foregoing editorial, but it is fair to presume that an officer who would violate every rule of propriety and attack a Senator for doing his duty in this body, for the purpose of misrepresenting him and attempt to acquire a reputation for zeal in the public service, has something in his official record which he desires to conceal, and for that purpose raises the cry of "stop thief."

I shall on a future occasion expose some of the enormities of the secret-service division in the Land Department, which now holds the destinies of millions of people at its capricious will. Two hundred and forty-five thousand dollars per annum, with numerous deficiency appropriations added, to conduct a secret tribunal in the Land Department to pass upon the rights of settlers in the West is an anomaly in our form of Government.

In the very nature of things such an administration of justice must be corrupt and its rulings and proceedings must be cruel and unjust. We are in the habit of referring to the ancient Star Chamber and the Spanish Inquisition as the most oppressive of all human institutions. Their proceedings were no more secret than the secret-service division of the General Land Office. The only difference between the administration of justice between the Star Chamber and the Inquisition and our Land Department is that the former were composed of the leading men of the times, who claimed to act conscientiously for the government of the people, and their proceedings, though secret, cruel, and unjust, were aimed for the professed purpose of securing good government, while the secret-service division of the General Land Office is equally secret with either of the tribunals mentioned, no man being allowed to know the charges upon which the title to his homestead is being tried, or by whom they are made, has not the excuse of aiming at high governmental objects, but is engaged all along the line in pursuit of gain, either in the shape of large appropriations from the public Treasury or other and more reprehensible means.

No party or his attorney is allowed to enter the precincts of the secret-service division of the Land Department and learn whether or not a trial is there taking place involving the right to his home in the West, and we are coolly informed that the people of the West have forfeited the right to a public trial based upon charges and to be confronted by the witnesses of their adversaries. Not only this, but a United States Senator, whose character is attacked in the public press by the head and representative of this secret tribune, is not allowed to see the papers upon which the charges are based, and the head of that secret tribunal sends in response to the inquiry of the Senate only such evidence as his inquisitorial majesty sees proper to make public, and in that same communication boldly and defiantly again misrepresents the facts and renews the attack.

If a Senator of the United States is subject to slander and misrepresentation from a subordinate in a department for discharging his duty here, what must be the condition of the thousands and tens of thousands of pioneer settlers in the West whose rights are daily tried and disposed of on the ex parte evidence furnished by spies and informers at the expense of the United States?

I shall continue to protest against this extraordinary, wicked, and secret tribunal. I have abundant information of particular instances of abuse of trust of the agents of this secret-service division, which I shall from time to time lay before the Senate and the country for the purpose of eradicating, if possible, from the Land Department this secret institution of oppression and fraud.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, from the wanton attack made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office, one would suppose that the Commissioner had sent an army of detectives and spies into that State and that they had been oppressing and arresting all the citizens of the country. If there has been an agent of the General Land Office sent into the State of Nevada under this Administration, the Senator from Nevada had him taken there and is responsible for it.

Let us look at the cold, naked facts in this case about which the Senator has been making so much noise. I hold in my hand the law of June 3, 1878, entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," which reads as follows:

An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public lands for mining and domestic purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all citizens of the United States and other persons, bona fide residents of the State of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes: Provided, The provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the register and the receiver of any local land office in whose district any mineral land may be situated to ascertain from time to time whether any timber is being cut or used upon any such lands, except for the purposes authorized by this act, within their respective land districts; and, if so, they shall immediately notify the Commissioner of the General Land Office of that fact; and all necessary expenses incurred in making such proper examinations shall be paid and allowed such register and receiver in making up their next quarterly accounts.

SEC. 3. Any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this act, or any rules and regulations in pursuance thereof made by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, and to which may be added imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

Approved June 3, 1878.

It will be observed that that law excluded from its privileges all railroad corporations. I hold in my hand the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of timber under that law. They are signed by "J. A. Williamson, Commissioner of the General Land Office," and are dated August 16, 1878, and approved by Hon. Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior.

RULES AND REGULATIONS PRESCRIBED BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR FOR THE PROTECTION OF TIMBER, ETC.

Rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon mineral lands of the United States, not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in the States of Colorado and Nevada, or in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and in all other mineral districts of the United States, in compliance with the provisions of an act approved June 3, 1878, entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes."

With a view to and the intention of preserving the young timber and undergrowth upon the mineral lands of the United States, and to the end that the mountain sides may not be left denuded and barren of the timber and undergrowth necessary to prevent the precipitation of the rainfall and melting snows in floods upon the fertile arable lands in the valleys below, thus destroying the agricultural and pasturage interests of the mineral and mountainous portions of the country, I do hereby make and cause to be promulgated, by virtue of the power vested in me by the act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories (excepting Washington Territory) to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," the following rules and regulations:

1. Section 2461, Revised Statutes, is still in force in all the States and Territories named in the bill, and its provisions may be enforced, as heretofore, against persons trespassing upon any other than lands which are in fact mineral, or have been withdrawn as such; and in all cases where trespasses are committed upon the timber upon public lands which are not mineral, the trespassers will be prosecuted under said section.

2. It shall be unlawful for any person to cut or remove, or cause to be cut or removed, from any of the mineral lands of the United States any timber or undergrowth of any kind whatsoever less than 8 inches in diameter, and any person so offending shall be liable to be fined, in compliance with the provisions of the third section of said act, in any sum not exceeding $500, and to which may be added imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

3. It shall be the duty of the register and receiver of each and every local land office in whose district any mineral land may be situated to ascertain by personal observation, or by sending persons to examine the same from time to time, whether any timber is being cut or used upon any such lands except for the purpose of building, or for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, or whether any timber is cut in violation of these rules and regulations within their respective land districts; and if they shall ascertain that there is any such violation they shall immediately report the same to this office, giving in detail the facts, designating the location of the land, and if surveyed giving description by legal subdivisions, giving the names and residences of persons who have violated the provisions of the act above referred to, or the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder, and also the names and residences of witnesses by whom the facts of such violation can be proven.

4. All necessary expenses incurred by registers and receivers for traveling and other necessary expenses in making personal examination, or for the payment of the services and expenses of persons employed to make such examinations, will be paid and allowed to such registers and receivers in making up their next quarterly accounts after such expenses shall have been incurred.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, August 16, 1878.

The foregoing is hereby approved.

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

On June 1, 1883, a circular of instructions to timber agents was issued from the General Land Office, certain paragraphs of which form Exhibit R, accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Interior in this matter, which circular is as follows:

EXHIBIT R.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SPECIAL TIMBER AGENTS.

* * * * * * *

OBJECT OF PROTECTING TIMBER UPON GOVERNMENT LAND.

3. The object of the Government in endeavoring to prevent the waste and destruction of public timber is, primarily, to preserve it for the wants of future generations, having, of course, due regard for the requirements of the present. The result of the destruction of forests in permitting a more rapid melting of the snows in spring than would occur in the same region if well sheltered, and in decreasing the capacity of the soil to retain moisture after rains, in both cases increasing the liability to sudden and devastating floods, not only in the denuded sections, but sometimes hundreds of miles distant; also, the well-established climatic influence of such destruction in diminishing the annual rainfall, to the serious detriment of regions already subject to frequent droughts, are other reasons which render the preservation of the public timber a matter of vital importance not only to the agricultural but to many other extensive interests.

* * * * * * *

44. Special timber agents should remember that it is not the purpose of the law nor of the regulations of this Department to prohibit the use of so much of the public timber as may be actually needed by bona fide settlers for agricultural and domestic purposes, but to prevent its being made an article of speculation for the pecuniary gain of a few individuals to the detriment of the many, or from being wantonly wasted or destroyed. When an agent understands this, and convinces the people in the district to which he is assigned that such is the case, he will find no difficulty in securing their active support and co-operation.

* * * * * * *

50. It is not the object of the Government to persecute poor wood-choppers or cutters who are employed or induced to fell or remove the timber for others who are to reap the profits therefrom, but to punish the principals therein or the parties to be directly benefited in the case, they being the more guilty parties.

51. Care should be taken to ascertain whether the alleged trespasser has any right or authority to take such timber as specified under heads of "Homestead or pre-emption entry," "Right of railroad companies, etc.," and "Mineral lands," pages 6 to 11.

* * * * * * *

53. Having all the facts in your possession you should (see section 3, circular of May 27, 1885) at once fill out a form of report (in duplicate) and transmit the same to this office, being particular to state the facts in full under each head, and in accordance with instructions given under the head of "Manner of making reports of timber trespass." You should call upon the trespasser in every instance where practicable and request him to state his side of the case under oath.

This whole system of special agents of the Land Department originated about 1878 or 1879, and has been in operation under every administration and every Secretary of the Interior since. The Commissioner of the General Land Office inherited the system from a former administration. I have read the regulations prohibiting the cutting or felling of any timber less than 8 inches in diameter.

Mr. STEWART. What is the date of the regulations?

Mr. COCKRELL. The date is August 16, 1878.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the rules expressly prohibit the interruption of Senators in debate without their consent first obtained by addressing the Chair. The Chair will insist upon the observance of that rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am quoting from the document which the Senator held in his hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, but I am quoting from Senate Executive Document No. 259, Fiftieth Congress, first session, which the Senator had furnished to the Senate under his resolution. I am quoting from the same document that the Senator from Nevada used except the part that he did not quote. Another circular from the General Land Office on this subject is as follows:

[Circular.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 5, 1886.

By virtue of the power vested in the Secretary of the Interior by the first section of the act of June 3, 1878, entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," the following rules and regulations are hereby prescribed:

1. The act applies only to the States of Colorado and Nevada, and to the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, and Montana, and other mineral districts of the United States not specially provided for.

2. The land from which timber is felled or removed under the provisions of the act must be known to be of a strictly mineral character and that it is "not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry."

3. No person not a citizen or bona fide resident of a State, Territory, or other mineral district, provided for in said act, is permitted to fell or remove timber from mineral lands therein. And no person, firm, or corporation felling or removing timber under this act shall sell or dispose of the same, or the lumber manufactured therefrom, to any other than citizens and bona fide residents of the State or Territory where such timber is cut, nor for any other purpose than for the legitimate use of said purchaser for the purposes mentioned in said act.

4. Every owner or manager of a saw-mill, or other person felling or removing timber under the provisions of this act shall keep a record of all timber so cut or removed, stating time when cut, names of parties cutting the same or in charge of the work, and describing the land from whence cut by legal subdivisions if surveyed, and as near as practicable if not surveyed, with a statement of the evidence upon which it is claimed that the land is mineral in character, and stating also the kind and quantity of lumber manufactured therefrom, together with the names of parties to whom any such timber or lumber is sold, dates of sale, and the purpose for which sold, and shall not sell or dispose of such timber, or lumber made from such timber, without taking from the purchaser a written agreement that the same shall not be used except for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes within the State or Territory; and every such purchaser shall further be required to file with said owner or manager a certificate, under oath, that he purchases such timber or lumber exclusively for his own use and for the purposes aforesaid.

5. The books, files, and records of all mill-men or other persons so cutting, removing, and selling such timber or lumber, required to be kept as above mentioned, shall at all times be subject to the inspection of the officers and agents of this Department.

6. Timber felled or removed shall be strictly limited to building, agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes, within the State or Territory where it grew.

All cutting of such timber for use outside of the State or Territory where the same is cut, and all removals thereof outside of the State or Territory where it is cut are forbidden.

7. No person will be permitted to fell or remove any growing trees of any kind whatsoever less than 8 inches in diameter.

8. Persons felling or removing timber from public mineral lands of the United States must utilize all of each tree cut that can be profitably used, and must cut and remove the tops and brush, or dispose of the same in such manner as to prevent the spread of forest fires. The act under which these rules and regulations were prescribed provides as follows:

SEC. 3. Any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this act, or any rules and regulations in pursuance thereof made by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined any sum not exceeding $500 and to which may be added imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

9. These rules and regulations shall take effect September 1, 1886, and all existing rules and regulations heretofore prescribed under said act, inconsistent herewith, are hereby revoked.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved August 5, 1886.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

I have here the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior giving information in reply to the resolution of the Senator from Nevada, which says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 3, 1888.

SIR: I have received by reference from the Assistant Secretary for report, etc., Senate resolution of August 27, 1888, directing the forwarding of copies of all papers, "except such as in your opinion ought to be withheld for purposes of justice," upon which were based the statements in my letter of the 18th ultimo, to Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, of the House of Representatives, with regard to the following amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill:

"That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used in the investigation of any case or the prosecution of any person in the mining region of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber, unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value."

Inasmuch as it may be inferred and believed from the debate had in the Senate in offering and adopting the resolution calling for the inclosed papers that this office opposes the amendment therein referred to, in order to maintain a policy which it is alleged this Department attempts, namely, "a general prosecution now proposed against all the miners who cut timber on the public lands for firewood," and as it is claimed that the amendment is necessary and was offered in order to save the people of Nevada, and of all other mining regions, from such special persecution by the Government as occurred in the case of some Italians in Nevada against whom criminal proceedings were instituted last January for cutting fire-wood in the high mountains of a certain mining region—which case was spoken of as my "first proceeding" in the history of this matter touching the amendment—I deem it proper to state that the proceedings against these Italians were had without the knowledge or recommendation of this office, and were not based upon any investigation or information furnished by an agent of this office. Futhermore, this office does not permit, so far as its action can extend to prevent it, any interference with wood-choppers hired by miners or other persons to cut for fuel for their own consumption, for mining or other domestic purposes, such timber or trees as the law allows to be cut upon the public lands mineral in character. (See extract herewith from Instructions to Special Timber Agents, Exhibit R.)

My action in the premises, indicated in the letter to Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, upon which the Senate resolution is based, was not directed against the wood-choppers and miners and the body of settlers in general, but against the large monopolizing mining corporations only, whose interests are mainly those of self-aggrandizement, and frequently composed, as they are known to be, of aliens holding few interests in common with those of our own citizens. These large mining corporations, for the smelting and reduction of the ore, consume through the charcoal-burners every vestige of timber, which, though "scrubby and dwarf," is about the only fire-wood the country affords, and is required for the individual necessities of the miner and settler. Its guarded use is therefore rendered all the more essential to the welfare and comfort of the settlers and the general community; essential also to the preservation of such small degree of moisture and fertility as the soil may possess, and to averting the damaging results to the country which follow the laying bare of mountain and hill sides.

This office has recommended no suits in Nevada except against the two powerful and wealthy corporations referred to in my letter to Mr. BURNES. The report of the special agent, and not of any possible informer hoping for moiety, as intimated, was the basis of those proceedings. That agent was not sent to Nevada until some time in May last. Until then there had been no special agent in Nevada for several years. There is therefore no ground upon which any of the citizens in that State can characterize and complain of the special agents as "spies." The ordering of a special agent to Nevada in May last grew out of the fact that in advance of any investigation of facts in the case there had been presented to me in person, by the attorneys of George W. Peltier & Co., the Navajo and five other mining companies in that State, a statement and offer of compromise, indorsed and approved by Hon. W. M. STEWART (copy herewith, marked Exhibit I), in the matter of the cutting of certain timber by the said mining companies. No action therein could properly be taken by this office without having first investigated and thereby informed itself of the facts in the case. These parties were so informed, and they thereupon requested that an agent be sent at as early a day as possible (copy of letter herewith, marked Exhibit I). It was upon this Special Agent Temple was sent to Nevada, and he has made no investigations except of these and other corporations who use the timber for smelting purposes.

It has long been held that the law does not contemplate that charcoal-burners or others shall be allowed to sweep the entire country of the timber thereon. It provides that only such timber and undergrowth as is growing upon mineral lands may be cut, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection thereof, etc. The Department has therefore prescribed that no trees less than 8 inches in diameter may be cut for mining or other domestic purposes. (See copy herewith of circular dated August 15, 1878, approved by Secretary Schurz August 16, 1878; copy of circular approved by Secretary Teller June 1, 1883, paragraphs 3, 44, 50, 51, 53; and of circular approved by Secretary Lamar August 5, 1886, all included in Exhibit S.)

It has seemed to this Department to be an erroneous construction put upon the act of June 3, 1878, by mining corporations, whereby they claim as lawful the wholesale cutting and stripping the face of the country of every vestige of timber, no matter how small and young, so long as it is for mining purposes.

In the report from this office, dated October 3, 1887, requested and concurred in by the Department (see copy of Acting Secretary's letter dated October 11, 1887, Exhibit Q), upon the petition of A. C. Dake et al., Colorado, asking for a change of the rules and regulations prescribed under the act of June 3, 1878, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 5, 1886, it was stated as follows:

"From the records of this office it appears that the use of charcoal is detrimental to the mining interests, in that the charcoal-burners take everything large and small, and the miners allege that by so doing mining operations are materially retarded, since, except in operations of the largest scale in clearly-developed mines, like those of the Richmond Mining Company and the Eureka Consolidated Mining Company, the use of timber for mining purposes is necessarily slow, while for charcoal the rapidity of its use is only limited by the size of the kilns and the number of men employed, who have only to fell and cut up the trees.

"There appears in fact to be an open issue on this point between the mining and the smelting interests; the smelters maintaining that they must have charcoal or raise the price of smelting; the miners objecting to the unlimited consumption of public timber by the burners, but being in a sense at the mercy of the smelters, who represent a skilled industry, they are not prepared to stand the threatened rise in the price of smelting. Not only does it appear that smelting is a distinct industry from mining, but it is further shown that the smelters are not themselves directly engaged in charcoal burning, but purchase the charcoal from those who make a business of burning it and placing it upon the market as an article of 'traffic.' Official statements received from several of the States and Territories affirm 'that the use of charcoal is not absolutely necessary in smelting ores,' and 'that it is only a question of short time before wood and charcoal for smelting purposes will give way entirely to coke and coal.'

The amendment, if agreed to, can hardly fail, as I stated in my letter to Mr. BURNES, to operate with great injustice and hardship to the large class of honest, thrifty, and hard-working settlers, who must have the timber upon the mineral lands, however worthless for "lumber of commercial value," saved to them for their individual, mining, and other domestic necessities. It will not be confined in its operations simply to the "scrubby and dwarf" timber of the mining regions, but will extend to the forests of valuable timber, and will operate as a license to cut for sale in the general market the timber demanded for mining or domestic purposes, whereby it becomes an article of traffic and commerce; which, as has always been held by this Department, the law neither authorizes nor intends.

Returned herewith is the Senate resolution.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Commissioner.

Hon. WM. F. VILAS,
Secretary of the Interior.

There had not been a solitary special agent of the General Land Office sent into the State of Nevada. On September 18, 1886, according to this report, the surveyor-general of Nevada, Mr. C. S. Preble, a distinguished Republican, appointed under a former administration, sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office this letter, marked "Exhibit A," in Senate Executive Document 259, already referred to;

it is one of the parts of that document that were not quoted by the Senator from Nevada:

EXHIBIT A.

CARSON CITY, NEV., September 18, 1886.

SIR: The inclosed came to this office to-day, and I take the liberty of forwarding it to you.

Respectfully,

C. S. PREBLE,
Surveyor-General State of Nevada.

WM. A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

What was the "inclosed?" It is as follows:

AURORA, ESMERALDA COUNTY, NEVADA, September 13, 1886.

TIMBER AGENT:

If you would come out to Hawthorn, Nev.—I live in Coreyville and Aurora—I will put you on track of timber cut on Government land. I am a miner and prospector and well acquainted with the country.

Yours, respectfully,

LEW C. FINNEY.

P. S.—I sent to Colonel Deaney three years ago; he found everything as I told him.

So it seems there had been an agent out there under a former administration, some three years before 1886. The man continues:

I send you small piece from the Walker Lake Bulletin, published in Hawthorn, in this county. It is 12 miles from Hawthorn to Corey. I will be there. This is private.

L. FINNEY.

Slip inclosed reads:

The Government timber agent might put in some time profitably around Aurora and Bodie.

The following letters form part of Senate Executive Document 259, Fiftieth Congress, first session, from which document the Senator from Nevada has read in part:

EXHIBIT B.

WHITE ROCK, ELKO COUNTY, NEVADA, October 2, 1886.

DEAR SIR: One Perry Gosset is making a practice of cutting timber on non-mineral lands for sale and barter, at present on the Bull Run Mountains, where the feeders of the Owhyhee River rise, and it is the opinion of this community that it should be stopped. This man has made a practice of it for the last few years, at present filling a contract for two thousand posts for cattle-men.

Respectfully,

CHAS. H. WALL.

To the COMMISSIONER.

EXHIBIT C.

WINNEMUCCA, February 7, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I wish to refer you to an order made taking effect on the 1st of May last, referring to an act of June 3, 1878, relative to felling timber in Colorado, Nevada, etc., restricting parties non-citizens, and cutting for commerce and merchandising was strictly forbidden. Law-abiding citizens in this locality regarded the order, while about forty to fifty Italians, many of them non-citizens, disregarded the order and sneer at it, and are making money of the timber they cut and destroy. The boss Italians work the new-comers in the mountains as peons, at low wages, as they can not talk our language, and by keeping them in that way they can not learn to contract, and the bosses make money by keeping this pinnage, and also monopolize the country as they claim locations and drive individual citizens off their pretended claims. I would suggest that this order is carried into effect—as it is a good one—or be countermanded, so that a good law-abiding is not intimidated fear he might get entangled with the Government.

Most respectfully yours,

J. F. ABEL.

The honorable SECRETARY.

P. S.—A deputy marshal can get all the information desired by calling at this place (Winnemucca, Nev.).

EXHIBIT D.

RENO, NEV., April 28, 1887.

DEAR SIRS: As the subject of this communication falls within scope of your circular of date May 7, 1886, to registers and receivers of United States land office and special agent of General Land Office, issued by honorable Commissioner and approved by honorable Secretary, and is of importance to the Department as well as to the General Land Office, I trust will prove a sufficient excuse for making this communication a joint one. As you are doubtless aware I have been appointed recently as attorney for United States of district of Nevada. Complaints have been made to United States Marshal Thomas E. Kelly, of this district, and to myself, as district attorney, within a few days past that for years past, and still continuing, hundreds of men—mostly Italians, maybe thousands of them—have been systematically engaged in cutting off into cordwood or burning into charcoal thousands of acres of timber on land belonging to the Government without even the pretense of pre-empting it or buying it from either State or United States.

In the region about Eureka, in this State alone, there have probably been several hundred square miles of land covered with a growth of nut-pine timber from 8 to 10 inches in diameter to 30, and from 8 or 10 feet to 30 feet in height, and with cedar considerably less in diameter and height, have been swept bare, and probably 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 cords of wood have thus been taken off of public land, and mostly consisting of mineral land, without any color or pretense of right to the same, all, too, for purposes of commerce, not by miners for their mines or for improvements on the land. In a district of mineral land 30 to 40 miles away from Eureka and outside of the mining district that embraces Eureka, on or near the Eureka and Palisade Railroad, at or near what is called Pine Station, Alpha, Antelope mining district, Cedar Station, etc., there are boss Italians or leaders among their countrymen who have grown quite rich on these peculations, or rather wholesale robberies of the timber on the public lands.

That railroad is constantly engaged in carrying and in buying and selling this wood at Eureka and other points, all directly contrary to the act of June 3, 1878, referred to by you in your circular above referred to, and contrary also to section 4 of act of same date, providing for sale of timber land in Nevada, etc. (pages 89 and 90, 20 Statutes at Large). C. Boltiere has now 500 cords cut, Gabriel Zonola, at Alpha, over 1,000 cords, and eight or ten other leading men have considerable amounts. The Eureka and Palisade Narrow-gauge Railroad is engaged in hauling it in their cars every day. This wood spoken of, four-fifths of it, is not over 5 inches in diameter, and scarce one tree out of fifty is over 8 inches in diameter. The fact is all that land was culled and cut over once, taking all trees of any size, and now they are cutting it over a second time and sweeping every young tree and bush over 2 or 3 inches in diameter.

These men have all been notified by men owning mines right among this timber to desist from cutting it; told if they would leave what was standing and haul off only that already cut they would not be complained of. The railroad company aforesaid has been notified to desist hauling the wood thus cut, but the parties thus complaining have been treated with contempt.

This information I have from a mining man, the president and superintendent of several mines in the immediate vicinity of this timber land. His motive, of course, is to preserve the timber for the lawful purposes provided for by the acts above referred to, namely, for purchase and for mining and domestic purposes, etc., as permitted by the act. He is verified in his statements by the observation of the marshal, Thomas E. Kelly, who has been very recently, namely, within ten days or so last past, through this country. In fact the same state of facts of my own knowledge will be found to exist in the vicinity of Austin, White Pine, Belmont, Pioche, and every other large mining camp in this State and throughout all the mountainous timbered regions of California where examples have not been made.

* * * * * * *

So, gentlemen, we most respectfully refer these matters to you. If you think these people ought to be prosecuted for laying waste the small amount of not very high or very thick timber in this State, and that acts of Congress should be enforced, then send a special agent or appoint one here (to the manner born) to investigate these charges, to marshal the evidence, array the witnesses. I can put him on track in some cases, refer him to persons and their residences that will take warm interest in giving him all the information and assistance in their power.

If you do not think that course advisable, please inform me of your views and wishes in the premises.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

THOS. HAYDON,
United States District Attorney for Nevada.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior, and

Hon. WM. A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner General Land Office.

The last letter shows that many depredations were being committed in that region. There is another letter from Mr. Haydon, dated July 27, 1887, addressed to the Solicitor of the Treasury, calling attention to the depredations, etc. It is as follows:

EXHIBIT E.

RENO, NEV., July 27, 1887.

SIR: Some two months or more since I wrote a long letter conjointly to the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, informing them of a wholesale despoliation of timber on the public lands of one mineral district in this State, much of which was of timber less than 8 inches in diameter, for firewood, for sale and as a matter of commerce to inhabitants of Eureka out of said mining district where cut, to the amount of several thousand cords. Told them the same practice was common to all the mining towns and camps in this State; requested them to appoint a special agent of the Land Office to look into and investigate the matter, prepare the evidence, and bring the guilty parties to justice.

I was induced to write a joint letter because the Commissioner had issued a circular to the register and receiver of the land offices in the State, calling upon them to investigate such cases, etc.

Without entering into particulars it is notorious in this State that a wholesale robbery of the public lands here of their timber is indulged in in every mining section of the State wherever cutting, hauling, and transporting such wood will pay a profit to the individual without regard to the rights of the Government and the protests of individuals interested in the mining districts where such timber is found. I have had complaints from three different, widely separated mining districts of such trespasses.

Railroads make a business of carrying such wood and selling it, even against the notification and protests of miners in such districts.

The honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior have not even had the courtesy to notice my communication.

I read an injunction to communicate such matters to you, in my search for the duties of my office, and therefore this.

Very respectfully,

THOS. HAYDON,
United States District Attorney for Nevada.

Hon. A. MCCUE,
Solicitor of Treasury of United States, Washington, D. C.

All this had taken place, and not an agent had been sent there. These complaints had been made by citizens and by officials of Nevada—complaints of lawless depredations on the public domain and the cutting of timber in direct violation of law and in direct violation of the orders of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the diameter of the timber.

The next thing that comes in is a letter from Mr. G. R. A. Browne and Joseph M. Jones, dated Candelaria, Esmeralda County, August 30, 1887:

EXHIBIT F.

CANDELARIA, ESMERALDA COUNTY, NEVADA, August 30, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Believing, as we do, the current reports published from time to time in the public press of the country to the effect that the chief officials of the Land Department at Washington are doing their whole duty, under the laws and with the facts before them, by their untiring efforts to put a stop to the present and heretofore popular system of defrauding the General Government of its public lands and the valuable timber on the public domain by false and fraudulent entries and the various other ways and means known only to the initiated, and as far as possible by bringing to the bar of public justice such offenders, we are therefore greatly strengthened in our self-conceived duty, as manifested by forwarding this communication, and at the same time resting under a sanguine belief that should it receive your credence and the indorsement of your Department it must ultimately, and perhaps at a very early day, lead to desirable results by breaking up and bringing to justice and merited punishment the leading spirits at least of one of the most gigantic, open, and at the same time insolent associations of land and timber thieves ever known west of the Rocky Mountains.

It is a fact well known to many persons residing in this particular and comparatively isolated part of the State of Nevada that there is now and for more than five years last past has been an association or secret organization composed of wealthy and influential men residing and doing business in this State, who, aside from their legitimate callings, have heretofore and now do make a business of surreptitiously appropriating to their own uses and profit the valuable timber on Government lands situated more particularly in this Esmeralda County.

The said lands are in all cases mineral lands, but their present and prospective value lies chiefly in its abundant timber tracts, which, however, are fast disappearing by and under the vandal system of this particular syndicate.

During the last few years and up to April last they had cut over and thus denuded many square miles and thousands of acres of such public woodland the timber of which has been chiefly manufactured on the ground into cord-wood, and thus sold and delivered, and again resold and delivered to consumers at an immense profit all around. The chief beneficiaries of this enterprise are mainly leading lights of a certain railroad system in this State, one of whose lines passes through the country and timber tracts referred to, and whose aggregate profits are on the whole almost beyond credence.

In the mean time, should you deem this communication worthy of consideration and attention, we can assure you that by proper and discreet investigation your Department will find a rich and fertile field of fraud against the Government in which to delve and explore.

In conclusion, and for all further facts and particulars and of names of persons and witnesses in connection with the subject-matter hereof, we confidently and cheerfully introduce and refer you to our worthy fellow-citizen, Hon. A. C. Turner, who is now and for six of the last ten years has been a justice of the peace in and for said county of Esmeralda. Any communication addressed to A. G. Turner at Candelaria, Nev., will receive prompt attention.

We remain, very respectfully,

G. R. A. BROWNE.
JOSEPH M. JONES.

Hon. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS,
United States Land Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

These complaints were made to the Department and yet no agent was sent there. What comes in next? On the 3d of April, 1888, the Senator from Nevada, in a letter, requested the Commissioner of the General Land Office to send to J. H. MacMillan, attorney-at-law, of Winnemucca, Nev., all decisions, instructions, and regulations relating to the cutting of timber. The letter is as follows:

EXHIBIT G.

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., April 3, 1888.

SIR: If you have copies of all decisions, instructions, and regulations of your office for distribution relating to the act of June 3, 1878, in regard to timber cutting on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes, I would be much obliged if you send copies to Hon. J. H. MacMillan, attorney-at-law, Winnemucca, Nev.

Yours, respectfully,

WM. M. STEWART.

Hon. S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Then comes this letter from the district attorney in Nevada:

EXHIBIT H.

RENO, NEV., April 18, 1888.

SIR: As required under section 2 of instructions to district attorneys, etc., of your office, that a United States attorney should report any information of importance that he in any manner may become possessed of, I desire to say that last fall among many other miners at Bullion mining district, near Battle Mountain, Lander County, Nevada, made complaint under oath that one J. C. Latta, Joaquin Estrada, Jesus Maria Eucinas, Hillano Meza, Refino Mamfo, and Serafino Crimnia were cutting and causing to be cut for sale and commerce alone to whomsoever would buy the timber and other trees and undergrowth on the public land in Bullion mining district, and were severally packing and hauling such wood and timber chiefly to the Pittsburgh mines and to dealers in wood and others, some to the railroads, etc.

Other complaints were made by parties at Pine Station, near Eureka, others at Elko, etc. I knew this was the case all over the country wherever there were mines. I once drew the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office and your office to this state of facts in the line of asking that a special agent might be appointed for this State to prevent the wholesale spoliation of the few timbered spots in the State.

The fact is that they were sweeping the land clear of the undergrowth under 8 inches in diameter and leaving the brush and foliage to spread fires and consume the small undergrowth left.

I laid these complaints before Hon. G. M. Sabin, and he, after consideration, gave me leave to file and I filed informations against the six men above named who had made a business for years, had them arrested and their trial set for 2d of April, instant. Meantime the local papers in the State took up the matter and claimed it would kill out all mining, stop all such enterprises, etc.

That the mooting of this question caused by the prosecutions above referred to has thoroughly alarmed these companies, and many private individuals also, to that extent that they have sent George W. Baker to Washington City with offers to settle with the Government for their trespasses on its lands.

* * * * * * *

Now, I would like your advice on this subject—whether if persons cut no trees under 8 inches in diameter and burn the brush or dispose of it so as to prevent the spread of forest fires can they strip the whole public land, mineral and non-mineral, of timber and wood over 8 inches purely for sale and commerce if they do not export the wood and timber from the State and do not sell it to railroad companies or owners? This is the logical sequence of Judge Sabin's ruling.

I put this case to him: A man named Walmsley has fifteen or twenty Chinamen hired to cut wood for him at what is called Nut Pine, about 18 miles southwesterly from Carson City, which he intends to float down Carson River to Dayton, there to sell; and he decided if he cut no trees under 8 inches in diameter, and took care of the brush so as to prevent the spread of forest fires, then he was not liable to any penalty unless he sells it to a railroad company.

I do not think that is the law, but that in this State a miner, farmer, builder, and citizen of the United States, or bona fide resident of this State, for his or her domestic purposes can take the timber or trees over 8 inches in diameter, taking care of the brush by his own act or that of his personal agent, for the uses of the above classes of business and persons and not otherwise; and I want to put the Treasury on notice that Mr. G. W. Baker's mission is to settle for millions by paying, if anything, mills on the dollars of which the Government is defrauded.

Very respectfully,

THOS. E. HAYDON,
Attorney of the United States for Nevada.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES.

On the 27th of April, 1888, there was presented to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a letter signed on behalf of George W. Peltier & Co. and a number of corporations by George W. Baker and J. W. Dorsey, their agents and attorneys, addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which states that these gentlemen had cut wood upon the public domain, etc., and gave a statement of what they supposed they were liable for and offered a compromise.

The letter is as follows:

EXHIBIT I.

SIR: In accordance with what you deem the proper course to pursue in the matter of timber depredations committed by Mr. G. W. Peltier et al., in Tuscarora, Elko County, Nevada, and for which a settlement or compromise has been solicited with this Department, we beg leave to state that we have filed with the honorable Assistant Commissioner a statement of the facts in the case as originally submitted to you. We desire at the earliest moment practicable that a special agent be sent to investigate the trespasses herein complained of, and in their behalf would state at any time after the 15th instant the manager of the corporations mentioned will be in Tuscarora and will furnish to such agent all the data in their possession, such as books, vouchers, etc., in order to facilitate his labors.

Very respectfully, yours,

G. W. BAKER,
J. W. DORSEY,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

Hon. COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1888.

SIR: George W. Peltier & Co., a copartnership composed of W. C. Price and George W. Peltier, doing business in Tuscarora, Elko County, State of Nevada, the Navajo Mining Company, the North Belle Isle Mining Comany, the Grand Prize Mining Company, the Nevada Queen Mining Company, the Commonwealth Mining Company, and the Independence Mining Company, each of which said mining companies is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, having its office and principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, in said State, and having its mining property and plants in the Tuscarora mining district in the county of Elko aforesaid, do, by and through the undersigned, the attorneys and agents of each and every of said corporations and said firm of George W. Peltier & Co., respectfully represent and certify as follows, to wit:

That during the years commencing January 1, 1882, and continuing down to and including January 1, 1888, the said Gerge W. Peltier & Co., and said mining corporations above named, have been engaged in the business of mining, extracting, and reducing ores in said county to a greater of less extent in, from, and upon the mines and mining properties of said corporations; and the said George W. Peltier & Co. have been engaged, among other things, in furnishing mining supplies and material to said corporations in conducting their mining operations; and the said W. C. Price, who is a member of said firm, is now and during the active operations of said corporations has been the superintendent and managing agent of each.

That during each of said years, beginning with the said date, January 1, 1882, one or more of said corporations have been actively engaged in mining and extracting gold and silver bearing ores, and in reducing the same by what is known as the milling process. That in prosecuting such mining and milling operations a considerable quantity of fuel and timber has been consumed by said corporations, a portion of which has been transported from the Sierra Nevada Mountain range by rail and wagons, a distance of nearly 700 miles, and a part has been taken from the public lands of the United States, by and for the parties hereto, the extent and amount of which portion will more fully appear by reference to the itemized statement hereto annexed, marked Exhibit A, and hereby made a part hereof.

That as near as can now be ascertained the said last-referred-to timber and fuel was taken from and in the vicinity of Beaver Creek, Jack Creek, Rock Creek, Columbia and Independence Mountain ranges, each of the same being a part of the great Humboldt Mountain range, and taken from an area embraced within a radius of 40 miles from the town of Tuscarora, in said Elko County, which town is located in section —, township — north, range — east, M. D. B. M.

That said timber was cut and removed from said section by and for said mining companies and said George W. Peltier & Co. under the following extenuating circumstances, namely: That the State of Nevada is chiefly valuable for its mineral resources; and that portion of the State adjacent to and surrounding the mining plant and properties, and from which the wood herein referred to and particularly shown by the annexed statement was taken, is not adapted to the pursuit of agriculture or any other industrial pursuit.

That from the earliest settlement of Nevada Territory to the present time the pursuit of mining has been the dominant and in many localities the only industry engaged in by her citizens, and nearly every mountain range in the State has been prospected for the precious metal, as the hundreds of mining districts and the villages and hamlets on her mountain sides abundantly testify.

That in every mining town and district in Nevada, since the organization of the State government, and long prior thereto, it has been the universal custom of its citizens to go upon the public domain, surveyed and unsurveyed, for the purpose of procuring such wood, timber, and fuel as its rugged, barren, and desolate mountain ranges afforded, and therewith to satisfy their necessities and prosecute their mining industries.

The numberless mining locations in the State have for more than twenty years been operated by their respective owners by fuel and timber, so far as the same could be procured, from the adjacent territory, without molestation or hinderance on the part of the Government.

And it has been during all of these years generally understood and believed by the miners and those engaged in mining pursuits, and the belief is still prevalent, that the scrubby, bastard, stunted, and isolated trees found among the rocks and crags and along the streams of the mountains of Nevada, are not included and were not intended to be embraced by the laws relative to the protection and preservation of American forests. This belief was generated by the decisions of our State courts, local and supreme, in adjudging title in the prior appropriator or first possessor of such so-called wood claims or ranches as were from time to time the subject of litigation, and strengthened by the long silent acquiescence of the Federal Government and the universal custom of the citizens of said State.

The understanding that wood might be taken from all public lands within the boundaries of said State, save from the forests along the great Sierra Nevada timber belt, for mining and domestic purposes was fully entertained by the various managers and agents of said corporations, and by the members of said firm of George W. Peltier & Co., until after the publication of the ruling of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office in the matter of a certain petition or application of one A. C. Dake, of Colorado. That it was owing solely to the belief upon the part of the parties to this statement of their right to go upon the public domain and procure the timber necessary for their mining and milling purposes, rather than a desire or intention to evade the law or to defraud the Government of the United States out of its property or possessions, that induced the trespasses herein stated and explained.

That immediately upon ascertaining that the greater portion of the wood consumed by said corporations in prosecuting their several mining and milling operations had been obtained by and through trespasses upon the public lands of the Government, and without any complaint from the agents of the Government or any suit pending or threatened, but actuated solely by a sense of justice and a desire to make reparation for such unintentional trespasses, the parties hereto instructed their attorneys, Messrs. George W. Baker and J. W. Dorsey, to proceed without delay to Washington City, and offer to the agents of the Government a fair and reasonable payment and make full and final settlement for all such trespasses committed by said parties and each and every of them.

That said parties have no sufficient knowledge of the whereabouts of the lands from which the wood used by them was obtained to describe the same with more particularity than as hereinbefore set forth, and owing to the fact that many of the persons who cut and hauled such wood have left the country and there is no source from which to obtain any reliable and authentic information upon the subject, it will be impossible to ever accurately describe such lands. The wood was cut in part from the unsurveyed public land and in part from the surveyed lands of the State of Nevada, ceded to it by the United States, and it is impossible to accurately ascertain in what relative proportions the same was taken from Government and State lands; this can only be approximated, and from all sources of information within the power of the parties to ascertain it is estimated that about 75 per cent. was taken from lands now owned by the United States. The stumpage usually demanded by local owners of wood claims and ranches in the vicinity of where this wood was taken is 50 cents per cord, which is a liberal price, and at that figure every cord of wood obtained by the parties hereto has been at a cost of from $10 to $16 per cord, depending largely upon the season of the year, distance hauled, price of labor, etc.

The timber in the localities from which this was taken would average from 3 to 8 cords per acre, 5 cords being a fair average, and an area of about 1,200 acres were cut; at $2.50 per acre the value of the timber taken would be $3,000, and this valuation is greater than could ever be obtained by the Government by any other disposition of the property trespassed upon. Reducing all of the timber cut to cord-wood, and the tables hereto attached show that 6,435 cords were cut; at 50 cents per cord stumpage, its value is $3,217.50 But a portion of this wood was cut upon State lands, and therefore should not be considered or taken into account in making this settlement.

However, in view of the difficulty of arriving at the proportion cut from the State lands and for the purpose of avoiding future litigation or controversy, and to the end that a speedy, full, and final settlement and compromise may be had, said parties, through their undersigned agents and attorneys, hereby offer to pay to the United States for said timber, and in full satisfaction thereof and for complete release from any civil or criminal liability therein, the sum of $3,000; said payment to be made in such a manner as this Department may direct, within ten days from the date of notification of the acceptance of this offer; and in consideration of such payment and the circumstances hereinbefore set forth, it is respectfully asked that each of the parties hereto be severally relieved from all liability in the premises.

The distinguished Senator from Nevada accompanied that application with a very strong letter, dated Washington, D. C., April 27, 1888, indorsing these gentlemen and their application for a compromise, in these words:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1888.

I, WILLIAM M. STEWART, Senator of the United States from the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that I am personally acquainted with G. W. Baker and J. W. Dorsey, the attorneys representing the parties herein named, and also with George W. Peltier and W. C. Price, comprising the firm of G. W. Peltier & Co., and also with the mining corporations mentioned in this proposition of settlement and the mining claims and mining operations carried on by each of them respectively in the Tuscarora mining district, county of Elko and State of Nevada.

That I have visited Tuscarora and am familiar with the character of the wood and fuel consumed by said mining companies, and am satisfied that the representations herein contained are candid and truthful and fully and fairly present the volume and value of the wood and timber consumed by each of said companies respectively; and further, that the scattered and scrubby pine and cedar which is gathered in the region within a radius of more than 40 miles about Tuscarora never has been regarded as timber within the prohibition of the statutes. These scattered and scrubby bushes would never be used for any purpose if any other timber existed in that region, and besides there would be no necessity for using it if mines had not been discovered.

There would be very little of this scrubby stuff gathered from the crags of the mountains, where it grows, if only ordinary fire-wood was required; but it is necessary to have some hard wood to roast ores. The principal fuel, however, at Tuscarora, and which is consumed by the mining companies in carrying forward their operations, is sage-brush, which is gathered from the surrounding country. Under these circumstances I think that the offer of a compromise made is extremely liberal, and should be accepted by the Government without hesitation, particularly in this case, where it would be extremely doubtful whether the Government would be able to make proof of the cutting of any wood (because it is a misnomer to call this scrubby stuff timber) or to establish any violation of the timber laws upon the part of any of the parties to this offer, if they had put themselves upon the defensive and denied the commission of such trespass. Their frank admission and offer of settlement should insure for them fair treatment and prompt response on the part of the United States.

WM. M. STEWART.

Here are these guilty parties themselves voluntarily offering to come in and make a compromise, and they get in under the ægis and protection of the Senator from Nevada. He escorts them into the General Land Office, and asks that their application may be considered for a compromise. They make their own statement. Now, how could the Commissioner of the General Land Office act upon that proposed compromise of the Senator and his constituents without having some more information than was given in that simple application? There was the question. How was the Commissioner of the General Land Office to ascertain the facts? These same gentlemen knew how he ought to ascertain the facts, and how he could ascertain the facts in regard to their own statements. The Senator from Nevada escorted them into the Land Office under his special Senatorial protection. What did they ask the Commissioner of the General Land Office to do?

The Senator himself through his constituents demanded that a special agent should be sent there. The special agent was sent, as the Senator from Nevada wanted and as his constituents demanded. Mr. Temple was selected. In Exhibit J is found the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated May 25, 1888, addressed to Mr. Temple, giving him his instructions.

EXHIBIT J.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1888.

SIR: Inclosed is a copy of a communication, dated the 18th ultimo, addressed by the United States attorney for Nevada, Thomas C. Haydon, to the Solicitor of the Treasury and referred to this office, concerning certain public timber trespass matter in Nevada; also copy of statement respecting timber trespass committed by G. W. Peltier & Co. et al., with offer of compromise therefor, dated the 27th ultimo, and filed in this office by Messrs. G. W. Baker and J. W. Dorsey, agents and attorneys for the trespassers, namely: George W. Peltier & Co., of Tuscarora, Elko County, said State; the Navajo Mining Company, North Belle Isle Mining Company, Grand Prize Mining Company, Nevada Queen Mining Company, Commonwealth Mining Company, and Independence Mining Company, all of which mining companies have their office in San Francisco and their mining property in the Tuscarora mining district, Elko County.

They state that they have been procuring their mining timber since January, 1882, from the public lands in certain described portions of Nevada, and estimate the amount at 6,435 cords of wood. They offer to pay the Government the sum of $3,000 in full satisfaction thereof, and for a complete release from any civil or criminal liability therein. Their statement and offer is indorsed by Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART. United States Attorney Haydon refers to the matter in his letter by stating that the offer "is to settle for millions by paying, if anything, mills on the dollars of which the Government is defrauded."

Before taking any action on the offer this office must be fully informed of all the actual facts in the cases, obtained by a careful and thorough examination.

Relying on your efficiency and ability, and your courage and integrity, it is deemed advisable to intrust to you the work of investigating so important a case as this seems to be. You are therefore directed to so arrange the work you now have in hand as to admit of your leaving it for a time, and to proceed to Reno, Nev., for the purpose of consulting with the United States attorney in regard to the trespass committed by Peltier & Co., and the said mining companies, and also by the Richmond and Eureka Consolidated Mining Companies, referred to by the United States attorney in his letter above noted, and in regard to the best course to pursue in the work of examination. You will then make a full, careful, and searching investigation of all the facts in every case of trespass upon the public timber committed by the said parties respectively, and fully report thereon, making each case the subject of separate report to this office. Be particular to have your reports full and complete on all essential points.

The local officers in the land districts embraced in your field of duty in Idaho, and United States Attorney Hawley, should be informed of your address while in Nevada in order that they may be able to communicate with you whenever necessary relative to any hearings or timber-trespass suits pending.

Respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner.

GEO. D. TEMPLE,
Special Timber Agent, Blackfoot, Idaho.

The gentleman proceeds to make his examination and then forwards his reports. He has a regular form containing questions, and his reports give answers to those questions. Those reports and some of the remaining exhibits in Senate Executive Document 259, of this session, are as follows:

Name of trespasser: The Richmond Mining Company of Nevada, organized under the laws of Nevada; principal place of business, Eureka, Nev. R. K. Morrison, superintendent, Eureka, Nev.

Land trespassed upon: The unsurveyed land of the United States, mineral in character, including hills, mountain ranges, and cañons, within a radius of 35 miles from the town of Eureka, County of Nevada, State of Nevada.

Character of land: Mineral, mountainous, formerly timbered, now bare. Never susceptible of cultivation.

Date or dates upon which trespass was committed: Continuously between January 1, 1873, and January 1, 1885, and since.

Kind of trespass—cutting or removing or both: Both. Also by purchase from others with knowledge of trespass.

Kind of timber: Cedar, pine, and mahogany.

Number of each kind of trees cut: Not ascertained, but millions, trees being small.

Quantity of timber or lumber cut: Twenty-one million six hundred thousand bushels charcoal, equal to 720,000 cords of wood, at 30 bushels to the cord; 86,400 cords of wood used as fuel at furnace and refinery; 25,920 cords of wood used as fuel at mine.

Location of timber or lumber: Nearly all consumed. Procured for and used in the reduction, smelting, and refining of ore and at the mine of the company.

Values: Value of charcoal at delivery, at 25 cents per bushel, $5,400,000. Value of wood used for furnace and refinery, at $8 per cord, $691,200. Value of wood used at mine, at $6 per cord, $155,520. Total value charcoal and wood, $6,246,720.

Agent's testimony: In a trip of about 20 miles through a part of the district referred to I observed the complete denudation of the mountains, even to the removal of the stumps of trees, the consequent increased dryness of the region, and failure of streams. Locations of charcoal burnings were frequently seen.

Was the trespass willful? Yes.

Have any legal proceedings been instituted? Not to my knowledge.

Are the parties to the trespass financially responsible? They are.

Action recommended by agent: Suit for value of the material at place of delivery or receipt at the company's works. During several years past R. Probert, of Eureka, Nev., has conducted the refinery herein referred to for his own account, using a process patented by himself, and has made use of the fuel reported on in common with the Richmond Company.

Remarks: This cutting was done without regard to size of trees, everything from 3 inches in diameter upward having been taken.

GEO. D. TEMPLE,
Special Timber Agent.

EUREKA, NEV., July 11, 1888.

I am informed that the property known as the Richmond mine and referred to in my report of this date attached hereto, is in fact the property of the Richmond Mining Company, Limited, of London, England, and that the few persons who are citizen shareholders are also employés of the company to whom a few shares have been assigned to give the organization a semblance of legality here.

BLACKFOOT, IDAHO, July 23, 1888.

SIR: Referring to my report of timber trespass by the Richmond Mining Company of Eureka, Nev., forwarded to you under date of 11th instant, I desire to correct the name R. Probert where it occurs in said report. It is erroneously given as above written, and should read Edward Probert, as I learned definitely before leaving Eureka.

Very respectfully,

GEO. D. TEMPLE,
Special Timber Agent.

EXHIBIT N.

BLACKFOOT, IDAHO, July 26, 1888.

SIR: By same mail with this I forward reports in duplicate of timber trespass by the following-named mining companies whose mines are located at Tuscarora, Nev., namely, Navajo, Grand Prize, North Belle Isle, Nevada Queen, Commonwealth, and Independence, having been detailed to such duty by your letter "P" of May 25 last.

The total value of timber, lagging, cord-wood, and charcoal involved in such trespass, as ascertained, is $126,880.94. This amount appears small when the number of companies concerned and the length of time covered by the reports is considered, but an explanation is found on reference to their books, which shows that no one of the mines has been operated continuously, that through dealers at Elko and Tuscarora large quantities of mining timber and lagging were obtained from mills on the Truckee River on the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada range, and that for at least ten years past immense quantities of sage-brush have been used for fuel.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid out for sage-brush alone. At this time there are estimated to be 20,000 cords of sage-brush valued at $60,000 at the mills of the Navajo and Grand Prize mines. Wood is now used for the purpose of roasting ore only.

In the proposition for settlement made by these companies under date of April 27, 1888, they claim a deduction of 25 per cent. on account of timber alleged to have been cut on State lands. I can not believe them entitled to such deduction. The timber in question, from the best information I could get, came from the crests and cañons of the mountains (the only places where it grows in Nevada) having, in large part, to be transported therefrom to the wagon-road below, upon the backs of mules and asses.

These lands being, as I suppose, unsurveyed, are not in condition to be and are not desirable as State selections.

In the course of my investigation every facility was afforded me by the persons in charge of the offices of the companies named, and I saw no disposition to evade a full showing of their timber transactions.

Very respectfully,

GEO. D. TEMPLE,
Special Timber Agent.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, August 8, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the United States attorney for Nevada has been instructed to bring criminal suit against R. K. Morrison and Edward Probert, for timber trespass, and civil suit against the Richmond Mining Company, as requested in your letter of the 4th instant, if after investigation such course is justifiable and for the public good.

Very respectfully,

G. A. JENKS,
Acting Attorney-General.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

EXHIBIT P.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, August 10, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the United States attorney for Nevada has been instructed to bring criminal suit against Henry Donnelly, superintendent of the Eureka Consolidated Mining Company, for timber trespass, and civil suit against the company, as requested in your letter of the 6th instant, if after investigation such course is justifiable and for the public good.

Very respectfully,

G. A. JENKS,
Acting Attorney-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The Senator from Nevada charges that this agent had no means of knowing anything about quantity or anything else. Why, Mr. President, he took the figures from the books of the Senator's constituents. It is the Senator's own constituents that make the showing here, and at his solicitation. He forced them into it. He took them into the General Land Office and he presented them there. He demanded that a special agent should be sent out to investigate the matter. The special agent went out there, and in peace and in harmony the investigation was made. He took his record from the books of the company. Yet the Senator comes here and abuses the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and speaks about the "spy system," and "a system of espionage," when it was perfectly public. The agent went out there at his instance. The agent was known. He went into the company's houses and into their business places and examined the matter. He was shown their books and took his data from them. Then he made his report. And for this the Commissioner of the General Land Office is to be denounced! The Senator is the originator of the whole thing. The Senator is responsible for it, and if he has caused the people to be put into trouble by special agents being sent there he must answer for it.

All this information was sent here at the instance of the Senator. He called for it. It was sent here in Executive Document No. 259.

I have given the facts in this case. I have no recollection of the letter of the Commissioner to Colonel BURNES, of the House of Representatives. I am only speaking of what the Senator from Nevada brought to the Senate in response to his own resolution, and there is no ground whatever for censuring the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He has simply done his plain duty.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] appears to be an enthusiastic friend of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but he has not made a very good case for him. He has made almost as vindictive a case as the Commissioner himself made.

The simple fact in this case is that an impecunious district attorney, appointed by the Democratic party in my State, wrote a letter a year ago last March advising the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sue the miners at Pioche, White Pine, Belmont, Austin, and other camps and seize their wood and timber. He did arrest a lot of Italians and wrote very severe letters about them, and said some of them had 500 cords of wood and others 1,000 cords, etc., and advised that it be seized; that special agents and sharp detectives be sent to pounce upon them. He arrested these men and brought them before the United States district court at Carson. The court decided that they had done just what they might do and decided that the regulations that they could cut no timber under 8 inches in diameter did not apply. Under the law they had a right to cut it, and they were discharged. Still the district attorney continued to write and to urge these prosecutions.

Two gentlemen who had charge of mining companies at Tuscarora, as the mines were being worked out, feared that they might be sued personally, after the mines were exhausted, by a Democratic administration. They would rather come here and pay four times as much as the wood was worth, although they knew they were not liable, than be harassed by trumped-up and blackmail suits, which were advised by the Democratic district attorney. I advised them not to go to the Commissioner. They said they did not want to be sued, and preferred to pay 50 cents a cord, which was the highest price paid in that country for stumpage on private land.

I went to this great Commissioner of the General Land Office and told him that these people were willing to pay for this wood, and that what they offered was very liberal; that they wanted to buy their peace that way, and I advised him to take it. He said that he could not make any compromise; that he had to send out a special agent. They went back and showed their books to the special agent, and he did not find their books incorrect at all as to the amount. Everything had been shown by them, although he thought they made an estimate of too large an amount cut on private land. They thought they had cut about one-fourth. Then, without giving any basis for an estimate at all, he reports here that they have cut one hundred and twenty-six odd thousand dollars' worth of timber, and I am charged with swindling the Government by recommending a compromise for $3,000!

I recommended the compromise to the Commissioner because these gentlemen wanted to buy their peace, and if their offer had been accepted the Government would have gained $3,000, while now it will not get a cent. The only parties who will be benefited by these proceedings will be feed officers, special counsel, special agents, and spies.

The plundering expedition of the special agent to Eureka was on the instruction of the Commissioner, not at the request of the citizens of that place; nor did I invite him to go there or anywhere else to fabricate false reports. My suggestion was that he should verify the statement of Messrs. Baker and Dorsey as to the amount of wood cut for the Tuscarora mines. He was compelled to report that their statements were true, but could not refrain from a false and scandalous statement as to the value of the wood. Because the special agent had access to the books at Tuscarora the Senator from Missouri asserts that his ten-million-dollar canard was obtained from the books of the Eureka companies. The special agent never saw those books, and either invented the story himself or borrowed it second hand from some accomplice in the conspiracy.

He did not see the books at all at Eureka. He was stuffed by somebody there who gave him this imaginary information, and he sent it here, and then I am charged with attempting to rob the Government out of $10,000,000. To have collected the information he furnished the Commissioner as to the amount of timber cut during a period of twenty years over a region of country 30 miles in extent in every direction from the mines was an impossibility, no matter how long he was in Eureka. But after a few days in Eureka he estimates the entire amount of wood cut by the Eureka companies down to the last cent.

This same Commissioner was informed by this same district attorney, when these men came here to compromise, that according to the decisions of the court they had nothing to compromise, as the court had decided they had a right to cut the timber. I also informed the Commissioner when I went to the Department that there was nothing to compromise, and showed him that the parties had violated no law. I had not seen the decision then referred to by the district attorney, but the Commissioner had the information then from the district attorney, which he did not disclose to me.

The Commissioner knew very well I was right, and that the parties were not liable, yet he refused to accept their compromise and release them from his leeches, but insisted that he must send a special agent to verify their statements. Knowing that their statements were true, and supposing that the Commissioner was acting in good faith, they willingly acquiesced in his proposition to send a special agent, and when the agent came they showed him their books and were repaid for their trouble by a false and absurd estimate of the value of the wood and denounced by the Commissioner for their offer of compromise, and were unconsciously the innocent instruments which enabled the Commissioner to manufacture a slander against a Senator for discharging his duty in the Senate.

The simple fact that I offered an amendment to prevent this enormous corruption fund, given to a Democratic Commissioner of the General Land Office by the Democratic Appropriations Committee of the House, being used to prosecute miners for cutting wood in the mining region for mining purposes, as the law allows, was Mr. Stockslager's excuse for all this misrepresentation and newspaper abuse.

Nobody denies that my amendment was perfectly legal. I was denounced by him in the New York Herald as having attempted to shield great corporations, wealthy corporations that were destroying timber on the public land. My amendment had no such effect and he knew it. He talks about these corporations being rich. They are not rich. The Eureka corporations are worth very little. The mines are pretty nearly worked out. They can hardly pay expenses, and if the miners were prosecuted they would stop; but if they can go on they may work there years and years and help the people very much.

These corporations are situated just as all the miners in the State are. The district attorney named nearly every town in the State and advised the prosecution of the miners in each, and there is just as much ground for one as another. The Commissioner reports to the Senate a simple request from me to send the laws and regulations on this timber question to Mr. MacMillan as a reason why these suits should be prosecuted. He makes a great handle, too, of my recommending an offer of compromise.

His action is in violation of every principle of decency. Does not every lawyer know that a compromise is not a thing to make a basis of a prosecution; that if men will go and ask to buy their peace, to be saved from being harassed by litigation it is no offense? But this Commissioner not only makes it an offense against them, he not only sends a man out there who takes their books and makes a statement that he can not sustain for the purpose of making buncombe in the newspapers, but is writing letters to the committees here to prevent my amendment being agreed to.

He does not pretend that he wants to prosecute miners for cutting scrub timber for mining purposes. On the contrary, he undertakes to deny it, and in denying it he admits that my amendment was right. While admitting it is right, he reiterates the charge that I prevent him from protecting the timber on the public lands.

That is the kind of a Commissioner you have, and the Senator from Missouri defends him. He defends him in an attack on a Senator; he defends him in falsifying my amendment; he defends him for making an attack in the newspapers on me, and attacking me on a false accusation. You may defend him and my people shall know who defended him. The people of Nevada will remember for long days this unnecessary and wicked persecution for doing what the law allowed them to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the report is not too long, I should like to have it read.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Ohio desire that the entire report shall be again read?

Mr. SHERMAN. I refer to the item relating to the Library building. A brief statement will answer. A statement by the Senator from Iowa would be better perhaps than the reading of the report.

Mr. ALLISON. This report is an agreement with reference to all the disagreeing votes of the two Houses except the single question of the Library building. The Senator is aware of the situation as to the Library building?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I understand there are two propositions in regard to the Library building.

Mr. ALLISON. There are two propositions in regard to the Library building.

Mr. SHERMAN. The case stands as I supposed. I have stood by the Committee on Appropriations all the way through, and will yet if they insist upon continuing this controversy; but as the House of Representatives makes one proposition, to which the Senate, I believe, will never agree, as that is to break up the contracts and start anew in erecting a Library building, and the Senate has made a proposition which the House does not seem to agree to, having had the subject fairly debated twice, and after a full expression of opinion on a fair vote the House having dissented from the proposition of the Senate, in my judgment the only way in such a case, where the two Houses can not agree upon an amendment to an appropriation bill, is to drop the whole subject, leaving it until the next session.

There is no justice in keeping up this controversy, keeping men for a long period of time out of the money which is appropriated by this bill, merely because the two Houses can not agree in regard to a Library building. I believe that if the subject is left until next winter probably there will be a better chance for an agreement. Certainly now to bandy messages back and forth seems to be a useless thing. It is nearly three months after the 1st of July, when the fiscal year began, and it is time that this appropriation bill should pass, because there are a great many interested in it besides those who are engaged in erecting the Library building. The Library building will not be constructed, I suppose, for about ten or fifteen years, and it does not make much difference whether the appropriation is made now or three or six months hence.

Therefore, if in order, I will move that the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the House proposition and recede from its own amendment.

Mr. HALE. That does not help us out. It leaves the House provision stand.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the House would probably recede. That is the only way to get at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa state for the information of the Chair the attitude of the amendment about which the disagreement arises?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that the amendment which is disagreed to is amendment 110, which is an amendment to strike out the text of the bill and insert other words.

It will be remembered that the Library building is being constructed under a separate and distinct statute authorizing its construction, providing for the character of the building in general terms by a recitation of a plan which is on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, and providing for a commission consisting of the Architect of the Capitol, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Librarian of Congress, who were to prosecute this work. That is a statute. In this bill it is proposed by the House of Representatives that the statute shall practically be suspended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that the original provision of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the original provision, the text of the bill. I think it might be well for the Secretary to read the original text, the House provision, in order that the Senators may be refreshed in their memories as respects what the House proposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Iowa has the print, will he please send it to the desk?

Mr. ALLISON. I have the print, and I will read it. The House provision is as follows:

That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting conjointly, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of building not to exceed $3,000,000; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications. The said committees shall jointly report to Congress its action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888. That the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended and the commission authorized by act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved. That the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including the buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the building for said Library of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department. The expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money already appropriated for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the original provision.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the original provision as it came to us from the other House.

As the Committee on Appropriations construe this original provision, further progress upon the Library building must depend upon the report hereafter of a joint committee of the two Houses, and all unexpended sums of former appropriations, of course, remain in abeyance. In other words, it is an absolute stoppage of the work.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended that these words be stricken out of the bill, and proposed a long amendment in the nature of a substitute, which provides for the transfer of the entire erection of the building to the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, giving him authority to make contracts and to go on with the construction of the building, and we proposed to appropriate $1,000,000 for this purpose. Our provision also dispensed with what is known as the Library Commission.

Mr. DAWES. The committee did not propose to proceed with the construction of the whole building.

Mr. ALLISON. Not the whole building as originally designed, but a part of the building called "Plan No. 1," which is a building sufficient to supply the Library for fifteen or twenty years, as was stated by one of the architects, a building sufficient to contain, I believe—I do not speak accurately, as I speak from memory—1,760,000 volumes, or a capacity that would last this Government undoubtedly for fifteen or twenty years, and possibly thirty; I believe nearer thirty than fifteen. We proposed that only this part of the building, or the building which we designate in our amendment as "Plan No. 1," should be proceeded with, and that every expenditure with reference to any other plan or with reference to any other building should be absolutely stopped.

That is the Senate amendment in substance. It provided that we should go on and construct a building on the site already purchased which would accommodate the purposes of the Library for fifteen or twenty years at least.

I will state our motive in recommending this amendment to the Senate. In the first place, by constructing the building designated on "Plan No. 1," there would be very little loss in the work already commenced, as the work already commenced only includes the foundation for the entire building. The foundation being of concrete would undoubtedly remain there, so that at any future time, thirty or forty years from now, if Congress should find it necessary to enlarge the building, that could be done.

That was the situation as the amendment went from the Senate. It was disagreed to by the House of Representatives after some debate, and with a number of other amendments remitted to a conference committee.

The conferees on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House modified the Senate amendment so as to make it absolutely clear that no part of the building should be erected except the part which was contemplated in the Senate amendment. It made it absolutely clear also that the law of April 15, 1886, so far as it authorized the construction of a larger building, should be repealed. The House conferees also agreed with us that the building should be under the absolute control of the Chief of Engineers of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, its construction.

Mr. ALLISON. Its construction, in lieu of the commission provided for by the act of April 15, 1886.

The House conferees insisted that the language we employed in our amendment was not sufficiently clear and explicit to place the architectural construction or design of the building under the control of the Chief of Engineers; in other words, that there was an implication in it that the architect of the building, Mr. Smithmeyer, might be retained and continued, and that the Chief of Engineers of the Army, under the phraseology which we had employed, would be compelled to retain Mr. Smithmeyer. We said that it was our purpose to leave that question absolutely under the control of the Chief of Engineers in charge of the construction; that if he found it wise for any purpose, either now or in the future, to dispense with any of the architects who were now employed upon the building, the responsibility under the direction of Congress should be in his hands.

The House conferees thereupon agreed to the Senate amendment, reducing the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $500,000.

The conference report under the laws governing the two bodies was first made in the House of Representatives. Of course the report included a great many other amendments, but the contest in the House, as Senators very well know, turned entirely upon this Library amendment. That conference report was disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and then a further conference was held, which has made this report. Now, we are confronted by the House conferees, who say that they are unable to make us any proposition except what is contained in the original text of the House bill. We undertook in the further conference, which was ordered yesterday, to see whether there was some line of compromise whereby we could agree upon an amendment that would allow the continued construction of the Library building. They said that under the instructions they had received by the vote of the House they felt compelled to insist upon the House provision, and that alone. The Senate conferees said then, as this is a controverted question and as nearly three months of the present fiscal year have passed away, the bill involving, as it does, a great many Departments of the Government as respects their expenditures, why not remit this whole question—as the Senator from Ohio now proposes—to the next session of Congress? Of course that would leave the Library building without an appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much unexpended money is there of the former appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a very small sum actually unexpended, not covered by contract; about $12,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are a good many contracts.

Mr. ALLISON. There are large contracts. Of course we did not make that proposition, because we had no authority to make it from the Senate. I do not think any conferee on the part of the Senate was in favor of it, but it was a suggestion. The House conferees stated to us that they would not agree to do that thing; they did not believe the House would agree to it.

Then a suggestion was made that perhaps a limitation upon the cost of the building might be satisfactory to the House, but that was not thought proper.

So we are now confronted with the question whether we shall agree on this bill to a proposition which remits to the future the further consideration as to whether we shall have a Library building, and if we are to have a Library building, what it shall be.

The House provision requires a report by the 20th of December, and it also requires that five eminent architects shall be summoned, who shall each furnish a new and distinct plan for a building. It is perfectly well known that no architect can between now and that time furnish a new plan for such a building.

It seemed to the conferees on the part of the Senate that the proposition of the House of Representatives, so far as we could gather it, involved an entire suspension of this work until another Congress shall convene, or certainly for a year and a half or two years.

That is the situation of this bill. I desire very much to have an expression of the Senate upon the point, and I will say to the Senator from Ohio that inasmuch as it is one amendment, it is impossible for us in any way to modify it except through another conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think myself when a conference report is made and pending the Senate might either instruct their committee of conference or themselves propose a modification of their own amendment; but to avoid any question about that I shall move to instruct our conferees.

I will submit first the ordinary motion to insist upon the disagreeing vote, and then I shall move the following instructions: That if the conferees of the two Houses can not agree, the Senate conferees shall propose that the text of the House bill on the point in dispute be stricken out and that the amendment of the Senate be stricken out of the bill, leaving the whole provision about the Library building to stand until the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the attitude of this question, the amendment of the Senate is to strike out and insert, and must be dealt with as one question. Therefore the instructions proposed by the Senator from Ohio, the Chair thinks, would not be now in order, because if the Senate recedes from its amendment that leaves the proposition in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose that the Senate shall insist upon its amendment and instruct the conferees as I stated. I do not think there is any question about the power to do it. If we insist upon our amendment to strike out, that leaves the whole matter open, and then we add instructions. As a matter of course, either House can instruct its committees of conference as it can instruct any other committee at any time.

Mr. HALE. The trouble with the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio is that it would not help us out of the difficulty in the least. Setting aside the Senate amendment entirely, if we had originally struck out the House proposition and inserted nothing whatever in lieu of it, the same conflict would have been precipitated that we are now engaged in. That conflict does not arise from the substitution of the Senate amendment for the House proposition; but it arises from the fact that the Senate will not agree to the original proposition of the House of Representatives. The original proposition of the House tears down the entire Library project so far as we have engaged in it. It throws it all open again loosely. It provides for the committees of the two Houses beginning de novo, inviting propositions from five different architects, who shall mature plans. Whenever the time comes, which will be in the remote future, that the committees can agree upon the one man whom they select and his plans there will be a combination of the friends of all the other four architects, and we shall go over the same conflicts, the same strifes, about getting a plan that we have already been over.

The Senate, so far as the conferees can judge from the debates and attitude of the Senate upon this question generally, is opposed to that and is in favor of doing something to go on with the Library project that shall give us a suitable Library building for the accommodation of our great and growing Library. The conferees on the part of the House do not object so much to the terms of our amendment, but they want to insist upon their provision, which throws the whole thing open.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, the conferees on the part of the two Houses disagree as to the terms of this bill in regard to the Library building. In case of a disagreement which is final and conclusive, as I suppose both sides presented their view of the case strongly, there is but one rule under which a legislative body can act on appropriation bills, and that is where there is a disputed item to drop it entirely. I have no doubt the House will agree to that. I assume that the House will.

Mr. HALE. No, the Senator is wrong.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then if the House would take the responsibility of defeating this bill because we will not agree to their project about the Library building, the sooner it is known the better.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's rule applies where either House puts in a distinctly new matter upon some new subject. Undoubtedly either House then insisting on that positive action must yield to the opposite branch which says it can not agree to the positive action. But here the House finds itself confronted with a condition of things that everybody says ought to be cured upon a great public work that we have entered upon. The House claims, and with force, that it has not projected upon the consideration of the Senate a new subject-matter that we can refuse to do anything about, but is dealing with a condition that everybody says ought to be dealt with, and it has put in a proposition which does deal with the subject-matter. Now, it is so radical, so revolutionary, that the Senate can not, and, as it appears not only in discussion now, but heretofore, ever agree to it, and we are brought to the question simply whether the conferees shall agree upon some proposition containing some portion of the spirit of the House provision, which takes the whole thing away from the present control and conduct, that has been very offensive to the House, but yet that has in it some of the features of the Senate amendment.

I may say that I am not wholly without hope, even expectation, that we can agree upon some amendment which will embody the fundamental view that each House is in favor of—the House, that the whole charge shall be taken away from the present management, and the Senate, that there shall be no unreasonable delay in the construction and finishing of this great work. These are the two great fundamental ideas that to my view lie at the bottom of the action of each House.

To repeat, the House of Representatives says that the whole charge and conduct shall be taken away and put somewhere else. We can agree to that. The Senate says, Let us have no great delay, no indefinite postponement of this great enterprise, but build it under somebody's hands. I believe the other House will agree to that, and that we shall get a proposition finally that will settle this whole question if allowed a little more scope.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, may I ask what is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So far as it reports an agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That question I should like to have the Chair put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would simplify the matter if that should first be done, leaving the Senate then to consider the disputed point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Precisely; that is what I was about to suggest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will therefore submit the question, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now the pending question is on the Library amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the item on which the conferees have not agreed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what we call the Library amendment. Now, I make this motion, which I believe to be in order: that the Senate insist on its amendment respecting the Library building, and that the Senate conferees be instructed to agree to an amendment to the Senate amendment, providing, in lieu of the provisions of the bill, that all proceedings and expenditures in the Library building matter be suspended until the end of the next session of Congress.

That leaves the matter with no new law about it, but holding on just where we are until the two Houses at the next session can make another provision. If they do not, then the law will stand just as it is after the 4th of March next if nobody makes an appropriation. That will enable the conferees of the two Houses, I should hope, to come to the terms of stating that we will postpone this controversy, leaving everything just as it stands now until the first Monday in December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition submitted by the Senator from Ohio is first in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the Chair held that that was not in order, or I should not have offered mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At that time the Chair held it was not in order, but if the Senator from Ohio insists upon it now, it is first in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, of course, I do not make my motion until the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed instructions of the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows:

That if the conferees of the two Houses can not agree, they shall propose that the text of the House bill disagreed to by the Senate be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That leaves the whole matter open.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio is better than the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, if we desire to go on with the Library building. If I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, it is that all proceedings be suspended until the end of the next session. The effect of that would be, of course, to suspend all work that is now being done under existing contract, the existing contracts being now for the furnishing of the stone which is to be the foundation of the Library building.

Mr. SHERMAN. How much of it?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the whole of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very point on which I want to meet the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think even the House of Representatives proposes to do that. There is a contract entered into by the commission for the erection of the basement story of the building by Plan No. 1, which involves the quarrying and delivering of the stone. That stone is being delivered. I went the other evening, with a view to see something about this matter, to the grounds of the Library building, and I found there a very large amount of stone delivered under this contract. I do not think it would be a wise thing to suspend that contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator what is to be done with the enormous amount of stone that is to be got for the whole contemplated building?

Mr. ALLISON. The stone that is contracted for is for the building as proposed by the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I misunderstood the Senator. I understood him to say that the contract for the stone embraced the stone for the whole vast structure.

Mr. ALLISON. No; it does not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is another thing.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say, if the Senator will indulge me one moment, that when Mr. Vilas came in as Secretary of the Interior he overhauled this whole matter of the Library building, and after consultation with his associates it was agreed that for the time-being the construction should be confined to what is called "Plan No. 1," and therefore all the contracts made for stone have been made with reference to that plan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Plan No. 1" I understand then to mean merely the structure that both committees are willing to go on with?

Mr. ALLISON. They are, except that the other House——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the committees. It means the small part of the structure that is supposed to be sufficient for present purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Both Houses are willing to go on with that. It is the construction of the west front, so called, and the construction of the rotunda and the library spaces around.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then may I ask if the contract made for stone goes beyond the appropriations already made?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not, but I think it comes within $12,000 of the existing appropriations. Unless there are additional appropriations made at this session, of course the stone will remain on the ground without being put in its place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then all that is contracted for, all the present obligations of the Government, if there are obligations, are applicable to the structure which is what is called the west front and what is to be the present building?

Mr. ALLISON. The present building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whether there is any other building or not; so that there would be no useless waste of money for accumulating material that would not be wanted for the modest structure that is proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont propose to amend the proposition?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; I think the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, which will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed that if the conferees of the two Houses can not agree, they should propose that the text of the House bill disagreed to by the Senate be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. HALE. So that if the Senate and House conferees can agree, that is not cut off by the motion. ["No!"] I see no objection to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. HUDD, and Mr. NELSON the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report, with evidence, lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and Standard Oil trust, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3224) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROGERS, Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, and Mr. FULLER the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

FORFEITURE OF MICHIGAN RAILROAD GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State; which were read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill with the amendments ought to go to a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments, with the bill, will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SUGAR AND STANDARD OIL TRUST REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the House and Senate, 5,000 copies of the report, with evidence, lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and Standard Oil trust, 3,000 copies for the use of the House and 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate.

JAMES HARVEY DENNIS.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3571) entitled "A bill for the relief of James Harvey Dennis," now pending in the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the Senate the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act, the papers relating to said matter having already been transmitted to said court under resolution adopted September 18, 1888, referring to said court another bill upon the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of transmission will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to go on the Calendar; but I do not object.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand the Senator from Vermont to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such resolutions have been passed nem. con. usually when presented. The resolution is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 24, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 21, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate, which are merely formal, be concurred in.

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

DULUTH AND WINNIPEG RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on this bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE KENTUCKY RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask the present consideration of that bill. A similar bill has been favorably reported, and is on the Calendar, from the Committee on Commerce of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

There being no objection, the bill was considered; the question being on its third reading,

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the name of the corporation authorized to construct these bridges?

Mr. CARUTH. The Louisville Southern Railroad.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not the Louisville, Nashville and Southern Railroad?

Mr. CARUTH. This is not the same line. This is a competing, or rather a connecting line with the Cincinnati Southern road, known as the Louisville Southern.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thought you systematically left Nashville out of the name.

Mr. CARUTH. Oh, no.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARUTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN D. ADAMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

Mr. ROGERS. There is a House bill on the Calendar which is a facsimile of this bill. This is a Senate bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the title of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $3,705.36 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay John D. Adams, a contractor, for transporting the United States mails in the State of Arkansas prior and up to the 1st day of June, A. D. 1861.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House bill will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RELIEF OF YELLOW-FEVER SUFFERERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask to have that read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in the relief of suffering caused by yellow fever now prevailing in the State of Florida and elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask unanimous consent to consider that resolution now.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

The resolution was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT ST. PAUL, MINN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1574) for the erection of a post-office building at St. Paul, Minn.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 2176) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. In the absence of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who is chairman of the subcommittee to whom this bill was referred, I ask for its present consideration. This is a bill which has been passed by the Senate without opposition, and after a full conference with and by the advice of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is simply to ascertain whether any money is due certain Pottawatomie Indians in Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan for money they claim was due them; and this bill proposes to send this bill to the Court of Claims. It will not cost the Government anything unless it shall appear that the Government owes them, in which case Congress will be called upon to pay them what is due. I hope there may be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read at length for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill now?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to ask whether this bill has been reported upon by the House committee?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Yes, sir; the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who is not here, had charge of the matter in the Committee on Indian Affairs. I was associated with him on that committee. The only point in the whole matter is this: These Indians, who are civilized and enlightened Indians, living upon their farms, claim that the Government paid certain Indians who were not entitled to the money paid them, and they simply ask for a rectification of the mistake if there be one.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest that the gentleman have the report made by the House committee read.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I have not a copy of that report here.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let it go over, then, and the bill lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Can the bill lie on the Speaker's table without prejudice?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan to take that course.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I ask that the bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present without prejudice.

There was no objection.

RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 2992) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannacks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservation, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 858) to forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not notice the title of the bill, and I ask that the bill be read, and then that the House will devote a moment to its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the lands granted to the State of Michigan for the use and benefit of any railroad company or companies, whatever their corporate name, to aid in building and completing a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, by an act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, and by any and all acts of Congress amendatory or supplementary thereto that relate to the same subject-matter, which are uncertified lands within the limits of the grant, together with all the lands, certified or uncertified, which lie opposite the uncompleted portion of said road, extending from L'Anse to Ontonagon, are hereby declared, by reason of the breach of the conditions upon which the grant was made, forfeited; and that all of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has not been referred to the Committee on Public Lands; but that committee has had a meeting this morning, and considered the bill. The road mentioned is covered by the general bill which the House passed some months ago, and which is still under consideration in the Senate; but there seems to be propriety in passing this measure at once with an amendment which will be submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. I therefore submit the following amendments, which have been agreed to by the Committee on Public Lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "which lie opposite the uncompleted portion of said road;" and in lines 17 and 18, strike out "existing laws of the United States," and insert "homestead law, except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply;" and add the following sections:

"SEC. 2. That all settlers upon any lands forfeited by this act are hereby permitted and authorized to acquire title to not exceeding 160 acres in each case as a homestead, under and pursuant to the laws relating thereto; and in making the final proof of such homestead, the settler shall be allowed for the time he has already resided upon and cultivated the same.

"SEC. 3. That no lands declared forfeited to the United States by this act shall inure to the benefit of any corporation to which lands may have been transferred or granted under any act of Congress; nor shall this act be construed to enlarge the area of land covered by any such grant or to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in behalf of these amendments that they are all in harmony with the provisions of the general bill which passed the House some months ago and is now in the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert after the word "Ontonagon," in line 10, the words "and also all lands granted to the State of Michigan under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any of my colleagues in their places this morning, although I have no doubt that they are attending to their duties, and therefore, although these lands are a good way from my district, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana one or two questions. I will ask the gentleman first, what has been the history of this bill in the Senate? Has there been any opposition there?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware that there has been any opposition.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Why might not you just as well put the fee of these lands in the State of Michigan, instead of returning them to the United States?

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be contrary to our policy.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. We can use the land to good advantage, and we will not give it to the railroad companies.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be contrary to our entire policy of late years. We are not now making any grants of public lands.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. But why not in this case make a new departure and let the State of Michigan manage these lands? We will agree that no railroad company shall have them.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be an entirely new departure, and we are not traveling in that direction. We are not giving any lands away now, or confirming any old grants.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If my friend can assure me that persons who have taken up homesteads on these lands shall be protected at every point, I do not know that I shall have any objection to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last section, which we have added out of abundant caution, is expressly for that purpose. It ought to have been on the bill as it came to us. It is intended expressly to protect the rights of actual settlers upon the lands, and in fact it even goes beyond protecting the actual settlers.

Mr. MCRAE. It allows them for the time they have occupied the lands already.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Then I see no objection to the bill. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I see that I was mistaken in stating that none of my colleagues were present. I observe that my colleague from the upper peninsula [Mr. SEYMOUR] is in his seat.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "To forfeit lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, in said State, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GALLINGER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BURROWS, indefinitely.

To Mr. FORNEY, for the remainder of the day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BLAND, indefinitely.

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois.

To Mr. HOWARD, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BLANCHARD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ROWELL, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, for twelve days from Monday, September 24.

To Mr. STONE, of Missouri, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAYNE, from Monday, September 24, to September 28.

To Mr. DALZELL, for ten days, on account of business.

To Mr. SEYMOUR, from Monday, September 24, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BUNNELL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Capt. Bartlett Hines, of the Revolutionary war.

DISALLOWED POSTMASTERS' CLAIMS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I rise to present a privileged report.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 11, 1888.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives a tabulated statement of the disallowed postmasters' claims presented from the State of Virginia under the act of March 3, 1883, exhibiting all such claims as by an actual computation of commissions prescribed by the act of 1854 and entered upon claim jackets show that the paid salaries are 10 per cent. or more less than such commissions. Such tabulated statement to show in such case, first, the name of the post-office; second, the name of the applicant; third, the period of service covered by the computation of commissions; fourth, the amount of the computed commissions; fifth, the amount of paid salary for the same term of service; sixth, the actual amount of commissions in excess of the paid salary.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the resolution introduced by Mr. GAINES, submit the following report:

On June 11, 1888, this committee reported back a similar resolution in reference to claims from the State of Kentucky, with the recommendation that the resolution lie on the table. This action was subsequently approved by the House. The committee, adhering to their former action, report back this resolution and recommend that it lie on the table.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Inasmuch as this matter has been debated heretofore, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the adoption of the report, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 60, noes 2.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill——

Mr. ABBOTT. Regular order.

REPORT ON SUGAR TRUST, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, August 20, 1888.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America (the Senate concurring therein), That there be printed for the use of the House and Senate 5,000 copies of the report (with evidence) lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust, 3,000 copies for the use of the House and 2,000 for the use of the Senate."

The committee have considered the House concurrent resolution to print 5,000 copies of the report (with the evidence) lately made by the Committee on Manufactures of the House of Representatives in relation to the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust, and report the same back with the recommendation that it pass. The estimated cost of printing and binding the same is $3,113.85.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "two thousand" and inserting "fifteen hundred." The effect of this amendment is to give the Senate, according to usage, one-half the number of the copies printed for the use of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF "TRUSTS."

Mr. CRAIN. I desire unanimous consent to introduce a resolution for reference, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with authority to report back for consideration at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question to the House. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to introduce a resolution for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby authorized to report to the House at any time a bill providing by legal and judicial proceedings for the suppression and prevention of "trusts," and is further authorized to call up said bill for consideration at any time, subject only to the consideration of resolutions or bills for raising revenue and of general appropriation bills.

Mr. CRAIN. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAIN. I move to refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary for the simple reason that practically there is now in existence no Committee on Rules. Three members of that committee are absent from the city; and I am informed on reliable authority that none of those three gentlemen will return during the present session of Congress. There are pending in the Committee on Ways and Means twelve bills (which have been introduced since the 27th of August) for the suppression and prevention of "trusts." There are pending five bills of this character in the Committee on the Judiciary. This resolution does not contemplate on its face the introduction of any bill by the Judiciary Committee which will affect tariff legislation, because it provides that the substance of the bill which the committee may report shall be based upon proceedings which will be legal and judicial. Both political parties have in their national platforms denounced these combinations or conspiracies called "trusts."

The President of the United States has declared the opposition of the Administration and the party which he represents to these conspiracies, and as the Committee on Ways and Means—in saying this I intend no disrespect to that committee or to any individual member of it—is unable, confessedly unable, from the fact that it does not do it, to present to the House for consideration a bill on this question, or to report upon any measure which has been introduced and referred to that committee, having for its object the suppression of "trusts," and as that is the only committee which can deal with this question that has right of way upon the floor of this House, I think it due to the people of this country that the House of Representatives, without respect to party differences, should authorize the Committee on the Judiciary, which has intrusted to it under the rules the consideration of all questions affecting judicial proceedings, to report back at as early a day as practicable a bill which will have for its purpose the suppression and prevention of these conspiracies.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman desires simply to refer the bill, or does he accompany it with a request for unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report it back at any time?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, with the privilege to report it back at any time.

Mr. DINGLEY. That can not be a motion, but requires unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAIN. I had unanimous consent to introduce it, and I now ask that by unanimous consent the committee have leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. DINGLEY. It was introduced simply for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference?

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I object.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise now, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of reporting back from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. 11297) to suspend all laws touching the disposal of public lands except the homestead law, and for other purposes.

As reported originally the bill contained two sections, one proposing to suspend certain land laws and the other providing that no act hereafter done or performed by any railroad corporation should enlarge or increase the rights of the corporation in any grant of land heretofore made by Congress. Now, inasmuch as there is some objection to the first section of the bill, I move to strike it out and to submit the second section as the entire bill, which I consider the more important provision. I ask the Clerk to read that second section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That during the pendency of the measures now before Congress in relation to the forfeiture of certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to railroad corporations and thereafter, no act done or performed by any such corporation shall in any wise enlarge the right or claim of any such corporation to any lands covered by any such grant, or diminish any right now existing in the United States to declare the forfeiture thereof. This provision shall not be construed to in any wise affect or diminish or waive any right now existing in behalf of the United States to declare the forfeiture of any of the lands embraced in any such grant.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of the motion is to strike out the first section of the bill, leaving only the second section just read pending.

Mr. WARNER. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would ask my friend from Missouri that whatever point of order he has to present it now. The bill was before the House yesterday. The condition of the matter is just this: The Senate passed a bill declaring the forfeiture of something over 4,000,000 acres of land heretofore granted to railroad corporations. The House amended that by declaring the forfeiture of about 55,000,000 acres. The difference in principle between the House and the Senate proposition is that while the Senate proposes to declare the forfeiture only of lands lying coterminous with railroads not now constructed, the House proposes, on the other hand, to forfeit all lands not earned by these railroad corporations in conformity with the law making the grant.

The conferees of the two Houses on this question of difference are not able to agree, at least they have not agreed up to this time, and I apprehend no agreement will be reached during the present session of Congress, the difference involving 50,000,000 acres. Therefore it is proposed in view of that condition of things that until an agreement is reached or this Congress shall adjourn matters shall remain in statu quo, and that no act of any railroad land-grant corporation shall increase its rights in the land granted. It is a precautionary measure, designed to prevent the possibility of any such corporation acquiring additional rights by reason of the non-action of Congress.

Mr. WARNER. It refers to railroad grants only.

Mr. HOLMAN. It operates on the House and Senate measures now pending in conference on these land grants and leaves matters as they are now, not permitting anything hereafter done to impair the rights of the United States to declare the forfeiture of the grants. I move to strike out the first section of the bill as reported, leaving the second section of the bill to remain as the entire bill.

Mr. WARNER. With that explanation, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the first section.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. The second section now becomes the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill is now confined to grants of lands to railroad corporations and the title should be amended. I move to amend the title so it will read: "A bill in relation to grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the title was amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2356) to grant a pension to Mrs. Adeline Couzins.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. VEST managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119 to the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, and still further insists on its amendments to said bill disagreed to by the House; agreed to the conference asked thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL managers on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3557) to ratify and confirm certain agreements with the Upper and Middle bands of Spokane Indians, the lower Pend d'Oreille or Calispel Indians, and the confederated bands of Flatheads, Pend d'Oreille, and Kootenay Indians in Washington, Idaho, and Montana Territories, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works in rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. PEEL, Mr. HUDD, and Mr. NELSON as managers on the part of the House at the conference on the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

CIRCUIT-COURT POWERS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3234) just sent over from the Senate, with regard to the abolition of certain circuit-court powers, be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes thereon.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the conferees later in the day.

EXPLANATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I find that on the vote taken on the sundry civil bill I am recorded as voting in the negative, and also as being paired with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] on all political questions. I intended to extend the pair also to that bill, and voted inadvertently. I desire to recall the vote, as far as I may, as this action will not in anywise affect the result of the vote upon the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no ojection, the gentleman's vote will be withdrawn.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent in this connection that gentlemen having reports to make from committees may be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

J. L. CAIN AND OTHERS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 97) for the relief of J. L. Cain and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUPPLIES, ETC., DURING INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2542) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH FISHER.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 514) granting a pension to Joseph Fisher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL L. REESE.

Mr. YODER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Samuel L. Reese; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BAKER SAINE.

Mr. YODER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2707) granting a pension to Baker Saine; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calender, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS S. LIVERS.

Mr. YODER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7219) granting a pension to Thomas J. Livers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC H. WHEAT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 148) for the relief of Isaac H. Wheat; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. YODER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the following bills; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 2712) granting a pension to John Jacob Frey; and

A bill (H. R. 4853) granting a pension to Jacob Newman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of this business on the Calendar to-day the same order be pursued that was observed on Friday last, namely, that the roll be called, and that each member when his name is reached in alphabetical order may be permitted to call up one bill for consideration, commencing with the roll where we left off on Friday last, and, if there be no objection, that such bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that we proceed as we did on last Friday; that is to say, that no bill shall be considered where five members or more object to its consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. I will modify my request, then, so as to proceed in that order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Before that is done I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Many weeks ago there were reported from the Committee of the Whole a number of increase pension bills upon which the previous question has been ordered in the House, and I have asked the Speaker of the House on several occasions whether on Friday, being private bill day, these bills are not properly in order. I think he invariably answered that they were in order. In other words, sixteen or seventeen of these bills are on the special Calendar, involving increased pension cases to so many desolate widows of naval officers and officers of the Army, whose necessities in many cases require legislation, and all of these bills, or nearly all of them, have already passed the Senate. I ask if it will not be in order now to take up that Calendar and proceed with these bills and finish them? It can not take very long.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, but let us proceed with the Calendar in the regular order as on last Friday.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But on last Friday the order was that we could not call up special pension cases.

Mr. LANHAM. We have Friday evening for that special business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be in order after the committee rose.

The gentleman from Texas now moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, pending which he asks that the same order obtain to-day as on last Friday. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, only this: Some of us who are unfortunately at the other end of the roll-call would like a little different arrangement, and I ask if the gentleman would not modify his request to commence at the other end.

Mr. HOLMAN. How would that affect those in the middle? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. I never object to any reasonable request, but I think in all fairness the gentleman ought to commence at the other end to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas, as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Regular order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was absent last Friday, and I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] what was the order under which bills were called up?

Mr. LANHAM. The order was that the roll should be called in alphabetical order, and when each gentleman's name was reached he could call up one bill for consideration, when if not exceeding five members did object it would be considered, and if more than five should object it should not be considered. We want now to carry out that course.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a suggestion which will require a little forbearance on the part of some gentlemen, but I hope it will be allowed. I have no interest in the question whatever. But I notice that nearly all the big bills are in the front and they are reached readily. Their friends are always active and get before the committee, while small matters, involving little sums for soldiers for the loss of horses and the like, are low down on the Calendar.

Mr. LANHAM. Five objections will prevent the consideration of a bill. The bills are not called in their order on the Calendar, but may be called up as the members' names interested in them are reached on the call of the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why would it not be fair and proper to agree that no bill involving an appropriation of $1,000 or more shall be called up for consideration?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! [And cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Then you will never get any legislation for the small claimants, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], and the question now is on the House resolving itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole the Chair will announce as conferees on the bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HERBERT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

HENRY H. EPPING.

Mr. CARLTON (when his name was reached). I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5094) for the relief of Henry H. Epping and Alexander M. Brannan, administrators of S. H. Hill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry H. Epping and Alexander M. Brannan, administrators of S. H. Hill, deceased, of Muscogee County, Georgia, the sum of $1,212.50, in full compensation for rent and occupation of buildings in Columbus, Muscogee County, Georgia, by the United States military authorities during the year 1865.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PENINGTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5094) for the relief of Henry H. Epping and Alexander M. Brannan, administrators of S. H. Hill, deceased, having carefully considered the same, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House report from the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, which report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition for the relief of S. H. Hill, of Columbus, Ga., having considered the same, report:

That the claim is for rent of buildings for military purposes for different periods included between April 16 and December 1, 1865, amounting to $1,212.50, for which vouchers are given. These buildings were located in Columbus, Ga. The vouchers were presented to the Third Auditor for settlement, by whom they were rejected, for the reason, as assigned, that as "Georgia was a State in rebellion during the late war, payment of the same is prohibited by the act of Congress of February 21, 1867."

Two of the vouchers are in due form, unconditional, and are indorsed by the proper officers as follows:

"The within account will be paid on presentation at the office of chief quartermaster at Augusta, Ga."

The remaining two are signed by the same officer as the former, J. B. Winslow, captain and assistant quartermaster, but are not approved by the colonel commanding.

The signatures of these two officers are certified to as genuine by the Third Auditor, and the omission of approval in the last two is merely a defect in form, and they are evidences of a contract equally with the two which are perfect in form.

The act of February 21, 1867, is declaratory of the act of July 4, 1864. Neither of these acts is intended to affect contracts made by the proper officers or agents of the Government. These vouchers are undoubted evidences of a contract. The parties were competent to contract, a consideration has been given by the petitioner, and the Government should undoubtedly pay the vouchers.

The committee report the accompanying bill appropriating the sum of $1,212.50 in full payment of said vouchers, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a claim under the act of 1867, which is amendatory of the act of July 4, 1864, and payment is expressly prohibited by law. The reason of the prohibition was that at the time the law was enacted the Army was occupying vast regions of country in villages, towns, and cities. It did not seem proper that in a state of war the Government should be paying rent for property occupied in the various localities where the Army was situated, and it was not thought we ought to enter upon the payment of that kind of claims. The voucher proves nothing except the occupation of the premises. It does not prove any authority on the part of the officers to make a contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my colleague will have an opportunity to reply to the observations of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. GRIMES. This is a bill to pay the administrators of Mr. Hill, who during his lifetime lived in my town, for the rent of property belonging to him which was occupied by the military in 1865. It was simply a question of contract between them. The military were there after the war had closed. They wanted to rent buildings for the purpose of accommodating the military, and entered into this contract, agreeing to give so much rent for the use of the property. The proper officers gave vouchers, and it was on account of this rent that this claim arose. It has been reported in several Congresses, and upon it the committee has never failed to make a favorable report. I remember in the Forty-ninth Congress it was reported unanimously, and in this Congress the committee report unanimously in its favor. The claim was for the occupation of a building from April, 1865, to December, 1865. It is a mere matter of contract. The Government agreed through its officers to pay it to the party owning the building, and it ought to be paid. These are the plain facts in the case, undisputed before in Congress; and if any gentleman on the floor wants to ask me any question about the facts, if it is within my information I will take pleasure in answering him.

Mr. HOLMAN. His having received these vouchers does not amount to anything, as an act expressly prohibits the payment.

Mr. BLOUNT. What statute does that?

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of 1867, which is amendatory of the act of July 4, 1864.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend mean to say that Congress provided that where Army officers made contracts for the occupation of property in the Southern States for Government use, and occupied the property for such purposes, those contracts should not be carried out and the parties paid?

Mr. HOLMAN. That had to be the substance of the law, or these vouchers would have been paid.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. An appropriation of money was required to pay them. I know that such claims were paid in my own town, and I do not know of any place where they were not paid, nor do I know of any principle upon which they should be refused payment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those claims are charges upon the Quartermaster's Department——

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend if he thinks it proper that the Government of the United States, by its officers, should make contracts for the renting of buildings in the city of Columbus from April until December, and should then refuse to pay the rent? I do not care now what the statute is; suppose it is as my friend states; yet if the Army had the use of this property for legitimate purposes from April to December, does my friend think it right that the Government should repudiate the contract made by its officers and refuse to pay the rent?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend propose to provide by law that the vast amount of houses and other property in all the cities and towns in the Southern section of the country which may have been occupied by the Army shall be paid for?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I wish to inquire whether this bill is regularly before the committee for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. That question is still pending.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I insist that the question should be submitted whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I concede that; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] went on to make a speech, and I was replying to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to ask my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] a question.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen desire to object to the consideration of a bill, it is better that they should do it in limine, in order that we may proceed with the business.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate has been going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to put a question to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. LANHAM. I object to any further discussion, unless the question is first put whether there is objection to the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] Only one gentleman objects, and the bill is before the committee for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] my question. He states that this claim accrued after the termination of the war. Will the gentleman tell us what was the decision of the Supreme Court as to the time when the war terminated?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not recollect the exact period, but my impression is that it was in 1866.

Mr. HOLMAN. And this transaction occurred in the year 1865. Now, the act of Congress ought to be repealed, or else Congress should pay some attention to it. The act of 1867 prohibits the payment of this class of claims, and the Bowman act expressly prohibits the Court of Claims from considering them.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Committee on War Claims say in their report on this bill:

The act of February 21, 1867, is declaratory of the act of July 4, 1864. Neither of these acts are intended to affect contracts made by the proper officers or agents of the Government. These vouchers are undoubted evidences of a contract.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the actual fact is that there had to be some place for quartermaster's stores, and the contract was made for the rent of these buildings for that purpose, and it was after the war had closed.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, the war had not closed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, my friend is making a technical point as to when the war closed; but where, after the cessation of hostilities, the officers of the Government were allowed to make contracts, and did make contracts, with citizens for the use of buildings for Government purposes and occupied those buildings, I imagine that there is not a gentleman in this House who would wish to have the Government refuse to pay the rent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I for one can not vote for the payment of this class of claims until Congress reconsiders its former action. We have already by two distinct statutes provided against the payment of such claims, the act of 1867 and the act of 1882, known as the Bowman act, and the latter even prohibits the Court of Claims from considering such claims.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana state the ground upon which those acts prohibit the consideration of these claims?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the ground that the region of country occupied by the Army was so extensive that if every subordinate officer was permitted to enter into contracts which would be obligatory on the Government for the rent of property, demands would be presented which would be unreasonable and unjust, considering the existence of the state of war. Now, I concede that there is one class of these claims that have always been recognized, although very few of them have occurred, and I never knew of one which came before Congress, because they were paid on presentation. I refer to claims for the rent of property where the contract had been approved by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. BLOUNT. Which was done in this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. Claims of that class were entitled to payment, and all such contracts had been fulfilled by the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did this claim arise before the war closed?

Mr. HOLMAN. It arose in the period from April to December, 1865. Gentlemen say that I am technical in claiming that the war had not closed at that time. As a matter of fact a great portion of the Army was still occupying the fields which it had previously overrun, and the war terminated, according to the understanding that we all have, after that time, in the year 1866. Although flagrant war had terminated at the period when this renting commenced, yet the actual cessation of hostilities, the declaration of peace (if such a declaration was necessary), did not take place until a later day, and the act of 1867 does apply to this class of claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. A portion of the Army was located in my town. They rented buildings there after the cessation of hostilities and bought provisions and supplies, and there never was any question about the payment, unless in one or two instances, where there was a lack of funds. This case, I apprehend, is exactly similar, and I see no reason why the claim should not be paid. The war had entirely closed; and, as appears from this report, this building was occupied from April to December, 1865, when the Government was paying for everything of this sort all over the South.

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY T. DUNCAN.

Mr. CARUTH. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Blanton Duncan, trustee of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan, of Louisville, Ky., the sum of $11,130.35, for the use and occupation of her property and damage thereto during the war, and for moneys covered in the Treasury of the United States from rents of property belonging to the said Mrs. Duncan which were seized and held by the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report of the Committee on War Claims (by Mr. PENINGTON) was read, as follows:

During the war property of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan, of Louisville, Ky., was seized by the military authorities, and used as headquarters, in 1863 and 1864. It was taken under the belief that it was the property of her husband, who had gone South in 1861 and engaged in the rebellion, but who at the time of seizure was not so engaged and had not been for many months. The property seized was in trust for the sole and separate use of the wife and children, deeded in 1855, long anterior to the war. The trustee was resident in France, and certified to be a loyal man by the quartermaster, Captain Fitch, who reported facts to the Quartermaster-General. The quartermaster, on discovery that it was trust property, proposed to pay rent, but was ordered not to do so by the Quartermaster-General, as there was no security that the money might not be used in aid of the rebellion. Subsequently an act of Congress was passed prohibiting payment of money due for use of property by the Government where the owners were alleged to be disloyal.

A subordinate officer, Major Swords, had reported one of the cestui que trust as disloyal for going South to join her husband, but no other evidence was ever furnished of her disloyalty, or that of the trustee or of the other cestui que trust, two infants of nine and five. With this report the Quartermaster-General could not make settlement of the claim.

On January 19, 1864, while her property was thus occupied, the claimant was given a passport from President Lincoln to go by United States flag of truce from Richmond via Fortress Monroe to Kentucky with her family, and thence to Europe, to join the trustee, who was her father-in-law; and she did so go, under the protection of that passport (first to Kentucky), and remained in Europe afterwards until May, 1865, when she returned with her family under a passport from the United States embassador in London, fully recognizing her as a citizen of the United States.

The proof is furnished that private citizens desired and offered to rent the property, and that is the basis of value as to the rent due—$1,733.33. Proof is furnished of an actual outlay of $2,150 in repairing the damages done while in occupancy by the Government.

The committee are of the opinion that upon all principles of equity and right the cestui que trust are entitled to compensation for the use and consequent damages. As an American citizen, guilty of no wrong, she and her children are entitled to the just compensation guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States.

In 1863, while the claimant's husband was residing in the South, but not engaged in rebellion or making war upon the United States, a seizure was made of other property held in trust in Kentucky—an undivided interest in an estate which is now owned by the claimant under a partition deed for her sole and separate use. Under proceedings in the United States district court this property was ordered confiscated while the cestui que trust was in Europe with her husband, who had joined her there in May, 1864, and remained until 1866, in no manner connected with the war. The property was not sold, but the rents were collected. The large expenses of costs, etc., were paid, and in 1865, after the surrender of all the forces in rebellion, $5,747.02 were paid into the United States Treasury.

In 1866 the claimant's husband received a special pardon from the President and applied for restoration. The court holding that Congress should restore it, and no adjudication by the Supreme Court being possible for several years, a joint resolution of Congress was passed in April, 1869, by the Forty-first Congress in the name of the claimant's husband, in the last week of the session, ordering restoration. It failed to become an act by the President not signing it. (The Senate of the Fortieth Congress had passed it without a division and the Judiciary Committee of the House unanimously favored it.)

Subsequently the circuit court of the United States opened the case and remanded it to the district court, where the claimant's husband was allowed to file his pardon, and the property was surrendered. But the money, having been covered into the Treasury, can only be returned by an act of Congress. It is an exceptional case. If the money had remained in court, it would have been restored by order of court. Under the general amnesty act all proceeds of confiscated property remaining in court after payment of costs were returned to the various owners.

The committee is of the opinion that equity would place all cases alike, and that this fund covered into the Treasury after the ending of the war should be treated as if it had remained in court.

After the war was ended other property of the cestui que trust in Columbia, S. C., purchased for her by her father and father-in-law in 1855 and from other resources of her own, as shown by affidavits of Tally, Atkinson & De Saussere, was seized by the general in command, General Ralph Ely, as abandoned property. This seizure was made in October, 1865, and while Mrs. Duncan was actually in occupancy of the premises. It was used as military headquarters for about a year, and was finally surrendered to her by order of General Howard in 1866, to whom the proof as to ownership was made that she was gone to Europe under President Lincoln's passport, and returned as a United States citizen, taking all the test oaths prescribed at that time, and that she had been home six months prior to this seizure. The property was worth over $30,000, residence and furniture. The damages to it were large, but only compensation for its use by the Government is asked at the small amount of $1,500.

The committee is of opinion that the claimant is entitled to this compensation.

The cause of non-application for relief until this late date is that the claimant and her family were absent, under medical advice, from the United States in 1870, 1871, 1873, and 1874.

It is therefore the opinion of the committee that a bill should be reported directing the payment by the Quartermaster-General's Department of $5,383.33 for use and occupation of property, and the repayment from the Treasury Department of $5,747.02, the amount of rents placed therein on July 8, 1865, and other dates.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of this report has not fully answered a question I desired to put—whether the payment provided in this bill is entirely for rent?

Mr. CARUTH. I think it is. That is all there is involved in this claim, except $2,150. The report states:

The proof is furnished that private citizens desired and offered to rent the property, and that is the basis of value as to the rent due, $1,733.33. Proof is furnished of an actual outlay of $2,150 in repairing the damages done while in occupancy by the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that claim for damages covered in this bill?

Mr. CARUTH. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the whole claim as now allowed is for rent?

Mr. CARUTH. Yes; for the actual use and occupation of the property of this woman and her two children, one five years old and the other nine.

Mr. HOLMAN. The husband of this claimant, I believe, was in the Confederate service?

Mr. CARUTH. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY GUMBERTS, SR.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4658) for the relief of Henry Gumberts, sr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the said Henry Gumberts, sr., be, and he is hereby, permitted and authorized to maintain his action in the Court of Claims of the United States, for taxes alleged to have been illegally collected from him by the United States collector at Evansville, Ind., for the year between May 1, 1875, and May 1, 1876, any statute of limitation of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The report of the Committee on Claims (by Mr. LAIDLAW) was as follows:

It appears from a letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated April 3, 1884, addressed to the Hon. John J. Kleiner, a former member of this House, that on the 1st of May, 1875, the firm of Hedderick & Gumberts, of Evansville, Ind., paid the special taxes as rectifiers and wholesale and retail liquor dealers, amounting to $325, for the year from May 1 1875, to May 1.

1876; and that in August, 1875, Mr. Hedderick retired from the firm, and the same kind of business was continued by Mr. Gumberts at the same place, for which the special tax had been paid. That Mr. Gumberts was required to pay $243.75, and did pay that sum, as special tax for the same business, at the same place, for the remainder of the year, that is, from August, 1875, to May 1, 1876.

The Treasury Department held this to be the law, that upon the retirement of a partner the remaining member or members of the firm must pay the tax over again; but the United States Supreme Court, in the case of the United States vs. Adam Glab, afterwards decided that the remaining members of the firm were not required to pay such a tax over again for any part of the time paid for by the firm.

After this decision the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a circular calling attention to the decision of the Supreme Court, and thereafter no such taxes were collected in cases covered by this decision. It is therefore plain that the tax of $243.75 was illegally collected from the claimant in August, 1875, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue admits this in his letter. He says:

"According to this construction of the statute [meaning the decision of the court] the $243.75 was illegally exacted, and it might have been refunded but for the statute of limitations."

There is another item of alleged illegal tax of $306, paid by the claimant in February, 1879, being the special tax as rectifier, with penalty and interest on the same. The penalty and interest, amounting to $106, was refunded to the claimant by the internal-revenue office cr by the Government, leaving $200 in dispute, and as to that there seems to be no question about it, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in the letter above referred to, in speaking of this $200 tax, says:

"It is true, however, that the ruling of this office for nearly ten years prior to the time when Gumbert's case arose exempted liquor-dealers from the special tax as rectifiers where the acts done were simply those done in his case."

An application to repay this latter tax of $200 must have been made within one year to the Government.

So it is admitted by the Commissioner in his letter mentioned above that the tax of $243.75 and the tax of $200 were each collected illegally, making in all $443.75, so that there is no question of law or fact for the Court of Claims to determine if the short statute of limitations is to be waived.

And the committee are of the opinion that, under all the circumstances of the case, the said sum of $443.75 should be paid to the claimant, and they therefore recommend the following amendment or substitute: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert in place thereof:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Henry Gumberts, sr., the sum of $443.75, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for internal-revenue taxes illegally collected from said Gumberts."

And the committee recommend that the bill as so amended do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Henry Gumberts, sr., the sum of $443.75, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for internal-revenue taxes illegally collected from said Gumberts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES F. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 10100) for the relief of Charles F. Campbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to Charles F. Campbell, late of Company F, Ninth Michigan Cavalry, for compensation for services as scout during the late war.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The report of the Committee on War Claims (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

This is a claim for services rendered as a scout during the late war. Claim stated at $500.

Claimant was a private in Company F, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry. In November, 1864, he was detailed as a scout and served in that capacity until November 5, 1865.

The officers of his regiment and company testify that he rendered the service and has not been paid for it.

Your committee are of opinion that the claimant should be paid, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF ELIZA M. FERRIS.

Mr. CLARK. I call up the bill (H. R. 1152) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the proper appropriation for the payment of invalid pensions, to Reuben D. Smart, administrator of Eliza M. Ferris, deceased, the sum of money to which she would have been entitled by pension certificate 220860, and which was not issued until four days after her death.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The report of the Committee on Claims (by Mr. MCCULLOGH) was as follows:

The claim has heretofore been considered in the Senate (S. 2427) and favorably reported on (S. Report 1176), and also in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session (H. Report 3033), and these reports being substantially the same are adopted as the report of your committee, and they further recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 3033, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris, have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report (No. 1176) as the report of your committee, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris, have examined the same, and report:

That Eliza M. Ferris was the dependent mother of Henry Ferris, who was a private, Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers; that she made application for a pension, which was favorably decided, and a pension certificate, numbered 220860, granting her a pension to date from the 24th day of September, 1862, at the rate of $8 a month, was issued to her on the 18th day of March, 1886; that she died four days before the issuance of the certificate; that the said Eliza M. Ferris, at the time of her death, resided at Mishicot, in the county of Manitowoc, and State of Wisconsin; that for many years previous she was dependent upon persons with whom she lived, and upon the town of Mishicot, for her sole support; that she contracted to pay for such support, conditioned upon the allowance of her pension; that prior to her death she made a will directing the payment of the several sums representing her accrued indebtedness; that the will of the said Eliza M. Ferris has been probated in the probate court of Manitowoc County, and that Reuben D. Smart has been appointed by said court to administer the estate of the said deceased; that he has entered into bonds for the faithful discharge of his trust, with good and sufficient sureties, in the sum of $5,000, all of which is shown by the official papers accompanying this report. It is further shown to the satisfaction of the committee that the accounts for the maintenance of the said Eliza M. Ferris have been presented to the court and allowed.

It is known to the committee that this dependent mother was a very aged woman, being about ninety years old at the time of her death; that for the last seven years she was almost entirely helpless, and during the last two years she was confined to her bed, requiring the constant attendance of a nurse; that she had no relatives to whom she could appeal for aid; that she was entirely dependent upon strangers; and that it was her constant hope that her pension would be allowed in order that she might give to each a portion, and thus, as far as she could, recompense them for the care and comforts she had received. She had lost three sons in the Army, and she felt so confident that justice, long delayed, would ultimately be done her by the Pension Office that she might pledge, in advance of its allowance, this her only resource for reimbursing those who had given her house, food, sympathy, and care.

As a conclusion to this report it may be added that the Senator who introduced the bill, who made this report, has personal knowledge of the facts, and can vouch for the integrity of the administrator and the responsibility of his bondsmen.

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BAPTIST CHURCH OF CARTERSVILLE, GA.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3471) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to John J. Howard, David W. K. Peacock, J. G. M. Mautgaussy, James H. Gilreath, and Marcellus L. Pritchett, deacons of said church, or their successors in office, in trust for the use and benefit of the First Baptist Church of Cartersville, Ga., the sum of $5,000, in full for all the damages claimed by said last-named church, or any person hereto ore or hereafter claiming or to claim to represent said church, for brick and all other building materials taken and used during the war between the States, of 1861 to 1865, by and under the military authority of the United States; and the acceptance of such sum by said deacons shall be a bar to any claim for any and all such property taken, or damages.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call attention to the fact that this is a claim for damages.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The report of the Committee on War Claims (by Mr. PENINGTON) was as follows:

The proof filed in support of the bill shows that in the year 1864, while the Army of the United States were in possession of said town of Cartersville, that the Baptist Church building was torn down by them, and the brick and lumber of said church building was used by said United States soldiers in building for themselves quarters, and in building chimneys to their tents. The brick and lumber taken and used by the Army was valued at the time at $5,000.

When buildings are torn down, if the materials are taken to erect other buildings for the use of the Army, such materials thereby become supplies, and their value, as materials for the purpose for which they are used, is paid to the owner. It is a very inadequate compensation to him. But this rule, which allows only for the materials as supplies, and nothing for damage to the building from which they are obtained, has been acted upon uniformly for many years, and is regarded as an established usage not to be departed from.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the sixth line "Mautgaussy" and inserting "Montgomery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. G. FELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9383) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham, trustees of the Walnut Grove Mining Company, out of any annuity or installment money due the Apache and Hualapai Indian tribes, the sum of $77,000, on account of depredations committed by the Apache and Hualapai tribes in Arizona Territory, which shall be in full of all claims against the Government on account of said depredations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with these claims for the payment of Indian depredations; but there has been passed by the House at this session a general bill providing a tribunal to investigate and adjudicate these claims. Pending that general bill for the relief of all claimants of this class, I do not think it proper for us to take up individual claims of this sort.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to suggest for the benefit of my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that, as I am informed by Senator MORGAN, a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, the general bill to which the gentleman refers has not been considered by the Senate committee, and there is no probability of its being considered by the Senate at this session.

Mr. LANHAM. It may pass, however, at the next session, and for us to commence passing individual claims is simply making "fish of one and flesh of another," because it is impossible for us to give relief to all these claimants in this way. I think therefore we had better await the passage of that general bill.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend from Texas will remember that the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims has considered only a few of these bills; there are only a few on the Calendar. I do not see why claims of this sort which have been reported favorably should not receive consideration at the hands of Congress as well as other claims. This particular bill has been considered and reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims; it has been repeatedly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and as there is no probability of the general bill being considered at this session of Congress, it seems to me it is unfair to refuse consideration to claims of this character which have been favorably reported. I do not think this bill will consume any time.

Mr. LANHAM. As I have already stated, I am in favor of the payment of all meritorious claims of this sort, but we ought to proceed on some system, with the view of doing justice to all claimants. A number of these claims are pending before the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, only a few having been reported, as the gentleman says. The very object of the passage of the general bill was that there might be opportunity for the investigation of all these claims. Under the circumstances I feel constrained to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I trust my friend will not object under the circumstances. The committee having considered the matter, it seems to me the House with propriety should go on with it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is in the nature of objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COBB. I propose to call up another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is only entitled to call up one bill, as the Chair understands the order under which the committee is acting.

Mr. LANHAM. Gentlemen should elect what bill they will call up, and when they fail to get that bill considered we should then proceed to the next one.

Mr. COBB. I understand that under the order I have the right to call up another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to call up another bill.

Mr. COBB. The last day we had private bills under consideration under the rule then adopted I understood when a member failed to get one bill considered he had the right to call up another. I understand it was done frequently and repeatedly.

Mr. WARNER. I do not so understand the rule. I do not propose to object in this case, but hereafter I must insist upon the enforcement of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the rule which was adopted this morning be read. [After a pause.] If there be no objection, the gentleman from Alabama will proceed to call up another bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it to be understood that hereafter these gentlemen will have the right to call up more than one bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand, but by unanimous consent the gentleman was allowed to call up another case.

Mr. DAVIS. I will not object to this case, but hereafter I give notice I will insist on the committee proceeding according to the order of the House.

C. A. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

Mr. COBB called up the bill (S. 2411) for the relief of C. A. Williams and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy inquire into the loss and damage caused to C. A. Williams & Co., owners of the schooners Roswell King and Era, by reason of the rescue and support of the crew of the schooner Isabella, shipwrecked in the Arctic seas in the year 1884, and that there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount so found, not exceeding $13,506.33, to C. A. Williams & Co., on the certificate of the Secretary of the Navy.

The report (by Mr. MCCULLOGH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2411) for the relief of C. A. Williams and others, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

This bill has in view the same relief contemplated by the bill (H. R. 86) upon which your committee made a favorable report (Report H. R. 1284), except that this bill refers the claim to the Secretary of the Navy for settlement instead of appropriating the money directly, and also limits the amount to be allowed to a sum $3,929.61 less than the said House bill proposed to allow.

Your committee recommend that the House bill (H. R. 86) do now lie on the table and that this bill (S. 2411) do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT M'NUTT.

Mr. CONGER called up the bill (H. R. 157) correcting the military history of Robert McNutt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to so correct the military history of Robert McNutt, late an assistant surgeon in the Thirty-eighth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, as to relieve him from the sentence of a court-martial, dated September 18, 1864: Provided, That such correction shall give him no claim for pay or allowance except the right to a pension, to be established according to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. GEAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 157) correcting the military history of Robert McNutt, having given the same very careful consideration, beg leave to report:

That Robert McNutt was mustered into the service of the United States as assistant surgeon of the Thirty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteers on November 4, 1862; that he served faithfully and efficiently as such officer until dismissed the service by sentence of court-martial under date of September 18, 1864.

We also find that he was ordered to appear before a military commission on February 25, 1864, to be examined as to his qualifications. He did so appear, and after due examination the commission report that—

"Assistant Surgeon McNutt possesses capacity and qualifications for the proper discharge of his duties as surgeon; and that his conduct in that capacity has been correct and proper and his services efficient."

We find also that he was dismissed the service of the United States by sentence of court-martial of date September 18, 1864, as recited above.

Judge-Advocate-General Holt, in reviewing the testimony, says:

"The sentence of dismissal was well supported by the proof, but the record bears evidence of some acrimony on both sides."

While the sentence of the court-martial was not set aside, yet the United States authorities did remove the disability resting upon Surgeon McNutt to re-enter the service, as is proven by the following letters:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, January 26, 1865.

"SIR: I am instructed to inform you that the disability resulting from your dismissal, by sentence of general court-martial, promulgated in General Orders No. 132, September 18, 1864, headquarters Department of the Gulf, has been removed by letter of this date to his excellency the governor of Iowa.

"You are therefore authorized to re-enter the service as a commissioned officer, provided you are recommissioned.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"THOMAS M. VINCENT,
"Assistant Adjutant-General.

"ROBERT MCNUTT,
"Late Assistant Surgeon Thirty-eighth Iowa Volunteers, New Orleans, La."

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, January 26, 1865.

"SIR: By direction of the Secretary of War, the disability resulting from the dismissal of Robert McNutt (formerly an assistant surgeon in the Thirty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry) by sentence of general court-martial, promulgated in General Orders No. 132, September 18, 1864, Headquarters Department of the Gulf, is hereby removed, and he may be recommissioned, should your excellency so desire.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"THOMAS M. VINCENT,
"Assistant Adjutant-General.

"His excellency the GOVERNOR OF IOWA, Davenport."

Your committee are satisfied that the charges against Surgeon McNutt were trivial, and the sentence of the court-martial has done serious injustice to a meritorious officer. This view of the case is supported by the fact that over twenty of his brother officers testify under oath to the conscientious, faithful, and efficient services of Surgeon McNutt.

They therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH JONES.

Mr. COTHRAN called up the bill (S. 483) for the relief of Elizabeth Jones, widow of John Jones, deceased, and to place the name of said John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, and that he be mustered from the 12th day of October, 1863.

The report (by Mr. BROWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 483) for the relief of Elizabeth Jones, widow of John Jones, and to place the name of said John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, reports as follows:

This is a bill to have the name of John Jones placed on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, and that he be mustered from the 12th day of October, 1863.

The facts in the case are, that said John Jones volunteered on or about the 12th day of October, 1863, at Greenville, Tenn., in Company H, afterwards Company B, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry; that he drew arms, clothing, and rations, and did service with said company up to January 14, 1864; and that he died at Cumberland Gap of disease contracted in the line of duty. But for some reason his name does not appear on the muster-rolls of said regiment. These facts are sustained by credible testimony.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM F. C. NINDEMANN.

Mr. COX called up the bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the accounts of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy of the United States, serving on board the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, and to pay to him, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the pay of a seaman and the pay of a carpenter in the Navy from the 26th day of June, 1879, to the 1st day of June, 1883.

The report (by Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having considered House bill No. 7801, beg leave to report the same to the House favorably, calling attention to the following facts:

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the United States Treasury to pay to William F. C. Nindemann, out of money not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the pay of a seaman and the pay of a carpenter in the Navy, from the 29th day of June, 1879, to the first day of June, 1883.

Your committee find that said Nindemann, on the 21st day of June, 1879, enlisted as a seaman for service on board the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette (commanded by the late Lieut. George W. De Long, United States Navy), at Vallejo, Cal., under a verbal agreement with Lieutenant De Long that he should have the place and pay of a boatswain of the vessel, the claimant having had large experience in the Arctic regions as one of the crew of the Polaris and Tigris. But an appointee of Mr. James Gordon Bennett also enlisted as a seaman, secured the position, while Nindemann performed the duties of a carpenter and of a watch officer, as the log-book of the ill-fated Jeannette shows.

Nindemann served in these capacities until the 13th of June, 1881, when the vessel was abandoned and sank in the Arctic Ocean. From that time until the 29th of October, 1881, he continued to perform his duties faithfully in all respects.

Mr. George W. Melville, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department, one of the survivors of the Jeannette expedition, says, in a letter dated March 8, 1888, and addressed to your committee, about Nindemann's services:

"During the whole of the cruise he did duty as a carpenter, as well as keeping a watch while the ship was under way on her passage from San Francisco until we were frozen in the ice of the Arctic Ocean. That he did good and faithful service at the time the ship was badly injured and in danger of sinking. He and the chief carpenter worked night and day in water up to their knees building a bulkhead to keep the water confined to the forward part of the ship, and was commended by his commanding officer in a special report to the Secretary of the Navy for this special duty.

"During the whole of the cruise of the Jeannette, after her loss, on the retreat to the coast of Siberia, and during the search for the dead in the Lena Delta he was a zealous servant of the Government and did his duty to the utmost."

In view of these facts your committee is of the opinion that said Nindemann is entitled, if to nothing else, at least to the lawful pay pertaining to the position held by him during his service.

Your committee therefore recommend respectfully the passage of this bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAURA E. MADDOX.

Mr. CRAIN called up the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph Maddox, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all matters in relation to the agreement of Joseph H. Maddox and his associates, made with the supervising agent of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the delivery of tobacco and other property under the permit, safeguard, and orders of the President of the United States, are hereby referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for determination upon the evidence taken and now on file in the office of the clerk of the United States Court of Claims and the War Department, and any other competent evidence; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to adjust, settle, and pay to the said Laura E. Maddox, executrix, and said Robert Morrison, executor of the said Joseph H. Maddox, now deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount found to be due him in his own right as well as assignee, on account of the loss and damage sustained by the said Maddox and his associates by the seizures by the military forces of the United States of the tobacco purchased by them or him under their said agreement, and which was actually taken and seized by the United States, by or under the orders of a military officer or officers of the United States, which said amount shall not exceed the value of the tobacco at the time it was taken: Provided, That no recovery shall be had for the tobacco destroyed by fire in the city of Richmond.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, report as follows:

Your committee adopt the report made by Senate Committee on Claims of the present Congress, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if we are still calling the roll in the letter C. I was not present when my name was called, but I have a very important bill that I would like to ask consideration of.

The CHAIRMAN. The name of the gentleman has been passed, and could only now be recurred to by unanimous consent.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Then I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to call up a bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 1044) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as may be found due him thereon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to James M. Willbur such sum as may be found due him for excess in weight of material and superficial measurement in illuminated tiling, frames, and supports thereof, placed by him in, on, and around the New York post-office and court-house building, in excess of the weight of that which was contracted for at the contract prices for said material as stipulated with and paid to Bartlett, Robbins & Co. in their contract with the United States for illuminated tiling for said building, together with any increased and extra expense or cost incurred by said Willbur resulting from any changes made in the weight and character of said tiling from that which was specified in the contract of said Willbur with Bartlett, Robbins & Co.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may make said settlement upon the report of such excess of weight and superficial measurement, said report being furnished, by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and Senate committee, by the experts, Solomon J. Fague and Archibald Given, of date April 21, 1886, to the Senate committee and on file with the Senate Committee on Claims; but if not satisfied with the report of such experts, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within thirty days from the passage of this act, cause a reweighing of said material to be made by two sworn experts, one to be appointed by him and one by claimant; and a third to be appointed by the two first appointed, in case they shall not agree; and he shall then pay to said Willbur the difference of excess in weight and superficial measurement as found by said experts between the illuminated tiling and frames and supports thereof furnished by said Willbur and that originally contracted for between said Willbur and Bartlett, Robbins & Co. at the contract prices agreed upon for such work and material with and paid to said Bartlett, Robbins & Co. by the United States; and the same shall be taken and accepted by said Willbur in full and final settlement of his claims against the United States on said account.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $52,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out and execute the provisions of this act.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not understand what the amount appropriated here is for. Is this sum to be paid the claimant?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. In reply to the gentleman from Texas let me say that this does not specify what amount is due. It permits the Secretary of the Treasury to make a thorough examination, and what he finds is properly due as the amount the claimant should receive for goods sold and delivered and material furnished for the new post-office in New York, that he may be permitted to settle the claim on that basis.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand this is a claim for extra pay.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. No, sir; I will say to the gentleman that it is for extra work done and demanded by the architect; and when this contractor came to be paid it was found that there was no money in the Treasury. He was told that the only remedy was to come to Congress and secure an enabling act to authorize the Secretary to audit and settle the claim.

Mr. KILGORE. Who is to ascertain the amount to be paid?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Why, the Secretary of the Treasury; and he will of course appoint experts to examine the matter. The bill has already passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Let us have the reading of the report.

Mr. KILGORE. My understanding is that this is a claim for about $52,000.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; there is nothing of the kind. That can not be possible. For the information of the gentleman from Texas, I will state that this has already passed the Senate of the United States unanimously, and also the House bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that this bill appropriates about $52,000 to carry out the purpose of it.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. In case he is entitled to that amount found by the experts to be due him on account of this work and for goods delivered to the United States, he will be paid that amount; but if it is found that nothing is due him it is within the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to cut the amount down to nothing. He may cut it down to $10.

Mr. KILGORE. I withhold my objection until I hear the report read.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. My colleague, Mr. COX, introduced this bill and he understands the case thoroughly, and he can, no doubt, state what there is of it much better than the report.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not call for the reading of the report.

Mr. COX. If the report is read there will be no other business done to-day. It is a very lengthy report and rather unartificially drawn. It is simply a transcript of the reports made from time to time by different committees in favor of the bill through a series of years past, and the report is not drawn by a skillful man in such matters.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demanded the reading of the report.

Mr. COX. I think my friend from Pennsylvania will not insist upon that when I make a brief statement.

This man, who undertook this contract, was bankrupted by the action of the Government. He was compelled to furnish illuminated tiling beyond the contract, and he became bankrupted and could not get his bill through for the amount that was due him. All he asks now is that the account may be stated at the Treasury and whatever is found to be due him may be paid.

Mr. KILGORE. But the bill fixes the amount at $52,000, and, as I understand it, would authorize the Treasury to pay that amount.

Mr. COX. Very well; if that is due him——

Mr. KILGORE. If you will amend the bill to say whatever amount may be found due.

Mr. COX. I will readily agree to that. This man certainly ought to have something from the Government of the United States, and I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I will then ask to strike out in the bill the amount fixed and insert "whatever amount may be found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury."

Mr. BUCKALEW. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

Mr. COX. I find on an examination of the bill that it already provides an appropriation of whatever sum may be necessary, so it does not need the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CATHOLIC CHURCH, DALTON, GA.

Mr. CRISP. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 6560) for the relief of the trustees of the Catholic church at Dalton, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and required to pay to the trustees of the Catholic church at Dalton, Ga., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, to reimburse them for the loss of their church building, which was used by the Federal Army in 1864 and 1865 as a small-pox hospital, and afterward burned by orders of commanding Federal officers to prevent the spread of small-pox contagion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report in that case be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the trustees of the Catholic church at Dalton, Ga., submit the following report:

That the trustees of the Catholic church at Dalton, Ga., ask an appropriation of $5,000 to reimburse them for the loss of their church building, which was used by the Federal Army in 1864 and 1865 as a small-pox hospital, and afterwards burned by the orders of the commander of the post to prevent the spread of small-pox.

It appears from the proof submitted that in 1864 the officer in command of the United States troops at the post of Dalton took and used for a hospital the said church; afterwards the church was used solely for those suffering from small-pox; that after the disappearance of the small-pox there were great fears by citizens of Dalton, as well as the Federal soldiers, that the contagion would again spread unless said church was destroyed; that with this fear a committee of citizens called upon General Judah, commander of the Federal Army at Dalton, and urged him to adopt some decisive measure to prevent the spread of the contagion. General Judah informed the committee that the only certain way to prevent the spread of the contagion was to burn the edifice, and he issued an order to that effect; and the church was burned that day.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Government should reimburse the trustees of this church for their loss, and report herewith a bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD BRADEN AND JOB W. ANGUS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 145) for the relief of Edward Braden and Job W. Angus.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,006.17 to Edward Braden and Job W. Angus, that sum being found equitably due by the Court of Claims from the United States to said Braden and Angus in the construction of quartermaster depot buildings at San Antonio, Tex., under contract of June 7, 1876, made between said Braden and Angus and the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. SAYERS. I will simply state that this matter has been referred to the Court of Claims, and the bill passed by the Senate is based upon the findings of that court. It has been due for more than twelve years.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMERICAN GROCER ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 5248) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay, upon the order of the Postmaster-General, to the American Grocer Association of the city of New York, the sum of $486, or so much thereof as may be found equitably due, for postage erroneously paid by said association.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIG OLIVE FRANCES.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent when my name was called at last Friday's session, and I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 820) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, and others on board said brig.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the bill be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, of Machias Port, Me., and others on board said brig, for damages and losses sustained by reason of collision of the United States gun-boat Winooski with said brig, on July 30, A. D. 1886, be, and the same are hereby, referred for examination and adjudication to the district court of the United States for the district of Maine.

SEC. 2. That said parties, or such of them as shall choose to join therein, may at any time within twelve months from the final passage of this act file in said court a petition, which thereafter may be amended, at the discretion of the court, in the same way that other pleadings in said court are amendable, which petition shall set forth all the material facts upon which the said parties jointly or severally rely in support of their said claims; and the court shall thereupon order such notice to be given to the United States or to its representatives, and such further proceedings to be had as to answers or other pleadings in said case as it shall deem proper.

SEC. 3. That in regard to the trial or hearing of said cause, the same rules and modes of proceedings as to evidence, mode of trial, liability for damage, and measurement of damages, and otherwise, including the right of appeal, shall apply as in other causes of admiralty between individual owners of colliding vessels, and shall also be determined upon such legal or equitable principles as shall be applicable thereto.

SEC. 4. That said claims shall not be barred by any statute of limitations; and should it on the said trial or final hearing be determined that anything is due to the said parties, the said court shall render judgment therefor against the United States for the amount so found to be due to them, jointly or severally, and certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for payment; and the sum necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask for the reading of the report in this case, retaining the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is: Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report reserving the right. I want to see the reasons for the bill before I waive the right of objection.

The report (by Mr. LANHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims have considered the bill (H. R. 820) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, etc., and recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendments:

Strike out all of section 3 of the bill; strike out all of section 4 after the word "severally," in line 6, and insert the words "with right of appeal as in other cases."

A favorable report on this claim was made in the Forty-ninth Congress by the Committee on Claims, and so much of said report as is applicable is appended hereto for the information of the House.

[House Report No. 1158, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

This bill provides for the reference to the district court of the United States for the district of Maine, for examination and adjudication, the claims of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, of Machiasport, Me., and others on board said brig, for damages and losses sustained by reason of collision of the United States gunboat Winooski with said brig on July 30, 1866.

The Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fifth Congress, third session (Report No. 21), reported a bill to refer these claims to the Court of Claims. The report contains a statement of the circumstances under which the brig Olive Frances was disabled, and, for the information of the House, is hereto appended, marked Appendix A.

A bill similar in its provisions was favorably reported from the Committee on Claims of the Forty-sixth Congress, second session (Report No. 915). The last-mentioned committee use the following language, which we adopt:

"Your committee are of the opinion that under the circumstances of this case the claimants should have the same rights to recover from the United States and to prove their claim that they would have had if the United States had been a private corporation or an individual.

"There is no reason in justice or equity why the United States should be under a greater or less obligation than an individual would be under similar circumstances, and all such cases of collision between vessels, owned by individuals or private corporations, are heard and determined in the United States courts of admiralty under the rules applicable to proceedings in admiralty.

"A claim of this kind involves many, and perhaps disputed, questions of fact depending upon admiralty law; as, for example, whether the parties were both negligent; whether the claimants in the display of lights and otherwise complied with the law and used due diligence; what is the measure of damages and the amount thereof, etc.; and it seems to the committee that all the various questions appertaining to this case can best be decided in a court of admiralty, where the evidence may be taken and the witnesses cross-examined, and the Government can be represented by its law officers, and other proceedings shall be had as in cases in admiralty between individuals."

APPENDIX A.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2517) for the relief of the owners of the brig Olive Frances, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report that from the evidence presented they find the following facts:

The brig Olive Frances was built at East Machias, in the State of Maine, in the year 1864. Her registered tonnage was 330.61 tons.

On the 24th of July, 1866, this brig, under charge of Capt. Frederick A. Small, of Machiasport, master, sailed from Boston, Mass., in ballast, for Little Glace Bay, Cape Breton, under charter to carry coal from thence to Bath, Me. Said brig was well manned, tackled, and appareled for said voyage, and proceeded on the same without interruption, until Monday morning, July 30, at about fifteen minutes before 1 o'clock a. m., when the said brig was run down by the United States gunboat Winooski, and said brig almost immediately filled and capsized, and became a total loss. Said gunboat lay by said brig till daylight, and fastened to and endeavored to tow her into some port, but, after parting several large hawsers, the brig keeled over further, and, finding it impossible to tow her, she was abandoned at sea.

At the time of the collision a very thick fog prevailed. Said brig had the lights burning then required by law, namely, a green light on the starboard side and a red light on the port side, with inboard screens, with a lookout properly stationed and on duty at the time, who sounded a gong every two or three minutes, and there was also a fog-horn, which was frequently sounded. The wind was about southwest. The brig was braced sharp up on the wind, and was heading about south by east, and was about 40 miles from Sambro light on the Nova Scotia coast. There was a moderate breeze, and the brig was under light sail and making about 3 knots an hour. The Winooski came up under the lee of said brig and struck her on the port side, abreast of the fore rigging. The Winooski was heading about west by south.

The bow of the Winooski cut into the deck of the brig about two planks in depth and then backed out. Captain Small, of the brig, called out to the gunboat, "You have not cut us down to the water's edge," and received reply from the gunboat, "We have a prow extending out 6 feet from our bow under water, which has gone through you." This proved to be true, as the brig immediately filled with water.

It appears that when the gunboat discovered the brig, she reversed her wheels, but not in season to avoid the collision.

The brig filled so rapidly and capsized that nothing of consequence was saved; and the officers and crew lost nearly all their personal effects. The evidence does not show at what speed the gunboat was running at the time she discovered the brig, but at midnight the log showed a rate of seven knots per hour, and the collision occured forty-five minutes later, and from its effects we infer there had been no change.

Your committee are satisfied there was no fault or negligence on the part of the brig that contributed to the collision. In the absence of fault on the part of the sailing vessel, the presumption, prima facie, is that the steamer is answerable, and so it has been ruled by the Supreme Court. (Steamer Oregon vs. Rocca et al., 18 How., 570; Pope et al. vs. R. B. Forbes, 1 Cliff., 338.) Steamers having more power and speed than sailing vessels, and being more immediately subject to control, greater caution and vigilance are expected of those in charge of them to avoid collision. (Baker vs. City of New York, 1 Cliff., 75; Pope vs. Forbes, 1 Cliff., 371.)

In the opinion of the committee the principal and primary fault of the Winooski was in running at too great speed in such a fog. She was on the coast of Nova Scotia, within 40 miles of Sambro light, in the track of commerce; and with a fog so dense that a light could not be seen more than a ship's length, is evidence to your committee that her rate of speed was too great, and that it was through her fault the collision occurred.

The question is of such character and importance that your committee are of opinion that the facts should be examined in a court where the Government may be represented, and therefore report back the bill with a substitute referring the claim to the Court of Claims, and recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to know of the gentleman from Maine whether he is willing to accept an amendment providing that this case shall go to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal, instead of to the court he designates.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the gentleman from Maine ought to accept that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This is a proceeding taking the matter out of the regular channel; and for one I must say, from the report containing the statement of facts that affect the Government's liability, there are no circumstances which in my judgment would justify a change from the regular channel.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply provides an opportunity for the owner of the vessel, which was sunk by a United States gunboat, to bring action against the United States.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When was this bill first introduced in Congress?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It was introduced years ago and reported to three or four Congresses favorably.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has been twenty-odd years since the cause of action arose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This report which I hold in my hand shows that the bill has been favorably reported in three Congresses; but for one reason or other it has not passed both Houses at any one Congress.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When was it first introduced?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It was presented immediately after the occurrence as I understand, and it has been delayed time and again from the inability to get it through both Houses in one Congress. It was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Claims of the last Congress and is reported unanimously by the Committee on Claims of this Congress. The whole purport of the bill is to permit this case to be tried in the United States district court on the ground that it involves admiralty questions which can be better disposed of by such court than by the Court of Claims. It contains questions of the rules of the sea and the tracks of vessels on the ocean which can be better dealt with in an admiralty court.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Has there ever been an adverse report on the case?

Mr. BOUTELLE. There has never been an adverse report, and I would state that this bill was drawn after consultation between the parties and Supreme Court Justice Clifford, now deceased, who made some suggestion as to the manner in which it should be drawn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state to my friend that there was no liability against the Government in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, and the bill is still subject to objection.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I would ask whether there is anything in this bill which makes the Government distinctly liable for the neglect of one of its officers? Does it submit to the court the question of the liability of the Government under existing law, or does it create liability by the Government?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state that this bill provides that the case shall be taken to the district court of the United States just as a suit would be taken between the owners of this vessel and any corporation, and makes the Government subject to the verdict of a jury in a United States court.

Mr. LANHAM. It is to simply go to the court that they may have it tried there, subject to the right of appeal.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman is aware that the Government is not liable for the negligence of its officers.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The committee this year have inserted an amendment providing it shall be subject to appeal, so that the fact of the liability of the Government shall be controlled by the rules and precedents of the courts of the United States entirely.

Mr. PERKINS. If there is any defense on the part of the Government it seems to me that the defense is a great deal more likely to be interposed in a court of admiralty than in the Court of Claims.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is not likely that the parties would go to a court where they are more liable to be defeated. The reason why they would go to that court is——

Mr. BOUTELLE. The object in asking that the case be sent to the district court is not with any view to a more favorable verdict, but because that court hears admiralty questions, and also because it would be a great convenience to these poor people who live in that region.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gist of this action is the liability of the Government for the neglect of one of its officers, is it not?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is the question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The committee is adjudicating the question of contributory negligence, or rather that there was no negligence on the part of the sailing vessel.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask whether the whole gist of this action is not an attempt to make the Government liable for the negligence of one of its officers,

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is to refer the case to the district court under the laws as they stand, and under the precedents and rulings of the courts of the United States to ascertain whether there is any liability at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I can not concede that there is any occasion that we should establish such precedents.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As a member of the committee——

Mr. STRUBLE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the regular order in order that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] may be able to make a statement.

Mr. STRUBLE. I did not demand the regular order in opposition to the bill, but in order that we may proceed.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As far as I understood, as an individual member of the committee, the object of this bill is to determine by a court competent to try such questions under the law which applies to such questions, whether or not the reckless running down of vessels of a corporation or of individuals places any liability upon the Government to pay for these vessels. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As the committee adjudicates upon no controversy I want to make this statement in view of the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. The committee have prejudged; for they say:

Your committee are satisfied there was no fault or negligence on the part of the brig that contributed to the collision.

Mr. LANHAM. That would have no effect, however, on the judgment of the court. That is a mere expression of opinion by the committee as to the facts upon which they predicate the right of the claimants to go into court at all, but it would be no legal or competent evidence before the court. It is simply the opinion of the committee as to the facts.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If there had been any negligence on the part of the vessel, my judgment is that the committee would have denied the claim in toto but all the proof went to show that the negligence was wholly on the part of the United States vessel.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, does it not require five objections to prevent the consideration of a bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] first asks leave to be allowed to call up a bill out of order because he was not in here when his name was called, and one objection is sufficient to defeat that request.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a misunderstanding about this. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to desire simply to object to the bill under the rule; I do not understand that he desires to object to my having the privilege of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks leave to be allowed to call up a bill under the rule as if his name had not been passed. One objection is sufficient to defeat that request. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If I have power to object, I will object to this bill or to any bill which goes upon the theory that the Government is liable for the negligence of its officers.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The next name will be called.

DANIEL T. HEDGES.

Mr. DALZELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 167) for the relief of Daniel T. Hedges and Edward D. Spalding, executors of Charles E. Hedges, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Daniel T. Hedges and Edward B. Spalding, executors of Charles E. Hedges, deceased, the sum of $11,329, being the value of provisions found by the Court of Claims to have been furnished by him to the Yankton Sioux Indians in the winter of 1866 and 1867, by authority of the Indian agent, to prevent the actual starvation of said Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 167) for the relief of Daniel T. Hedges and Edward B. Spalding, executors of Charles E. Hedges, deceased, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The claim which this bill proposes to pay was referred to the Court of Claims by the Committee on Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress for a finding of facts under the act of March 3, 1883, commonly called the "Bowman act." That court has found the facts as follows:

"[Court of Claims. Congressional Case No. 130. Daniel T. Hedges and Edward B. Spalding, executors of Charles E. Hedges vs. The United States.]

"FINDINGS OF FACT.

"The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, on the —— day of January, 1887, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the —— day of April, 1887, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing William B. King, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and F. P. Dewees, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

"I.

"Daniel T. Hedges and Edward B. Spalding are executors of Charles E. Hedges, deceased, who was in the year 1866 and 1867 a licensed trader at the Yankton Sioux Indian Agency, in the Territory of Dakota.

"II.

"From November, 1866, until May, 1867, there were no provisions at said agency for the subsistence of the Indians, belonging either to the United States or to said Indians. The corn planted by the Indians in the spring of 1866 was a failure in consequence of the destruction of the same by the grasshoppers. The distribution made to the Indians some time in the summer previous was by the 1st day of November exhausted, so at that time the Indians were without provisions or the means of purchasing the same.

"III.

"On the 1st day of November aforesaid P. H. Conger was, as he had been for some time previous, the Indian agent at said place, and had in his hands as such between $1,000 and $2,000, a sum very inadequate to the wants and necessity of said Indians. In order to relieve the hardship of the situation the said agent requested said deceased to furnish said Indians provisions, consisting of flour, coffee, sugar, and bacon. Some time after the 1st day of November, and during the winter of 1866 and 1867, the said agent visited the city of Washington in order to confer with the Government in relation to the condition of said tribe. Upon the faith of and request so made by said agent, the deceased, between the 1st day of November, 1866, and May 10, 1867, furnished said Indians flour, coffee, sugar, and bacon amounting to the sum of $11,329. The said agent continued absent at Washington the most of said winter, and the provisions were furnished during his absence, as they had been before his departure and after his return.

"IV.

"Up to the winter of 1866 the United States had not furnished regular supplies or provisions to the Yankton Sioux Indians; they had to rely upon the small balance which was left of their annuities, after having purchased their clothing, and upon what they could raise upon the agency lands by farming, for subsistence. In the years 1866 and 1867 they were in very destitute circumstances. There were about 2,500 dependent upon the money in the hands of the agent for support. At the time the agent left said agency to confer with the authorities at Washington as to the condition of said Indians the deceased was assured by said agent that if he would advance provisions for said Indians during his absence he (the agent) would use his official influence to induce the Government to pay decedent. The supplies furnished by Charles E. Hedges were necessary to the support of the Indians, and without such supplies they would have died of starvation. The money mentioned as being in the hands of the agent as aforesaid was exhausted by him for the support of the Indians before he left for Washington. The said provisions were issued to the head-men of the bands and distributed by the head-men among the Indians. It does not appear that the deceased or his administrators have received any pay for said provisions, either from the Government or from any other source."

As it appears from these findings that the claim is for provisions furnished the Indians at the request of the Indian agent in order to prevent actual starvation, the committee think that the claim should be paid.

The Yankton Sioux Indians are now in receipt of an annuity of $25,000 per annum under the provisions of Article IV of the treaty of April 19, 1858 (11 Statutes at Large, page 744). As this claim is for subsistence actually furnished to the Indians, and used by them under pressing necessity, it would seem proper that their annuities should be charged with the amount thereof. The committee therefore report the following amendment:

"Provided, That the above amount shall be charged to and deducted from the annuity account of the said Indians."

And recommend that the bill so amended do pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman what amount of annuity is required for the support of these Indians at the present time?

Mr. HOLMAN. They get $25,000 a year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What proportion of that is necessary for their support?

Mr. STRUBLE. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You do not know whether we are starving the living to pay the dead or not?

Mr. STRUBLE. No; I do not understand that we are, though, or the committee would not have recommended the passage of the bill. I know that Mr. ALLEN, of the committee, examined the case very carefully.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When was this claim first presented to Congress?

Mr. STRUBLE. My first acquaintance with it was in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You do not know how many years the claim was permitted to rest before application was made to Congress?

Mr. STRUBLE. I do not, but I understand from the parties who are the attorneys for the administrators that they have been diligently at work seeking to recover the amount from the Government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How is it that these Indians were permitted to go in a starving condition during a good part of two years while Congress was actually in session?

Mr. STRUBLE. Up to about the time when this claim arose they had not been granted anything, but they were then granted an annuity.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The report shows that under the treaty of 1858 they were granted an annuity of $25,000 a year.

Mr. STRUBLE. I think the report shows that no provision was made for the support of these Indians up to about this time, and it goes on to show that the corn crop which they had been raising was destroyed by grasshoppers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It says that, but it also says that this annuity of $25,000 is given to them under the treaty of 1858.

Mr. STRUBLE. I do not know when that annuity began to be paid. It might have been provided for by that treaty, and yet it might not have been paid until a later time. I have not consulted the law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is very strange that these parties were permitted to go on to furnish, and did furnish, this large amount of supplies, when there was an existing treaty under which these Indians were allowed $25,000 a year.

Mr. STRUBLE. The report shows that upon the failure of the crop there was in the hands of the agent from $1,000 to $2,000, that that sum was exhausted by the 1st of November of that year, and that the Indians were entirely without provisions; that the agent went to Washington to get relief for the Indians, and that he arranged with this trader that, if he would undertake to supply them with food, he would have him paid. With that understanding, the trader went on and supplied food and saved the lives of these Indians, for, as the report shows, they would have starved if he had not intervened.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not. While I am not entirely satisfied as to the merits of the claim, I do not feel like objecting.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to inquire the amount of the claim.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Eleven thousand-odd dollars.

Mr. SPINOLA. Covering half a year's allowance of these Indians?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes; the claim is to be deducted from the amount of the annuity payable to them. That is the reason I asked whether it was proposed to starve the living in order to pay the dead.

Mr. SPINOLA. I shall object——

Mr. STRUBLE. Before the question is put whether the bill is objected to, I would like the Committee of the Whole to hear the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN] who reported the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, subject to objection.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. This food was furnished to these Indians before the advent of railroads in that part of the country, and when transportation was very expensive. The amount is large because of the cost of the food—much larger than the same amount of food would cost now. I examined carefully the items upon which this bill is based——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will allow me to ask when this bill was first presented to Congress. The claim seems to have originated twenty-odd years ago.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Without data, which I have not now before me, I can not say when the claim was first presented to Congress. I know that at the time the bill was referred to me by the committee for examination I was very much surprised at the amount of the charge made for supplies; but I investigated the matter carefully, comparing as nearly as I could the prices charged with the prices of such articles in that part of the country at the time when the claim originated, and I found that the charges were reasonable, because the cost of transportation was very heavy, making the expenses of getting supplies to that part of the country much greater than at present—two or three times as much. I was myself very much prejudiced against this claim until I very thoroughly examined the case. I am now satisfied of two things: First, that these supplies were furnished to the Indians on the promise of some one——

Mr. STRUBLE. The Indian agent.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. That they should be paid for. The person furnishing the supplies did not wait to get a formal order or approval from the Government, but went ahead and supplied these Indians with food enough for their immediate wants. I am satisfied that such were the facts in regard to the origination of the claim. I am satisfied, in the second place, that this claim has never been paid. Hence I deem it just that the Government should now pay this money to the representatives of the person who furnished these supplies. Of course the amount will eventually come out of the funds of the Indians, as it should.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] rise to object?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understand the bill is up for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is still open to objection. The Chair will now put the question, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I desire to make a remark on the merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPINOLA. I reserve the right to object until the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been heard.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a remark which applies to a class of bills of which this becomes one by reason of the amendment reported by the committee. In its original form this bill proposed simply that the Government of the United States pay to the individual claimant the amount of this claim. The committee, by the proposed amendment, has changed the bill substantially into an appropriation of Indian funds, there being reserved by treaty, as I understand, to this tribe an annual payment of twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars. Now, the committee, by the amendment, proposes virtually to appropriate for the payment of a claim more than twenty years old moneys secured to this tribe by treaty; and this is to be done without any hearing of the tribe to be affected by the bill, or of any agent or other person representing them. I submit that in all cases where Indian moneys secured by treaty between the United States and any Indian tribe are to be appropriated the tribe, or an agent of the tribe, should be heard either by the Court of Claims or whatever tribunal may determine the question of payment. Otherwise what may happen? Very probably a dispute between the Government of the United States and the Indian tribe as to alleged misappropriation of their moneys in a case where they have not been heard, and where they might upon a proper hearing show cause against such payment. I submit, therefore, that this bill ought not to pass in the shape in which the committee has reported it. No bill of this character should be passed without making provision for granting a hearing to the tribe whose money is to be appropriated, or some representative of the tribe.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order. Let the question be taken whether there is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there five objections to the consideration of this bill? [A pause.] A sufficient number of members have arisen, and the bill is not before the Committee of the Whole for consideration.

Mr. STRUBLE. If consent be given for the consideration of this bill I will move an amendment that this money be paid in two annual installments, so as to obviate the objection that we are taking too much at once from the annuity of these Indians. Upon this statement, I would like to have the bill considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection by a sufficient number of members has been made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] informs me that he misunderstood the effect of his objection made a few moments ago to the consideration of the bill I desired to call up. He did not intend to deprive me of the privilege of calling up the bill subject to five objections.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I did not wish to take advantage of the fact that the gentleman was absent when his name was reached and made the call out of the regular order. I did, however, object to the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like the privilege of calling up the bill under the same condition which has applied to other members; that is, subject to five objections. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for; and unless the call be withdrawn, the Clerk will call the next name on the roll.

MRS. LOUISA H. HASELL.

Mr. DARGAN called up the bill (H. R. 2875) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $350, in full compensation for the use by the United States Army of the house and other buildings in Summerville, S. C., belonging to Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell, during the years 1865 and 1866, in full satisfaction for any damage to said property arising from or incident to the occupation of the same by the said Army; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay that sum to Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell or her legal representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MANSUR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2875) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell, have had the same under consideration, and report that a similar bill and for the same amount was introduced into the Forty-ninth Congress, and on April 6 a favorable report was made thereon, and your committee, being satisfied with the same, adopt it as their own, which report is as follows:

"The bill proposes to pay Mrs. Hasell $350 in full compensation for the use, by the United States Army, of her house and other buildings in Summerville, S. C., in the years 1865-'66, and for all damages to said property incident to said occupancy.

From the papers accompanying it appears that the property consisted of a dwelling of six rooms, a wooden building for servants, and stable. These buildings were in good order and habitable when they were taken possession of by Colonel Beecher, United States Volunteers, and used as a small-pox hospital, from the 6th day of July, 1865, to May 6, 1866. Petitioner was paid $50, or at the rate of $5 per month, for this use, there being no contract at the time possession was taken.

"The kitchen and stable were almost if not quite destroyed, and the property otherwise very much injured. Those dying of small-pox were buried in and upon the lot, and since the surrender petitioner has been unable to rent or use the premises. The testimony is abundant that, for the use of the premises and the damages sustained, petitioner would be entitled to as much and probably more than she claims.

"These facts are shown by several affidavits of parties cognizant of the circumstances, and all of the correspondence of the Army officers to whom the claim was referred, and they are fully corroborated in the report of a board of Army officers especially detailed to examine this claim, said report concluding as follows:

"'First. That the property was occupied by the Government as a small-pox hospital from July 6, 1865, to May 6, 1866, a period of ten months, and that $50 in currency was paid, at the rate of $5 per month, as rent for the same.

"'Second. That the amount of damages sustained is all and probably more than set forth in the accompanying affidavits (which was $350, as now claimed).

"'Therefore the board do recommend that the sum claimed ($350) be awarded and paid to the said Louisa H. Hasell.'

"This report was returned by the acting assistant adjutant-general (Louis V. Caziarc) to the chief quartermaster, approved, and payment was suspended until Congress should remove restrictions on the payment of claims which arose in States lately in rebellion.

"It also appears that the rent of this property was the only income of the petitioner, who has herself and two daughters to support.

"And it may be added that the matter was at one time referred to Surg. W. H. Eldridge, United States Army, who reported that the house, after its use as a hospital, was not habitable, and ought to be burned to prevent small-pox contagion; and also that the chief quartermaster of the department found the recommendation of the board to be reasonable and approved the same.

"We have in these facts a strong case of actual and uncompensated injury. A stronger one could hardly be made. When we consider the unquestioned and undeniable hardship of the case, that it was occupied for awhile and injured somewhat after the proclamation declaring the insurrection at an end in South Carolina, as also the strong indorsement of the justice of the claim by the Army officers, and, after looking at the facts, we conclude to report the bill back, and recommend its passage."

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not intend to object to the passage of this bill, which on some accounts is a very meritorious case. In view, however, of the large number of bills passed through the committee for paying rent for occupation of property I desire to call attention to the act of 1867, prohibiting payment of any of that class of claims. The Clerk will find it at the foot of the page. It prohibits the payment of claims which accrued before the period was reached when the Supreme Court decided the war had terminated. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to declare the sense of an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States."

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of chapter 240 of the acts of the Thirty-eighth Congress, first session, approved July 4, 1864, shall not be construed to authorize the settlement of any claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished or the use of or used by the armies of the United States, nor for the occupation of or injury to real estate, nor for the consumption, appropriation, or destruction of or damage to personal property by the military authorities or troops of the United States, where such claim originated during the war for the suppression of the Southern rebellion, in a State or part of a State declared in insurrection by the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated July 1, 1862, or in a State which, by an ordinance of secession, attempted to withdraw from the United States Government: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall repeal or modify the effect of any act or joint resolution extending the provisions of the said act of July 4, 1864, to the loyal citizens of the State of Tennessee or of the State of West Virginia, or any county therein.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be observed that we are paying claims the payment of which has been expressly prohibited by this act. They are considered and reported as though they were valid claims against the United States, although they have been expressly prohibited by law and should not be paid. When we come to general legislation, that has been the uniform rule adopted; but as I have already stated, we have passed claim after claim of this character through the committee.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that the act which he had read forbids the payment of this class of claims?

Mr. HOLMAN. It prohibits the payment of such claims. Congress can repeal the act at any time if it is in favor of these claims; but general legislation up to this time has declared they shall not be paid. Yet every Friday such claims are reported and passed through this House.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Let the gentleman object to this one and I will object to the next one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find myself so entirely alone I have quit the business.

Mr. KERR. If these claims are to be allowed, the rule should be made general.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. KERR. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who object will rise. [After a pause.] Five members not objecting, the bill is before the committee for consideration.

Mr. KERR. I object to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be submitted to the committee.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAPT. RODERICK M'INTOSH.

Mr. DAVIS called up the bill (H. R. 393) to provide for the payment of the claim of Capt. Roderick McIntosh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated and paid out of the Treasury of the United States, from moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $166.96, in addition to the sum of $180 heretofore paid, to Capt. Roderick McIntosh, master of the schooner Bucephalus, for services in rescuing, transporting, and subsisting the officers and crew of the schooner Astoria, of Bucksport, Me., in July, 1885.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 393) for the relief of Roderick McIntosh, submit the following facts, stated in the report on this claim by the committee of the Forty-ninth Congress:

Capt. Roderick McIntosh, the claimant, master, and owner of the schooner Bucephalus, of Provincetown, while engaged in fishing on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, rescued, on the 8th of July, 1885, the master and crew (in all nine persons) of the schooner Astoria, of Bucksport, Me. The rescued crew were taken from three small boats, in which they had left their sinking vessel.

After receiving them on board his vessel, Captain McIntosh remained on the fishing banks until July 16, when, ascertaining that his supply of provisions and water were being exhausted, he sailed for the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, where he arrived July 20, 1885, and gave the rescued men into the charge of the American consul at that port and immediately returned to the fishing grounds, which he reached July 24, 1885. From these causes his voyage was prolonged fifteen days, and he encountered a severe storm, which damaged his vessel and compelled him to enter a provincial port and repair damages at considerable expense, and which would have been avoided but for the delay. He, however, makes no claim for compensation on account of these losses.

The amount of said claim in detail is as follows:

To board of nine persons (crew of Astoria) from July 8 to July 20, 1885, at 50 cents per diem each		$54.00
Thirteen men (crew of Bucephalus) eight days, 50 cents per diem each, from July 16, date of leaving banks, to July 24, date of returning thereto		52.00
Eight days' wages paid twelve men (Bucephalus crew), July 16 to July 24, 1885, at $16.67 per diem		133.36
Eight days' wages of master of Bucephalus, at $4 per diem		32.00
Eight days' hire of Bucephalus, at $8 per diem		64.00
		335.36
To port charges paid at St. John's:
To fresh water	$3.30
Harbor dues	2.00
Pilotage	6.00
		11.30
		346.66
Amount paid by Government		180.00
Balance of claim		166.66

Your committee are of the opinion that the charges are reasonable, and that the balance of the claim beyond the amount received from the Government should be paid.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "ninety-six," in the fifth line, and inserting the word "sixty-six;" and, when so amended, that the same do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIG OLIVE FRANCES.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call up the bill (H. R. 820) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances and others on board said brig. It is the same bill my colleague asked to be taken up some time ago out of order and failed. The bill and report have both been read.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move that the reading of the bill and report be dispensed with.

Mr. ROGERS. Were they read to-day?

Mr. DINGLEY. They were.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope there will be no objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill and report, as they have already been read during the day.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the reading of the bill and report will be dispensed with.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is a case of a collision between a Government vessel and a private vessel. The bill refers it for examination and adjudication to a court of admiralty.

I wish to say that there have been numerous cases of collision at sea between Government vessels and private vessels, where the Government being at fault, and shown to be at fault, has paid the damages in the same way that private citizens are required to do. It seems to me, therefore, in view of cases already determined of this character, that such a question as this should be referred to a court acquainted with the admiralty rules and practice, to adjudicate the question as to whether or not anything should be paid for the damage done to this vessel.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question before the committee is whether or not there is objection to the consideration of this bill.

Five members objecting, the bill was not considered.

DAVID L. BRAINARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask consideration of the bill (S. 937) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid from money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $703.75, this sum to be in lieu of commutations of fuel and quarters and extra-duty pay, as follows: Commutation for fuel from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1884 (thirty-six months), at $9 per month, $324; commutation for quarters from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882 (twelve months), at $21 per month, $252; extra-duty pay from July 1, 1883, to June 30, 1884, at 35 cents per diem, $127.75, and to be paid to each of the following persons, namely: David L. Brainard, Julius R. Frederick, Henry Biederbick, Francis Long, Maurice Connell, David Linn, Joseph Elison, Nicholas Salor, William A. Ellis, Charles B. Henry, William Whistler, Jacob Bender, Roderick R. Schneider, David C. Ralston, Hampden S. Gardner, Edward Israel, Winfield S. Jewell, George W. Rice, and William H. Cross, of the United States Army, who were on duty with Lieut. A. W. Greely in the Arctic regions from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1884: Provided, however, That if any of the aforesaid nineteen persons shall have died prior to June 30, 1884, the allowances herein for commutation of fuel, extra-duty pay, and quarters shall be computed at the rates stated to the death of such persons, respectively; and in such case the amounts found due shall be paid to the widow of the deceased, if any survive; and if none, to the children, if any; and if none, then to the next of kin of such person lawfully entitled.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read, subject to the right of objection.

The report (by Mr. ROBERTSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 937, for the relief of David L. Brainard and others, beg leave to report the same favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. That report shows absolutely nothing concerning the claim, and I shall object to the passage of the bill on such a statement as that.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the gentleman allow me a word of explanation?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORSEY. I have sent for the report on the House bill, which gives full information as to the case, and I ask that that be read. I am expecting it every moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to that.

I do not think, though, that a bill of this kind ought to go through without some statement or explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood that leave was given to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report was read, the Chair submitted the question, and no objection was made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I had indicated my intention to object, but the gentleman from Nebraska asked that it be withheld so as to have the report on the House bill read, which he had sent for.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be any misunderstanding, the Chair will cause the report to be read. It can only be done, however, by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. ROBERTSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3192) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others, respectfully report the same favorably with the following amendment: Strike out all after the words "and if none," in line 34, and insert in lieu thereof the words "then to the heirs or legal representatives of deceased," and as so amended that the bill do pass. For fuller information the following is appended hereto—

[Extracts from the report of the Committee on Claims, Forty-ninth Congress.]

This bill provides for the payment to each of nineteen enlisted men, who accompanied Lieutenant Greely on the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition in 1881-'84, of the sum of $703.75, in lieu of commutations of fuel and quarters, and for extra-duty pay, in each case.

The facts connected with this expedition are yet fresh in the public mind, and need not be here rehearsed at length. A brief statement of the origin and purposes of the expedition, and the equities upon which this bill rests, are all that is deemed necessary.

The expedition was purely in the interest of science, and was set on foot and carried out under the direction of the Government of the United States. The sundry civil appropriation bill approved March 3, 1881, contained an appropriation of $25,000 to be expended for—

"Observation and exploration in the Arctic Seas; for continuing the work of scientific observation and exploration on or near the shores of Lady Franklin Bay, and for transportation of men and supplies to said location and return."

It was proposed to take a party of men to a point on the shore of Lady Franklin Bay, erect quarters for them, and leave them there for a time to carry out the purposes of the clause just cited. Relief was to be sent as needed. It was known that the service would be one of hardship and danger. The gloom and loneliness of the Arctic winter, with all its deprivation of comfort, were to be encountered. Should the ice not break up and allow the relieving vessels to ascend Smith's Sound, Kane Basin, and Kennedy Channel, starvation would be imminent. For this service the best men were needed. General Orders No. 35, dated April 12, 1881, hereto annexed, were issued. Subsequently, and before the departure of the expedition, and after the men had been selected, another and a special order, purporting to be authorized directly by the President of the United States, was issued. It was in the following words:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, May 24, 1881.

"SIR: I am directed to inform you that the President authorizes, under the provisions of section 3648, Revised Statutes, the advance to each officer ordered to duty at Lady Franklin Bay of one year's pay and allowances, and to each enlisted man of four months' pay and allowances. He also directs that pay and allowances for the entire force accruing subsequent to the allowance herein authorized be paid at maturity on the presentation of properly signed and indorsed vouchers.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"CHAUNCEY McKEEVER,
"Assistant-Adjutant-General in Charge.

"The CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER."

It will be noticed that while General Orders No. 35 discriminated against certain allowances, this special order does not. That the men understood this latter order to authorize these allowances is clear. It was the later order—it purported to be, and doubtless was—directly authorized by the President of the United States, and only granted to these men what their fellows who remained behind, amid the comforts of civilization, would receive.

Under this belief they departed on their expedition. The winter was passed at Fort Conger, on Lady Franklin Bay. The summer came, but no relief appeared. The work of exploration and scientific observation went on. Another winter amid the snow and ice passed slowly away; now, surely relief would come. The stores were low, and another winter at Fort Conger meant all the horrors of starvation. But no peril swerved these indomitable men from their duty. Ere the long winter darkness was ended, and while yet the temperature was below a point at which it seems possible for human life to endure, Lieutenant Greely had his parties out engaged in scientific work. The spring passed, the summer was nearly gone, and still no signs of relief, and August 9, 1883, the party started southward. So well had the work of the expedition been done that Lieutenant Greely was enabled to say:

"We had experienced two years of unequaled cold and darkness; nine months (less twelve days) had been marked by the total absence of the sun, during which the mean temperature had been —31.4° (—35.2° C.). The amount of work done was equally extraordinary. The sun had shone four hundred and fifty-three days, and on two hundred and sixty-two days from one to three sledge parties had been in the field on journeys entailing from two to sixty days' absence and 3,000 miles of travel.

"Our explorations covered 3½° of latitude and 45° of longitude, one-eighth of the way around the globe above the eightieth parallel. To the northward a latitude never before attained on land or sea had been reached, and for the first time in three centuries England yielded to another nation the honors of the 'farthest north.' The end of Greenland, so many times seen or supposed to have been, was extended at least 40 miles northward and over a hundred miles of new shore, never before traveled by the foot of man, added to its coast line."

Kennedy Channel was full of ice, and the journey southward was one of peril and privation. Cape Sabine was reached, but to the utter disappointment of the party no relief vessel was there, and no provisions left for the struggling expeditionists. The Proteus was at the bottom, and the Yantic, even as the heroic band were struggling southward, had sailed out of Smith Sound, carrying with it the much-needed stores. No criticism is here intended upon the officers of the Yantic. It is not the province of this committee to investigate or report upon that matter. We only state the fact that because of the failure of this relief the party were detained with very scanty stores another year in the Arctic regions. Of the horrors of that year no mere words can express an adequate conception. Sergeant Brainard, speaking in his journal of some dry biscuit, says:

"When this bread, thoroughly rotten and covered with a green mold, was thrown on the ground, the half-famished men sprang to it as wild animals would."

Lieutenant Lockwood, in his diary, writes:

"One of the annoyances of this life is the difficulty we have in trying to cheat the stomach and make our dole of food seem more than it really is. It is pitiful the value one puts on a miserable little piece of hard, coarse ship-bread."

Yet in the face of this Lieutenant Lockwood says:

"If our fate is the worst, I do not think we shall disgrace the names of Americans and of soldiers."

Lower ran the stores, weaker and weaker became the party, one by one they succumbed to their fate, and far from home and kindred, amid the wild desolation of Arctic rocks and ice, died as heroes die. June 22, 1884, the survivors, more dead than alive, were rescued by the crew of the Thetis. Some were too far gone to recover; others, after months of illness, have partialty recovered. One, at least, still lies in hospital, disabled and poor. The Government cared for the bodies of the dead with all proper honor and at the public expense. How has it cared for the living? Let Lieutenant Greely, in the closing words of his "Three Years of Arctic Service," answer:

"It is inevitable in most great undertakings that the subordinates should be relegated to secondary places, but I can not believe that our great nation, which spent money so lavishly to save these men, will allow their heroic endurance and manly virtues to pass unrewarded. Lieutenant Lockwood and the Esquimaux Christiansen have unhappily passed away, but Sergeant Brainard, who strove with them successfully to gain for the country the honors of the farthest north, yet remains, after eight years of stainless and extraordinary service, in the ranks a sergeant. His manhood, courage, and self-sacrifice, displayed on the Polar Sea and at Sabine, would have gained him a commission at once in any other service of the world.

"No man of the party has received promotion, except such temporary advancement as my personal urging could secure. Two men, with broken health, have adventured their private fortunes, and one, a most self-sacrificing, soldierly, temperate, and loyal man, lies, as these lines are penned, helpless in a city hospital, aided by private charity, his pension not even awarded. Even the meager allowances originally promised for Arctic service have not been fully paid, and the widows of the dead are generally as yet unrecognized."

Upon the return of the party to the United States, the Government, in settling the accounts of the enlisted men, refused all commutation for fuel. It paid commutation for quarters from June 30, 1882, and refused it for the period preceding that date; and it paid extra-duty pay up to July 14, 1883, and refused it for the period subsequent to that date.

Since these hardships were endured many a young man, reared in an opulent home, with influential friends at hand, having seen no harder service than the drills at West Point, has donned the lieutenant's shoulder-straps, while Brainard, the sole survivor of those who stood in May, 1882, farther north than the foot of man had ever before trodden—the man who during that fearful spring and summer of 1884, by his indefatigable exertions in providing food for his famishing comrades, undoubtedly saved the lives of the survivors, still wears his sergeant's chevrons.

The indorsements of Lieutenant Greely and General Hazen on the petition filed in this case, also an extract from that petition, are hereto appended.

APPENDIX.

[General Orders No. 35.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 12, 1881.

The following order, received from the War Department, is published for the information of the Army:

In order to carry into execution the act approved May 1, 1880, and so much of the act approved March 3, 1881, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," as provides for "observation and exploration in the Arctic seas; for continuing the work of scientific observation and exploration on or near the shores of Lady Franklin Bay, and for transportation of men and supplies to said location and return, $25,000," it is ordered:

1. First Lieut. A. W. Greely, Fifth United States Cavalry, acting signal officer, having volunteered for the expedition, shall take command of the expeditionary force now organizing under said act to establish a station north of the eighty-first degree of north latitude, at or near Lady Franklin Bay, for the purpose of scientific observation.

2. Lieutenant Greely shall have authority to contract for and purchase, within the limits of the appropriation, the supplies and transportation deemed needful for the expedition; and the appropriation for this purpose made by the act approved March 3, 1881, shall be drawn from the Treasury and disbursed, upon proper vouchers, by the regular disbursing officer of the Signal Service, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer.

3. The force to be employed in the expedition shall consist of two other officers, who may volunteer their services; twenty-one enlisted men, who may volunteer from the Army or be specially enlisted for the purpose; and one contract surgeon. The latter to be contracted with at such time as he may be able to join the party.

4. The commander of the expedition is authorized to hire a steam-sealer or whaler to transport the party from St. John's to Lady Franklin Bay for a fixed sum per month, under a formal contract that shall release the United States from any and all responsibility or claim for damages in case the steamer is injured, lost, or destroyed. The said contract shall include the services and subsistence of the crew of the vessel, and shall require that the said crew shall consist of one captain, two mates, one steward, two engineers, two firemen, and seven seamen—not less than fifteen in all. Such steam-sealer or whaler shall not be hired until it has been inspected by an officer, to be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose, and found by him fit for the intended service.

5. The expeditionary force shall be assembled at Washington, D. C., not later than May 15, and St. John's not later than June 15, 1881.

6. During their absence on this duty Lieutenant Greely and the other officers of the Army accompanying the expedition will retain station at Washington, D. C. The enlisted men who may volunteer or be especially enlisted for this duty shall receive the pay and commutation allowances (except commutation for quarters and fuel) that accrue to men detached for duty in Washington, D. C.

7. The several bureaus of the War Department will furnish, on requisitions approved by the Secretary of War, the necessary subsistence, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, transportation to St. John's, Newfoundland, and return, medicines, books, instruments, hospital stores, arms, and ammunition. The subsistence stores to be furnished as above directed are for sale, not for issue, to the officers and men of the expeditionary force.

By command of General Sherman:

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 13, 1886.

Respectfully forwarded to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, through the War Department. Extra-duty pay was promised the men of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition by General Orders 35, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, April 12, 1881; and, as stated herein, a discrimination was made by the War Department against the enlisted men in the matter of other commutation. I then pointed out to the honorable the Secretary of War that Sergeant F. Meyer, who served with the Polaris expedition (1871–'73), received such commutation; but, despite my urgent request, some technical point caused the discrimination against these men. Congress, in later years, specifically granted commutation of quarters in similar cases.

The appropriation for the Army was at no charge for fuel and quarters of these men, and for the last year at Cape Sabine they were destitute of both. I am certain that a clear understanding of this claim would insure these men receiving from Congress the amounts asked as being their just dues, not as a concession for the sufferings of some and death of others. Mr. Biederbick (and presumably the others) needs the money. He has been long ill from his long service, and for two or more months was in a New York hospital, which generously defrayed his expenses from its endowment fund. I cannot too strongly urge this justice.

A. W. GREELY,
First Lieutenant Fifth Cavalry, United States Army.
Late Commanding Lady Franklin Bay Expedition.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
February 16, 1886.

I hereby concur in and indorse all that Lieutenant Greely has said of this case. This claim is just and ought to be provided for, and I hope will be without delay.

W. B. HAZEN, Chief Signal Officer.

[Extract from affidavit of D. L. Brainard and Henry Biederbick.]

That while in service there they expected to receive full allowances according to law for fuel, quarters, and extra-duty pay, and were entitled to have the same commuted to them in money, as provided by the statutes and regulations in pursuance thereof, upon their return from the icy North, after long, arduous, and perilous service of years, during which time they endured unceasing hardships and many lost their lives in the performance of their duties; by some technical construction of the law they are refused their allowances, although all allowances to which officers are eligible were granted to the officers serving on the said expedition.

That the members of the United States Signal Corps stationed in this city during that period received the allowances which the affiants ask. That if men serving amidst the comforts of civilization received their allowances, so much the more should they in their remoteness and solitude. That, moreover, two men of the Point Barrow expedition, under command of Lieutenant Ray, who remained in the Arctic one year less than the affiants, received these allowances by special act of Congress approved. That also Sergt. F. Meyer, Signal Corps, on duty with the Polaris expedition, 1871–'72, received in full similar allowances and commutation. The affiants are poor, and have earned their money. They appeal to Congress for a speedy settlement of their just claims.

Before the conclusion of the reading of the report,

Mr. FARQUHAR said: I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, as the case has been clearly stated.

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill H. R. 3192, of the same title, was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

A. P. SWINEFORD.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6012) for the relief of A. P. Swineford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. P. Swineford, governor of Alaska, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $611.38, amount of salary from July 1 to September 13, 1885.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. DOUGHERTY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6012) for the relief of A. P. Swineford, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

A bill identical with this was reported favorably from the Committee on Claims in Forty-ninth Congress, second session. The report states all the facts, and this committee adopts that report and recommends the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 3993, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.]

The beneficiary of the accompanying bill, A. P. Swineford, governor of Alaska, was appointed to the position he holds in June, 1885, and on the 18th of that month took the proper oath of office at the city of Washington before the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. For a short time thereafter he was detained in Washington upon official business preparatory to assuming the duties of his office and in making the necessary preparations for the journey to Sitka, the seat of government. While thus engaged, and in view of suggestions as to his right to salary before actually reaching the seat of government, he applied to the Secretary of the Interior for a formal leave of absence from June 17, in response to which he was officially informed by letter of July 11, 1885, that he was expected to reach his post of duty at the earliest possible date, but that until that time the fact of his not having formally assumed the duties of his office at Sitka would not be considered against his salary, which would be allowed from and including June 18, 1885, the date of his official oath.

He finished his official and personal preparations at the earliest possible date, and started for Alaska via the Northern Pacific Railroad and steamer from Port Townsend, Puget Sound. He had made careful inquiries at the Post-Office Department to ascertain the day upon which he could leave Port Townsend upon this steamer, and was informed by officials of that Department that she left, on mail schedule time, on the 14th day of August. Governor Swineford, acting upon this information, reached Portland August 12, and there learned that the steamer had sailed from Port Townsend on the 11th, three days ahead of time. He, however, immediately proceeded to Victoria, British Columbia, and endeavored to find other means of transportation. He reported his detention to the Interior Department both by telegram and letter, and, failing to secure any other transportation, was obliged to wait for the next mail steamer from Port Townsend, which he took, reaching his destination, Sitka, September 15, 1885, whence he immediately reported his arrival and the assumption of the duties of his office.

It appears beyond question that Governor Swineford used the utmost diligence in endeavoring to reach Sitka at the earliest moment after his appointment; that the delay referred to was occasioned solely by necessary official preparation and the failure of the steamer to follow her schedule time, and that he was acting during all of the time under the official assurance that his compensation would run from the 18th of June, 1885.

Your committee are entirely satisfied that under the circumstances his salary for this period should be paid. The accompanying bill covers salary for the period named, except from the 18th day of June to the 1st day of July, for which time he was paid by the Treasury Department before any question on the subject arose.

Copies of official correspondence with the Interior Department, covering the question, are hereto attached, together with a letter of the First Comptroller, sustaining the justice of the claim and recommending its allowance.

Your committee, accordingly, favorably report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1886.

SIR: In adjusting the accounts of A. P. Swineford, governor of the Territory of Alaska, I have been compelled to disallow his pay from July 1 to September 14, 1885, because he had not complied with the law by commencing his duties within the Territory, but claimed pay for the time by reason of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior had granted him leave of absence.

The act of May 1, 1876 (19 Stat., 43), has this provision: "And hereafter payment of salaries of all officers of the Territories of the United States appointed by the President shall commence only when the person appointed to any such office shall take the proper oath and shall enter upon the duties of such office in such Territory;" and although the act organizing the Territory of Alaska authorizes the governor of the Territory to take the oath before any circuit or district judge, it does not dispense with his going to the Territory to commence his duties before he can receive his pay; but it does provide, that "the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable to said Territory, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby extended thereto" (act of May 17, 1884; 23 Stat., 27).

I regard the former act as applying to all officers of Territories, whether organized or unorganized. Under existing law I could not allow compensation in this case; but Congress can, in its discretion, grant the relief which is asked by the governor, and the facts of the case seem to me to render it proper.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, M. C.,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 1, 1887.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 26th ultimo, requesting to be furnished a copy of any letter in this Department granting leave of absence to Governor A. P. Swineford, of Alaska, from July 1 to September 13, 1885, I have to inform you that there is no such letter of record in this Department; but there are inclosed herewith copies of all correspondence relative to Governor Swineford's absence during the year 1885.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., July 11, 1885.

SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your application of this date for a leave of absence from June 17 ultimo, when your predecessor received notice of his suspension from office, until August 15 proximo, when you say you expect to reach Alaska, I have to inform you that the Department expects you to arrive at your post of duty at the earliest date possible, until which time the fact of your not having formally assumed the duties of your office in Sitka will not be considered against your salary, which will be allowed from and including June 18 ultimo.

Please report the date of your arrival in Sitka.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW, Acting Secretary.

Hon. ALFRED P. SWINEFORD,
Governor of Alaska,
Washington, D. C.

PORT TOWNSEND, WASH., August 19, 1885.
(Via Seattle, August 20, 1885.)

To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington:

Detained at Victoria on account of wrong information given me at Post-Office Department. Can't charter steamer except at exorbitant price. Coast Survey steamer Hassler at Victoria unemployed on account dense smoke. If consistent, please secure telegraphic order proper authority to Captain Snow to take me to Sitka, otherwise can't get there for nearly one month. Please answer to Victoria, care American consul.

A. P. SWINEFORD, Governor of Alaska.

VICTORIA, B. C., August 20, 1885.

SIR: I made bold to wire you yesterday the fact that I was detained here on account of wrong information given me at the Post-Office Department as to the date the mail steamer would sail from Port Townsend for Alaska ports. Acting on such information, which I had every reason to consider perfectly reliable, I made my calculations to be at Port Townsend on the 13th, so as to take the steamer the following day, which I had been told was her day for sailing as per her mail schedule. Arriving at Portland on the 12th I was informed, in answer to a telegram sent to the collector at Port Townsend, that the steamer had sailed on the 11th. I then came on here in the hope of catching a stray steamer or vessel that would carry me to my destination, and finding none, and being unable to charter any safe transportation at a price within my ability to pay, and finding the Hassler unemployed on account of the dense smoke from forest fires, which rendered it impossible for her to continue the work in which she had been engaged, I ventured to telegraph you as I did.

I write this simply in justice to myself, and to assure you that I have made every possible effort to reach my post of duty in compliance with your order to that effect; that I have failed through no fault or negligence of my own, but by reason of the mail steamer anticipating her time by three days, as stated. Of course, I scarcely expect a favorable reply to my telegram asking for transportation; but be assured I will make every possible effort to get to Sitka in advance of the next trip of the mail steamer, and report to you from my post of duty, which I am exceedingly anxious to reach without unnecessary delay.

Hoping this explanation will suffice to exonerate me from all blame in the premises, I am, sir,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. P. SWINEFORD, Governor of Alaska.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DISTRICT OF ALASKA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Sitka, September 15, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I arrived here this morning and immediately entered upon the discharge of my duties as governor of the district.

* * * * * * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. P. SWINEFORD, Governor of Alaska.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to inquire how long Governor Swineford remained after he got there?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. In Alaska?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I can not answer.

Mr. HOLMAN. About a week?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I do not know how long and can not say. I think he got there in September——

Mr. HOLMAN. And came back in October or November.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No; I think he came in December, and then on official business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think he was on the floor as early as the first week in December.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I do not think it makes any difference. When he came back he came on official business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to the bill, but this office is a mere sinecure.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is not the governor's fault.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE O. DONNELL.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3453) for the relief of George O. Donnell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to George O. Donnell the sum of $470.23, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum being the bounty and back pay due said Donnell as a United States veteran volunteer of the war of the rebellion.

Mr. COBB. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CROUSE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3453) for the relief of George O. Donnell, submit the following report:

George O. Donnell, now a resident of Norwich, Conn., in needy circumstances and greatly impaired health, was enlisted in Company A, Second New York Heavy Artillery, in September, 1861, and served with that command for about two years and six months. He then re-enlisted as a veteran for three years in the same organization.

In September, 1864, Donnell, while in active service with his artillery in front of Petersburgh, Va., was attacked with chronic diarrhea. He was sent to City Point and thence to Mount Pleasant Hospital, Washington, D. C., from which hospital he was furloughed and sent home to Norwich, Conn. At the expiration of the furlough Donnell's attending home physician applied for an extension of furlough, which was granted. Three or four times afterwards his furlough was extended, and finally two accredited physicians made oath to his physical unfitness for service and sent same to the hospital authorities at Washington with his application for discharge; but the war being virtually ended the application was not acted upon, and Donnell, being at no time from the expiration of his last furlough up to September 29, 1865, the date of muster-out of his command, able to travel and rejoin his artillery, was not mustered out and did not receive a discharge at the time of mustering out of his command.

According to the terms of Donnell's re-enlistment he was to receive $402 as veteran bounty, to be paid in installments. There was paid him $162, leaving $240 still due him at the close of the war and at the time of the mustering-out of his artillery. He neither received any pay for service from the time of his first furlough; and so, as was found by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury and is of record and evidence, Donnell, at the time of the mustering-out of the artillery, of which he had all the time continued an honorable member, though on sick furlough and unfit for active duty during the latter months of its service, was entitled, on September 29, 1865, to bounty and pay amounting to $470.23.

Donnell continued in feeble health, much of the time bed-ridden, during the years immediately following the war, and his condition, as well as his ignorance of the proper methods of procedure, delayed any action looking to the obtaining of an honorable discharge and the bounty and pay due him for some years. In 1878, however, Donnell received an honorable discharge, and on October 8, 1878, applied in proper form for bounty pay. The application was disallowed on the ground that the records in the Paymaster-General's Office showed that George O. Donnell, Company A, Second New York Heavy Artillery, had received all pay and bounty due on January 17, 1866, at the subtreasury in New York City, in check No. 5538, drawn by James B. Sheridan, assistant paymaster-general, for $470.23, to George O. Donnell or bearer.

Donnell claims that the payment of this sum was fraudulently obtained by some person forging his signature and falsely impersonating him. Affidavits are in evidence that at and about the time of the payment (January 17, 1876), as shown by the Treasury records, to George O. Donnell of wages and bounty, the real Donnell was in North Oxford, Mass. It is further in evidence that Assistant Paymaster-General Sheridan, in giving check No. 5538 for $70.23 to George Donnell or bearer, marked the payment upon his discharge. As this was some twelve years before the real Donnell received his discharge papers, it would seem evident that not only was Donnell impersonated, but also were his discharge papers forged. There is also in evidence that the officials of the Treasury Department sought to discover the impersonator of Donnell, but while at least one person was implicated in the alleged fraud, positive evidence for conviction could not be obtained.

The reliability of Donnell's own statements are vouched for by prominent citizens of Connecticut and Massachusetts, and the direct evidence submitted in the case, and all the circumstances surrounding it, lead the committee unanimously to believe that Donnell has been deprived of bounty and pay by the fraudulent representations of an impersonator, and therefore recommend the passage of this special act, as there can be no relief for the claimant through the Departments of War or the Treasury on account of the records there made by this fraud.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The name of Mr. DUNN was called.

Mr. PEEL. My colleague, Mr. DUNN, is absent because of the death of his child the other day; and I ask unanimous consent that he may not lose his place in the call. I ask that his name be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

The name of Mr. ELLIOTT was called.

Mr. COTHRAN. My colleague is absent, and I ask that his name also may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. For what reason?

Mr. HEARD. I dislike to appear discourteous; but still I conceive it to be my duty to object, for the reason that we, who are lower down on the roll, if this course is to be continued, and absent members are to be allowed the privilege when they return of having their names called, our names will not be reached at all. I do not think it exactly fair, and in the interest of common justice I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next name.

MARGARET POLAND.

Mr. FULLER. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 3880) for the relief of Margaret Poland.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. COBB. This report conclusively shows that this is a case of pure spoliation by private soldiers during hostilities, for which the Government is in nowise responsible; and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a count.] More than five gentlemen have objected, and the bill will not be considered.

ALFRED BREUER.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In my absence some few minutes ago from the House my name was passed. I desire consideration of a bill which carries with it no appropriation.

Mr. HOOKER. That is going back on the call.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. MAISH. Let the bill be read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I was called out of the House five minutes ago and two names have been called since mine; that is all.

Mr. MAISH. Very well. I do not object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The bill I ask consideration of is the bill (H. R. 2688) for the relief of Alfred Breuer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove from the records the charge of desertion against Alfred Breuer, late of the United States Marine Corps; and thereupon the said Alfred Breuer shall be restored to all rights and privileges as fully as if said charge of desertion had never existed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BOUTELLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2688) for the relief of Alfred Breuer, submit the following report:

Alfred Breuer affirms that he was born in Breslau, Germany, July 3, 1848; that he came alone to this country, landing in New York City in May, 1863; that shortly afterwards, on the 25th of May, 1863, he was induced to enlist as a private in the Thirtieth Independent Battery of New York Light Artillery for the term of three years, being then less than fifteen years of age; that he served with his command until it was mustered out, being at one time seriously injured, and treated for said injury at a hospital in Alexandria, and was honorably discharged at New York City, June 23, 1865, after more than two years of service in the Union Army.

He further declares that in the same year, a few months later, he then being only seventeen years of age, he was persuaded to enlist in the United States Marine Corps, upon representation that on account of his youth and previous service in the Army he would be kept on duty at the Brooklyn navy-yard; that after about two months he was ordered on board a man-of-war, and remembering his rough passage on the ocean his fear of the sea induced him to desert, without realizing the serious consequences of his act.

The evidence shows that he did enlist as stated, May 25, 1863, in the New York Battery, and that he was honorably discharged June 23, 1865, at New York City.

The records of the Navy Department show that he was enlisted in the Marine Corps October 13, 1865, at New York, for four years, and that he deserted on the 25th of November of that year from the Marine barracks, Brooklyn.

In corroboration of his youth at the time of his desertion he has filed with the committee a passport issued to him December 21, 1878, describing him as then thirty-one years of age; and he has also furnished photographs of himself, taken at the time, which clearly demonstrate his minority, while as clearly establishing his identity.

He declares—and there is no contradiction—that he was enlisted without his knowledge or consent by men who took advantage of his ignorance and his forlorn condition on arrival as an immigrant at New York, defrauding him of bounty, and taking from him everything that he had brought from home.

From the facts submitted the committee are satisfied that said Breuer was a minor when enlisted in the Marine Corps, and that his account of his desertion is correct. His excellent character is attested by citizens of the highest standing in Buffalo, N. Y., where he has married and brought up a family, and the recommendation for his relief is signed by prominent officers of the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of New York.

Believing that the story of the experiences of this friendless boy is substantially true, the committee are of the opinion that his service of more than two years in the war before he was seventeen years old amply justifies a liberal consideration of the circumstances attending his subsequent offense, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill H. R. 2688.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 11, 1888.

SIR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 2688) "for the relief of Alfred Breuer," and to this Department's letter of the 23d ultimo in reply to your request for "such information as may be in the possession of the Navy Department touching the record of the said Alfred Breuer, together with such opinion as the Department may desire to express as to the expediency of reporting said bill;" referring also to certain evidence subsequently submitted to the Department and which is alleged to have a material bearing upon the merits of Breuer's application, I have to state that the only information relating to this case of which the Department was possessed at the date of its reply to the request above mentioned was that contained in the official record relating to Breuer's enlistment in, and desertion from, the Marine Corps, by which it appears that he enlisted in said corps October 13, 1865, for the period of four years; that he was then eighteen years of age; that his former occupation was that of "soldier;" that he deserted from the Marine barracks, Brooklyn, N. Y., November 25, 1865, and that he is still a deserter at large.

The evidence subsequently brought to the notice of the Department is contained in various testimonials, both public and private, including Breuer's honorable discharge from the Army in February, 1865. From the evidence thus presented it appears that Breuer is a German by birth and came to the United States in May, 1863; that he was then under fifteen years of age; that he enlisted in the Army for a period of three years from May 25, 1863, and was honorable discharged when the command with which he served was mustered out, at the city of New York, in June, 1865, and that he was still under age when, in October of that year, he enlisted in the Marine Corps. There is, however, no evidence tending to bring into question the correctness of the official record or to show that Breuer was not properly marked as a deserter, and, on the evidence submitted, the Department would have no power to remove the mark of desertion.

The private testimonials in Breuer's behalf are from citizens of high standing, who, it appears, are well acquainted with his history and who speak of him in terms going to show that his personal record since the war is, in every respect, unexceptionable. Under these circumstances, and in view of Breuer's extreme youth at the date of his first enlistment, his honorable discharge from the Army after serving until the close of the war, and his re-enlistment, while still a minor, in the Marine Corps, it would seem that in taking action upon his application for the relief proposed by said bill the facts appearing in the evidence and testimonials above referred to are worthy of consideration.

The papers which were formally submitted by Hon. J. M. FARQUHAR for the inspection of the Department are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. C. A. BOUTELLE,
Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not object, and I do not intend to object, to the passage of this bill, but I want to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs reported last winter a bill covering every case where an honorable discharge ought to be granted. That bill was sent to the Senate and is pending there, and I hope it will not be long before the measure will be acted upon.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This is a bill relating to a charge of desertion from the Marine Corps.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the bill we passed covers the whole service.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We had a bill passed by the Naval Committee which covers cases relating to the Navy; but this is a special case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that we have passed a bill having this object in view. I do not object.

Mr. COBB. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there five gentlemen objecting? [After a pause.] There are not.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMPSON M'KINLEY.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 2267) to pay Thompson McKinley $375 for service voucher issued to him during the late war by Capt. George W. Harrison, assistant quartermaster, United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $375 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of a certain service voucher given by Capt. George W. Harrison, assistant quartermaster, to Thompson McKinley, late a private in Capt. John Key's Company A, Ringgold Cavalry, Pennsylvania Volunteers, for extra expenses incurred by him while on duty as quartermasters agent at Romney, Va., during the late war.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2267) to pay Thompson McKinley $375 for service voucher issued to him during the late war by Capt. George W. Harrison, assistant quartermaster, United States Army, make the following report:

Your committee find that the following service voucher was given to the said Thompson McKinley on March 31, 1862, to wit:

"The United States to Thompson McKinley, Dr.

"For services rendered as agent for assistant quartermaster United States Army, at Camp Keys, Romney, Va., and Cumberland, Md., from November 1, 1861, to March 31, 1862, being five months, at $75 per month, $375.

"I certify that the above account is correct and just, and that the services were rendered as stated, and were necessary for the public service.

"GEO. W. HARRISON,
"Captain and Assistant Quartermaster."

The voucher is made in duplicate and indorsed as follows:

"Approved, and ordered to be paid.

"B. F. KELLEY, Brigadier-General."

The voucher has never been paid. The facts in relation to the transaction are as follows: During the occupation of Romney, Va., in the winter of 1861-'62 by the United States Army, said Thompson McKinley was taken from his regiment, Ringgold's Cavalry, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and placed on detached duty as quartermaster's agent at that post; the assistant quartermaster was Capt. George W. Harrison, under whose directions claimant was acting. He served in that capacity for the time stated and received the said voucher, which was approved by the then commanding general, Brig. Gen. B. F. Kelley.

There is no question as to the justice of the claim so far as the value of the services are concerned.

The voucher has never been paid. Claimant mislaid the voucher, and for a long time it was not found by him. When presented to the Quartermaster-General the same was rejected by him on the ground that the claimant was an enlisted man and was not for that reason entitled to the same.

Your committee find by reference to the Army regulations that private soldiers are permitted to receive extra compensation for extra service, and your committee are of opinion that the quartermaster under whom he served and the general in command at the time are the best judges of the value of the services rendered, and that as neither the service nor the value of the same is disputed, the same should be paid.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCIEN GOYAUX.

Mr. GAY. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the representatives of Lucien Goyaux the sum of $1,545, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the same being for hospital stores, vehicles, harness, and saddlery taken from said Lucien Goyaux, deceased, at Baton Rouge, La., for the use of the United States Army, during the war of 1861.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WILKINSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux, report as follows:

The committee find the facts of this case fully and accurately stated in Senate report from the Committee on Claims of the present Congress, which report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 1366, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report:

The committee adopt the report submitted through Senator CAMERON at the Forty-eighth Congress, which was as follows:

"In August, 1862, Lucien Goyaux resided at Baton Rouge, La., and was engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling saddles, harness, and other goods usually kept in establishments of that kind. Col. Halbert E. Paine, colonel of the Fourth Wisconsin Infantry, was at the time in command at Baton Rouge. Soon after the battle of August 5, 1862, at Baton Rouge, Col. Halbert E. Paine, by Special Order No. 5, 1862, directed Maj. Frederick Frye, of the Ninth Connecticut Infantry, to collect horses and equipments to mount patrols detailed from the different regiments, and to take possession of such property as was necessary for that purpose and for the supplying of ambulances and transportation teams.

"Under and in pursuance of said order, Major Frye, on the 12th of August, 1862, took possession of Mr. Goyaux's store and his stock of saddles, harness, etc., contained therein.

"On the 6th of October, 1862, a board of survey, constituted under Special Order No. 45 of the Department of the Government of the Gulf, consisting of Col. H. E. Paine, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers; Lieut. Col. O. W. Lull, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Capt. William Roy, Twenty-first Indiana Volunteers, was appointed by order of General T. W. Sherman, and directed to assemble at Camp Parapet on Thursday, October 6, 1862, at 10 o'clock a. m., to take proof, appraise, and report upon the stock of harness, etc., belonging to L. Goyaux, alleged to have been taken for the use of the forces of the United States by order of the commanding officer. This board assembled pursuant to the order, and on the 4th of January, 1863, reported to the commanding general that they had attended to the duty assigned them, and had taken all the testimony offered by the claimant, Goyaux, as well as the testimony produced upon the part of the United States, and that it appeared from such testimony that Goyaux was the owner of the stock of goods, and that he was loyal to the United States, and they recommended the payment of $1,845, the value of the goods taken and used by the Army. This allowance was approved by Brig. Gen. T. W. Sherman, commanding.

"Subsequently, on the 6th of March, 1863, the matter was again investigated by a court of inquiry under Special Order No. 6. This court recommended that the claimant should be paid the sum of $1,545.

"The following are the items allowed the claimant by the two boards:

11 sets of harness	$350
30 saddles	400
72 bridles, girths, and surcingles	150
150 whips	100
Saddlery hardware	150
13 saddle-bags	50
51 collars	75
1 wagon	60
1 dray	60
3 bales of moss, taken and used for hospital purposes	50
Total	1,545

"In 1863 Goyaux presented his claim to the War Department for payment. It was investigated, and on the 23d of September, 1863, Chauncey Smith, the Solicitor of the War Department, made a decision thereon. He states as follows:

"'Upon the claim of Lucien Goyaux, I have the honor to report that in my opinion the loyalty of the claimant is fully established, and that he is justly entitled to a part, if not the whole, of the claim, but there is no appropriation out of which he can be paid by the Department.'

"Goyaux died November 20, 1871. He was a native of France, and it appears that his widow and children did not know that he had ever become a citizen of the United States. The widow and children of Goyaux caused the claim to be presented to the French and American Claims Commission, but upon investigation it was discovered that Goyauz had become a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1857, and consequently, he being an American citizen, the French and American Claims Commission could not adjudicate the claim.

"The claim was cognizable before the Southern Claims Commission, but Goyaux died a few months after this commission was established, and it is satisfactorily shown that his legal representatives had no knowledge whatever that the claim could be considered by the Southern Claims Commission until long after that commission expired by limitation of law.

"The original claimant, Goyaux, was diligent in asserting his claim.

"We are satisfied that the property hereinbefore described was taken pursuant to the order of Colonel Paine, the commanding officer; that it was adapted to the use of the Army, and that it was actually used by the Army. We are also satisfied that it was of the value of $1,545.

"We therefore report back said bill and recommend that it do pass."

Mr. HOLMAN (before the conclusion of the reading of the report). The substance of this case is fully presented, and I believe it is a clear case.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GAY. I ask that bill H. R. 3716, which is a fac-simile of this bill, be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a little while in order that I may ask consideration of a bill involving the payment of $247 to a very poor fellow?

Mr. LANHAM. I will withdraw my motion for that purpose.

WILLIAM WHITEHOUSE.

Mr. WARNER. Then I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 2598) for the relief of William Whitehouse.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay William Whitehouse, of Jackson County, Missouri, the sum of $247.50, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full payment for two sets of blacksmith's tools taken in 1863 by the United States Army from the shop of said Whitehouse, in the county of Jackson, Missouri.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin) is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2598) for the relief of William Whitehouse, have examined the same, and report:

That claimant resides in Jackson County, Missouri; and that in 1863 United States troops, under the command of Col. Walter King, took possession of claimant's blacksmith shop, and used the tools, coal, and iron, and removed them to their camp. The proof shows that claimant never recovered said tools, nor was he ever paid for them. Their value is stated at $247.50.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC H. WHEAT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask a favor of the House. Inasmuch as I will not be able to be here on next Friday, I ask to call up for consideration and have passed a bill involving $200.

Mr. HEARD. I will yield to that if the rule be extended a little further. I have been here every Friday and I also desire to call up a bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do not crowd me out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 148) for the relief of Isaac H. Wheat.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Isaac H. Wheat, of Jefferson County, Indiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200, for one horse belonging to him, and which was taken from him by the military forces under General Hobson, in July, 1863, and applied to the use of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH DIEHL.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask consideration of a bill that will not take five minutes, and would now ask that the report be read. It contains only 20 lines, and I am satisfied there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 861) for the relief of Joseph Diehl.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph Diehl, of Moniteau County, Missouri, the sum of $250, to be taken and accepted in full of all demands he may have on or against the United States for corn furnished to the Army during the late war.

The report (by Mr. STOCKDALE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 861) for the relief of Joseph Diehl, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 2330 of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[House Report No. 2330, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

This is a claim for $1,200, the alleged value of corn said to have been taken and used by United States troops during the war. It was twice carefully investigated by agents of the Quartermaster's Department, and rejected mainly because the claimant was not a citizen of the United States. The committee think that ought not to bar him, inasmuch as he served during a portion of the war as an officer in the United States Army.

Another ground for rejecting the claim was that it was not proved to the entire satisfaction of the Department that the corn taken was worth the amount claimed. The agents of the Quartermaster's Department, however, found that 1,000 bushels of corn were taken from him by the military authorities for the use of the troops, and that it was worth the sum of $250.

The committee herewith report a bill for the payment of that amount, and recommend that the same do pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH C. COLE.

Mr. MACDONALD. I wish to call up a bill and desire to say for the information of the House that it is a bill providing for the payment of a quarterly pension check. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The chairman assents to that course and that the bill should pass, as it is impossible to get a quorum of the committee together.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my objection.

There was no further objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10659) for the relief of Elizabeth C. Cole.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth C. Cole, dependent mother of William D. Cole, late private in Company I, Ninth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and now deceased, the sum of $72, as, and that being, the amount of pension which had accrued to said William D. Cole, deceased, at the time of his death, by virtue of pension certificate numbered No. 93444, for which said sum of $72 a check was issued, but did not reach said William D. Cole before he died.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

Mr. HIESTAND. I call up the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Quartermaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain and state the value of all timber, fences, and fruit trees on the farm of John Kennedy, deceased, situate in the District of Columbia, upon which Fort Sedgewick was erected, taken and used for fire-wood by the Army of the United States, and also the value of all timber sold by the Government which had been taken from said farm and used in the construction of said fort. And the amount so stated shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Margaret Kennedy the sum of $3,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be in full satisfaction for all claims against the Government for and on account of the damages sustained by the said Kennedy by reason of the cutting and using the timber, fencing, and fruit trees from her land by the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Before that question is put I desire to hear the report read.

The report of the Committee on War Claims (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

In March, 1853, John Kennedy, the deceased husband of the claimant in this case, purchased a farm containing over 26 acres, situate in the District of Columbia, for $1,605, and moved upon it with his family during the same year. He was a loyal citizen of the United States, and for about twenty-five years was employed as a stone-cutter on several public buildings of the Government, including the Capitol. With the money accumulated from his earnings he was enabled to purchase said farm. Margaret Kennedy, who is now asking for relief, is the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, aged about sixty-four years, and the mother of ten children. The claim has never been acted on by either House.

It appears by the papers on file that in the years 1862–'63 the military forces of the United States took possession of this land and constructed thereon the fortification known as Fort Sedgwick. The property consisted of over 26 acres, as before stated, on which stood about 12 acres of oak, chestnut, pine, and other timber, and two hundred fruit-bearing trees of apple, peach, pear, and cherry, and was inclosed by a post-and-rail fence. By the construction of the fort and digging of trenches, sewers, and rifle-pits, about 20 acres of the land was practically destroyed. A part of the standing timber was used in building the fort, and the remainder, together with the fruit trees and the fence, was used by the troops for fire-wood. It is also shown that afterwards the timber was torn from the fort and sold to one Lacy by the Government.

The occupation of and injury to the farm of the claimant, and the erection of a fort thereon, were the unavoidable results of military operations in the face of the enemy, and for which no compensation can be made. Wood used for fuel by the Army, whether forest timber, fruit trees, or fences, may be classed under the head of quartermaster stores, and the claimant having been a loyal citizen is entitled to compensation therefor. The timber which was cut from the farm and used in the construction of the fort was the property of the owner of the farm after the war was over and the fort abandoned. If the Government sold or disposed of such timber, the claimant is entitled to compensation for the value thereof.

Your committee report herewith an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill referred to them, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I observed toward the close of the report this language:

If the Government sold or disposed of such timber, the claimant is entitled to compensation for the value thereof.

I assent to that proposition, if it is proved that the property was taken.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I think that is the true situation.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. This bill ought not to pass without proper consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I object, unless some explanation be made.

Mr. LANHAM. There is not time now for discussion on this bill. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HERBERT reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GILFRY, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, further insisted on its amendment numbered 110 to said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the order of proceeding this evening be the same that was observed on last Friday evening and at previous Friday evening sessions, and that the call of the roll be resumed at the point where it ended last Friday evening.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Yes, sir, I make that motion.

Mr. YODER. Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put I ask the gentleman to give way for a moment in order that I may call up an unfinished bill and have it considered, if I can get unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to balance that request by making a similar one. There was a bill of mine left unfinished when the House took a recess at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and I have come up this evening for the express purpose of endeavoring to get it disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is a pension bill—an increase-of-pension bill. I may as well state that frankly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Even if the gentleman objects to mine, I beg him not to object to the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER], which probably is not an increase-of-pension bill. I am used to having my bills of this character objected to, so it does not come so hard on me. [Laughter.]

Mr. YODER. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that this is a bill which I have called up at three different evening sessions and have lost my place every time on account of it. It has been considered by the committee and is now in the House, and I believe that my friend [Mr. CHEADLE] will consent that I may now call it up for consideration.

Mr. CHEADLE. I stated to the gentleman from Ohio that in case his bill was called up, and also another one which I understood was to be called up this evening, I would not object to either of them, nor shall I; but at the same time I think these special bills had better wait till the committee rises.

Mr. YODER. I will say to my friend from Indiana that I have waited in that way twice, and my bill has not been reached because there has not been time after the rising of the committee. I am going away, and this will be my last opportunity of getting this bill disposed of. I ask my friend as a matter of courtesy to let it be considered now, and I will take it as a great favor if he will not object.

Mr. CHEADLE. The gentleman from Ohio knows full well the other bill that I have referred to. The gentleman who was to call it up [Mr. MCKINNEY] is now in the House, and I understood that both of these bills were to be called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the Chair to understand that the gentleman from Indiana objects to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CHEADLE. I must object unless the other bill is called up also. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MCKINNEY] is to call it up, as I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of pension bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARUTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. At the last Friday evening session when my name was called I was unfortunately absent, and I now ask unanimous consent that the bill which I intended to call up had I been present at that time may be considered before the regular call of the roll is proceeded with. It is a bill for the relief of the widow of a soldier.

Mr. MORRILL. I think we had better have the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas demands the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. We went through with the whole roll up to the point where the call stopped.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know; but I was not present when my name was called.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, if we yield in this case we shall have to yield in others, and I think I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think the gentleman will object to my request when I make a brief statement. At the call of the roll last Friday night I was absent from the city. This is a bill for the relief of a widow lady. It has been favorably reported from the committee, and if the demand for the regular order is now insisted upon the bill will probably not be reached this session, because I do not expect to be present at next Friday evening's session.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, I will not object to it, because I wish to do everything I can for the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Louisa McLain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa McLain, dependent mother of John S. McLain, as stated in application numbered 260142 in the Pension Office.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 724) granting a pension to Louisa McLain, dependent mother of John S. McLain, have carefully examined the same, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That the soldier enlisted June 25, 1861, was mustered into rank July 9, 1861, and was discharged July 14, 1862. The cause of his discharge was chronic diarrhea.

Dr. L. Burdick testifies as follows:

"I treated John S. McLain about the 1st of March, 1863; I treated him eight days for chronic diarrhea, which disease he contracted while in the Army; his bowels were badly ulcerated. At the time he had a cough and a bad cold, which brought on pneumonia and its complications and caused his death."

Dr. Steven D. Ensmynger testifies:

"That he has been a practitioner of medicine in Gallatin County, Illinois, for thirty years, and has known George C. McLain, husband of the claimant, for twenty-five years; that he made a special examination of his right arm, shoulder, and right foot; that his right arm has been wasted away by a carbuncle and abscess; that three bones of his right foot have been cut in two with an ax, and that he has been for a long time incapable of performing manual labor."

Other affidavits filed in this case offer strong evidence that the claimant was largely dependent upon her son for her support.

Your committee therefore conclude from the evidence that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and respectfully recommend the passage of this bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], to call up a bill.

Mr. CARLTON. I object.

SARAH A. WOODERIDGE.

Mr. BOOTHMAN called up the bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Woodbridge, widow of Anson L. Brewer, major and paymaster United States Army, her pension having been suspended by reason of her remarriage.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge, having considered the same, report as follows:

We adopt and make part hereof the report of the Senate committee, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 2091, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3276) granting a pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge, widow of Anson L. Brewer, late major and paymaster in United States Army, have examined the same, and report:

The object of this bill is to restore the claimant to the pension-roll. She was formerly a pensioner of the United States on account of the death of her husband above named, who lost his life in a steam-boat explosion on the Mississippi the 3d of March, 1866, while traveling in the line of his duty as paymaster. Her son, Robert F. Brewer, was killed at the same time while in the line of duty in the same service. Another son, Capt. Charles Brewer, was killed in battle at Dallas, Ga., on the 28th day of March, 1864.

Shortly after the war the claimant remarried one Dr. Timothy Woodbridge, whereupon her pension ceased. This case was once before considered by this committee and was reported adversely, upon the ground that the facts alleged in support of her restoration to the pension-roll were not verified. The report was adopted by the Senate, and the bill indefinitely postponed July 24, 1888; but since that time the claimant has filed for the consideration of said committee a new application and new evidence, all verified under oath, stating the facts of her present condition.

The action of the Senate above spoken of has been reconsidered and the bill has been again referred to this committee.

From the affidavits of J. H. Wallace and Thomas W. Sanderson, as well as from her own sworn application, it appears that the second husband of the claimant, the said Dr. Woodbridge, is about seventy-eight years old, quite infirm, and almost blind, has no means of supporting his said wife, the claimant, and has contributed nothing toward her support for the last four years, and has, in fact, abandoned her.

The claimant herself is quite old and infirm; for the last two years she has been unable to do anything toward her own support and maintenance; is consequently dependent to some extent upon the aid of others.

Her condition is not likely to improve, rather apt to become worse. Her income from her little property inherited from her mother is not sufficient to afford her a maintenance.

The committee, therefore, under these circumstances, recommend her restoration to the roll and the passage of the bill herewith reported for that purpose.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MADISON M. MEREDITH.

Mr. BOUND called up the bill (S. 1591) granting an increase of pension to Madison M. Meredith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Madison M. Meredith, late captain of Company D, One hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $20 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1591) granting an increase of pension to Madison M. Meredith, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report:

Claimant was mustered in November 13, 1861, as first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, commissioned as captain April 10, 1862, and honorably discharged for disability July 12, 1862.

He filed his declaration March 8, 1882, alleging that before Yorktown, Va., about March or April, 1862, he contracted chronic diarrhea and rheumatism and fistula.

He was granted a pension, to date from March 8, 1882, at $8.50 per month, with rank of first lieutenant, for chronic rheumatism.

Upon application of claimant his rating was corrected and his pension increased to $10, as of the rank of captain. The claim for pension for fistula was rejected, the Pension Office deciding that claimant had not conclusively proven the existence of the disability since the war.

The papers on file in the Bureau of Pensions make the following exhibit:

First, that claimant was strong and healthy before his enlistment.

Second, that claimant contracted hemorrhoids or fistula while in the service and line of duty. The certificate of the regimental surgeon, upon which claimant was discharged July 12, 1862, was as follows: "I certify that I have carefully examined the above-mentioned officer, and find him suffering with chronic rheumatism and hemorrhoids, and that he is unable to perform the duties required of him, and has been since the 10th of May, 1862, and in my opinion ever will be."

Third, that claimant was still suffering from fistula May 6, 1885, when examined by the medical examining board. The board reports: "There is a blind internal fistula (internal opening 1 inch from anal margin) on right side, which applicant thinks resulted from diarrhea."

This board, as a result of this examination, rated claimant one-half of total for rheumatism and one-half of total for fistula.

Claimant was unable to conclusively prove the continuance of fistula from the date of the regimental surgeon's certificate (upon which claimant was discharged) until the medical board's examination, May 6, 1885, chiefly owing to the death of the physician who attended him after his discharge. But from all the evidence in the case your committee are of the opinion that the disability now existing is a continuation of that contracted in the spring of 1862, and that this bill simply gives the claimant the total pension to which he was entitled under the finding of the board of medical examiners, and under the evidence on file in the Bureau of Pensions. They therefore report the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES R. DURHAM.

Mr. JOHN R. BROWN called up the bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Lieut. James R. Durham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James R. Durham, late first lieutenant Company E, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Infantry Volunteers, this act to take effect from its passage, and the pension hereby granted to be in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The committee beg leave to report that they have considered this case and adopt the report of the Senate committee made in this case as the report of this committee, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 1420, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2675) granting a pension to Lieut. James R. Durham, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report:

The claimant was mustered into service as second lieutenant of Company E, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Infantry, on August 20, 1862; he was commissioned as first lieutenant on the 9th of July, 1863, to rank from the 7th of March, 1863; he was wounded at the battle of Winchester, Va., on the 14th of June, 1863; mustered out of the service June 16, 1865; applied for a pension July 22, 1865, for a gunshot wound in the right hand; was pensioned December 2, 1865, at $15 per month, and on June 6, 1866, was given the pension of his rank, $17 per month, which he now receives. He has made several applications for an increase of pension, but in each instance the claim has been rejected on the ground that "there is not total disability of the hand, and that is all the law contemplates." He has always been rated for said wound as totally disabled by every examining board, otherwise he could not have drawn a pension of $17 per month. He now asks that he be pensioned at the same rate as is allowed by law for the loss of a hand, to wit, $30 per month.

The committee have personally examined the wound of the claimant, and find that the ball entered the back of the right hand, passing through the bones and muscles of the wrist, and coming out on the inside of the arm, taking off the third finger. The committee find that by reason of the said wound it is impossible for the claimant to work the wrist or to close the thumb or three fingers of the wounded hand; that the claimant is unable to hold a pen, knife, or fork by reason of the wound in the right hand; that on a careful examination they can see no use that the claimant can make of said hand for any purpose.

The question therefore presented to the committee is not whether, technically, the Pension Bureau is not right in denying to the claimant a pension for the loss of a hand, but whether the claimant has not brought himself clearly within the spirit of the law which gives a pension of $30 a month for the loss of a hand. After a personal examination, the committee are of opinion that the claimant should be granted a pension at the rate of $30 per month, as they are satisfied it is equivalent to the total loss of the use of his right hand.

Senate bill 2675 is therefore reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I came in immediately after the call of my name; I ask to be allowed to call up a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11113) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of the late Philip H. Sheridan, General of the United States Army, and to pay her a pension, from the passage of this act, at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11113) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, submit the following report:

The military history of General Philip H. Sheridan is so familiar to the people of the United States that any recital of it by your committee is entirely unnecessary. His name is a household word throughout the land.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the words "five thousand" in lines 8 and 9 and inserting "thirty-five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, I make objection.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be submitted to the committee as to whether the bill shall be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 5.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I hope that bill will be passed over to-night. It will only spoil the evening, as there are sure to be one or two objections to it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I shall insist on the point of no quorum. I stated the other evening that I was perfectly willing for this bill to be considered, provided it should be taken over into a full House and reasonable time given for debate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Why, you can not get a full House during this session.

Mr. CHEADLE. I shall oppose all action by this House in violation of the law of the land. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman should allow some arrangement to be made by which these bills can be acted upon and disposed of.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that this bill be passed over for the present, to be considered on the third Wednesday in December next.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; let it be considered to-morrow.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object to its going over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] will take their positions as tellers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman accede to this proposition?

Mr. CHEADLE. What is it?

Mr. BINGHAM. That the previous question be considered as ordered, and that fifteen minutes be allowed on each side for debate.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will not consent to it. I will object to the consideration of this bill and every other bill that tramples under foot the fundamental principle of our law. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BINGHAM. No speech. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. I will object. I will not withdraw the point of no quorum. Settle the question here and now. [Cries of "Regular order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I am willing to reach an agreement with the gentleman from Indiana if I can.

Mr. CHEADLE. You can not reach any other agreement with me than the one I submitted the other evening when this bill was called up twice in the same evening session. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BINGHAM. What was that?

Mr. CHEADLE. That it go over to a full House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not object to that.

Mr. CHEADLE. And a reasonable time be given for debate.

Mr. BINGHAM. That I concede.

Mr. CHEADLE. Not less than six hours.

Mr. BINGHAM. Heaven and earth! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CHEADLE. No, sir; not less than six hours of debate. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to consent that this shall go over to a full House, and that he will designate a day during this session when the bill shall be acted on. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. No, sir, I will name no day during this session. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I want to say to those men who are rushing into the arena here in this House to obtain large pensions for the select few, that the whole session has passed over without giving a moment's consideration to take out of the almshouses over 40,000 of my comrades. [Cries of "Regular order!"] No day can be given to them for their bills. [Cries of "Regular order!" and confusion.] I stand here [cries of "Regular order!"] and will make the point of no quorum. Whenever they attempt to violate those fundamental principles I shall not consent to it. They shall not do it, so far as I am concerned, except by a constitutional quorum of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I can neither be frightened nor deterred from my purpose. [Great confusion.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration grants a pension to the widow of one of the most enterprising and greatest commanders of the Union Army during the late war. I do most earnestly beg him to allow this bill to be considered and disposed of to-night, that the widow and children of that great Union soldier may have just and liberal allowance from the Government he did so much to save, in order that they may be saved from poverty and want. In view of the valuable services rendered by General Sheridan, I beg that no member of this House will oppose any obstruction to the passage of this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am desirous of reaching a conclusion with the gentleman who antagonizes this legislation, and I will make no speech in submitting my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. The regular order is the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is a division on the vote by tellers. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania act as one of the tellers?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will withdraw the bill and let it resume its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object to its withdrawal.

Mr. HUNTER. Regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will withdraw the bill, and let the call go on.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object. The gentleman has no right to withdraw it when the committee is dividing.

Mr. FARQUHAR. You can not object; he has the right to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read, is before the House for its action, and the committee is dividing upon the question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the interest of the widows and orphans of the maimed and disabled soldiers, who are to-night hoping for some action on their bills, I trust my friend from Indiana will withdraw his objection to this bill, or else permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Indiana declines to withdraw the objection.

Mr. CHEADLE. Regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman has no right to object to the withdrawal of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his objection?

Mr. CHEADLE. I do insist on it, and demand the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then the gentleman stands in the way of every other bill on the Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the bill in regard to the widow of General Sheridan be laid aside, not to lose its place on the Calendar. That motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now dividing, and no motion is in order pending the division, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHEADLE. Unanimous consent will not be given.

Mr. MORRILL. But the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. CRAIN. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TOWNSHEND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. STONE, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Louisa McLain, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time were passed, namely:

A bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge;

A bill (S. 1591) granting an increase of pension to Madison M. Meredith; and

A bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Lieut. James R. Durham.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the motion to reconsider the several votes just taken will be considered as having been made and laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to further consider the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARUTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of business under the special order. The Clerk will call the roll in the order heretofore agreed upon.

The name of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, was called.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. The Committee of the Whole had under consideration when it rose a bill upon which a vote had been taken, and a point of order that no quorum was present was made and insisted upon. On motion the committee then rose, pending action on that bill. I want to know what is the status of the bill? What has been done with it?

Mr. BINGHAM. I withdrew that bill and asked that it might retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CHEADLE. To which request I had objected and did not withdraw the objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know by what authority any one in Committee of the Whole or in the House can be deprived of the right to withdraw a proposition before the previous question is ordered upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair understood that the bill presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] had been withdrawn. Pending a vote upon that it was withdrawn and the committee rose. A motion was then made by the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order, which was adopted. The Chair directed the Clerk to call the next name on the roll, which the Clerk did. Under Rule XVI, clause 2, a motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

The Clerk will continue the call.

MILTON WALLEN.

Mr. BUNNELL. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10032) granting a pension to Milton Wallen.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milton Wallen, of Clinton County, Kentucky, who was a member of Captain Brooks's company of Kentucky State troops, and grant him a pension at the rate given other soldiers similarly disabled.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10032) granting a pension to Milton Wallen, have examined the same, and make the following report:

It appears from the evidence before your committee that claimant was, in July, 1861, duly enrolled as a private in Capt. J. W. Brooks's company of Kentucky Home Guards, in Clinton County, Kentucky. That while serving in that capacity said organization had an engagement with the Confederate forces at Rowena, Russell County, Kentucky, in May, 1862, in which he was captured and taken to a rebel prison. That while standing at the window of his prison in Richmond, Va., he was, on the 5th day of July, 1862, shot at by one of the guards and wounded in his right arm, which necessitated amputation of that limb near the shoulder. That soon after this operation was performed he was exchanged and sent to Annapolis, Md., where he remained under treatment in general hospital until December, 1862, when he was sent to his home in Clinton County, Kentucky, where he has since resided.

Claimant makes a statement under oath, which is made part of this report, and is as follows:

"STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Clinton, ss:

"On this 12th day of July, 1888, personally appeared before me, a deputy clerk of the Clinton County court, Milton Wallen, personally known to me and whom I believe to be responsible and entitled to credit, and who upon oath states that his age is sixty-seven years; that his residence is in said county and State—post-office address, Cumberland City; that in July, 1861, he was enrolled in Capt. J. W. S. Brooks's company of Kentucky Home Guards, which was subsequently furnished with arms and ammunition by the United States Government, and acted in concert with regular organized forces of the United States; that while serving as a member of said organization he was captured at Rowena, Russell County, Kentucky, on or about the — day of May, 1862, by Confederate troops, and taken as a prisonor of war to Atlanta, Ga., where he remained a short while, and thence to Richmond, Va., where he was put in a prison, which he believes was called "Castle Thunder;" that on or about the 5th day of July of the same year, while standing at a window of his prison, he was shot at and wounded in the right arm by a party to him unknown, but supposed it was done by one of the guards of the prison; that his arm in consequence was amputated or cut off about midway between the elbow and shoulder joints; that in a few days after this occurrence he was exchanged, and sent to Annapolis, Md., where he remained under treatment for his wound in a Government hospital until some time in December, 1862, when he was sent to his home; that since his return he has resided in the counties of Russell and Clinton, State of Kentucky. * * *

"MILTON WALLEN.

"Witness:
"L. E. BOWLEN."

The affidavits of John C. Guffey, a gentleman of high standing and a resident of Cumberland City, Clinton County, Kentucky, who was a member of claimant's company, is also furnished and is as follows:

"Also personally appeared John C. Guffey, aged fifty-four years, personally known to me to be a resident of said county and State, and who, after being duly sworn, deposes and states that he has known the said Milton Wallen for at least thirty years; that he has personal knowledge of the fact that he was a member of said company, as he (affiant) was a member thereof and knows that the said Wallen's right arm was all right, so far as he could see, prior to his capture; that he has no interest in any claim that the said Wallen may have in consequence of the loss of his arm, and that his post-office address is Cumberland City, in said county and State.

"JOHN C. GUFFEY.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me on the day and date above mentioned by said affiants, and I certify that they were made acquainted with the contents of their respective affidavits before signing.

"Witness my hand and seal of office this 12th day of July, 1888.

"[SEAL.] C. B. PARRIGIN, Clerk,
"By THOMAS RIDLER, Deputy Clerk."

In view of the foregoing, your committee believe this to be a meritorious claim, and report back the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES W. GEDDES.

Mr. CARLTON. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9791) for the relief of Charles W. Geddes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to include the name of Charles W. Geddes, late assistant engineer United States Navy, among those who served in the Mexican war, and to issue to said Charles W. Geddes, under the provisions and limitations of law, a land-warrant for his services as assistant engineer on the United States steamer General Taylor during the war.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9791) granting a land-warrant to Charles W. Geddes for his services during the Mexican war, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant was an officer in the Navy from 1847 to 1855. He was warranted as third assistant engineer November 15, 1847; as second assistant engineer January 11, 1849; as first assistant engineer to rank from February 26, 1851.

Shortly after his first appointment he was ordered on board the United States steamer General Taylor, then stationed at Pensacola, Fla., to which vessel he was attached for a period of seven months, while it was employed in transporting seamen, etc., from New Orleans, where they were enlisted, to Pensacola, to serve on board vessels composing the Gulf Squadron, then co-operating with the land forces in the war with Mexico.

The Secretary of the Navy states that the General Taylor is not considered by the Navy Department as having been engaged in the prosecution of the war with Mexico at the time claimant served thereon.

The claimant applied to the Pension Bureau, under the act of March 3, 1855 (sections 2425 and 2426, Revised Statutes), for the allowance of a land-warrant, but his claim was rejected upon the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy already referred to, that the General Taylor had not served in that war.

The action of rejection was affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, on appeal.

The fourth clause of section 2426, Revised Statutes, includes as beneficiaries—

"Wagon-masters and teamsters who have been employed under the direction of competent authority in time of war, in the transportation of military stores and supplies."

It seems but just that officers who were transporting recruits should be placed at least on an equality with civil employés employed in transporting supplies.

The Treasury Department has allowed Mr. Geddes three months' extra pay under the act of February 19, 1879 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 20, page 316), and thereby recognized him as engaged in the prosecution of the war.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STONE, of Missouri). The Chair is under the impression that this bill does not come within the special order.

Mr. CARLTON. The bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions and was reported by that committee, of which I am a member.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read the special order under which the House is acting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, until further ordered, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary removing political disabilities, shall be considered, and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions, and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the special order, and the only business to be transacted in the Friday evening sessions as provided for are bills relating to pensions and the removal of political disabilities. This bill, though reported from the Committee on Pensions, is in the nature of a claim, and proposes to place the name of Charles W. Geddes "among those who served in the Mexican war," to quote the language of the bill, and to grant him a land warrant.

Mr. CARLTON. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to make a brief statement concerning this case. This claim is brought here by reason of the fact that this party applied to the Pension Office, and owing to some slight technicality in the way the Commissioner of Pensions could not grant the claim, and this bill was introduced. I think the reading of the report will settle the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that this is not in order under the special order, and so decides.

CARTER W. TILLER.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 3681) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller.

The bill was read.

Mr. CARUTH. The report is quite lengthy, Mr. Chairman, and I think if I were permitted to make a brief statement it would save the Clerk and the House would understand the merits of the case just as well or better.

Mr. KILGORE. I am inclined to insist on the reading of the report. If the rule be relaxed in one case it will be urged that it should be relaxed in others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill has been reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole already.

Mr. CARUTH. That is what I understand. We are now considering business by unanimous consent, are we not?

The CHAIRMAN. But the House is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARUTH. I understand we are in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has been considered by the Committee of the Whole and is unfinished business in the House.

Mr. CARUTH. Then I want it reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. It has already been reported to the House.

Mr. CARUTH. Well, then, when the committee rises I shall ask the House to consider the bill.

MARGARET M. MILLER.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 1500) granting a pension to Margaret M. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret M. Miller, of Elgin, Ill., a volunteer army nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her during life a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1150, beg leave to report that they have considered said case and adopt the report of the Senate in this case as their report, and recommend that said bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 967, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1500) granting a pension to Margaret M. Miller, have carefully examined the same, and report:

The facts bearing upon the right of the claimant, Margaret M. Miller, to be pensioned as a volunteer army nurse during the war of the rebellion have been carefully examined by the committee, who are of the opinion that, under the precedents which Congress has made in the granting of pensions to ladies who volunteered and devoted themselves to the laborious duty of nursing the sick and wounded of the Army during the war, the right of this claimant is clearly made out for such relief by the exhibits hereto appended (see exhibits marked A to H), which exhibits present all of the facts upon which the right of the claimant rests for a pension.

Your committee therefore report Senate bill No. 1500 favorably and recommend that it do pass.

EXHIBIT A.

ELGIN, ILL., December, 1887.

To the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

I, Margaret M. Miller, as your petitioner, submit the following statement, and ask your generous consideration of it, with the evidence submitted:

I responded to the call of Governor Morton, of Indiana, for helpers in hospital work, the need of the same being at that time very great in the Western armies, February 28, 1863, as a volunteer nurse from Indiana, I being then a resident of Goshen, Ind.

I was assigned to Adams' Black Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., where I served continuously until May 17, 1865; my services no longer required, the sick sent home, and war about over, hospital closed.

"I submit herewith my appointment, vouchers, letter of recommendation received then from Dr. Study, the last surgeon in charge there, with other proofs of service, showing the value and character of the same, and ask full consideration.

I deemed it a privilege to work for the poor sick soldiers, and I have thought I would never apply for pension or pay for services then rendered, as the length of time which has elapsed can prove to you, but circumstances alter cases. I am now over sixty years old, I have no home of my own, and have an invalid friend depending on me; because of this need of the relief, I now ask I may be allowed a pension as a volunteer army nurse, at $25 per month during the remainder of my life, believing, as I do, that my country can now afford, from its surplus millions, to remember both women and men who served her faithfully at a time of peril which none can forget.

With great respect, gentlemen, very truly, yours,

MARGARET M. MILLER,
Late Volunteer Army Nurse.

EXHIBIT B.

OFFICE OF CHICAGO SANITARY COMMISSION,
February 17, 1863.

Miss Margaret Miller has been this day appointed nurse in the military hospitals of the Western Department, by authority delegated to Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. B. Livermore by Miss D. L. Dix, general superintendent of nurses in the military hospitals in the United States.

For D. L. DIX,
MRS. A. H. HOGE,
MRS. D. B. LIVERMORE,
Chicago Sanitary Commission.

Miss Margaret Miller has been detailed to service in the general hospitals at Memphis, Tenn.

N. B.—If the place of service is changed a new certificate will be issued.

EXHIBIT C.

ADAMS GENERAL HOSPITAL,
Memphis, Tenn., May 31, 1865.

Miss Maggie Miller, the bearer of this, has been connected with this hospital for more than two years, during which time she has performed her duties in the most satisfactory manner.

Miss Miller I regard as a lady in every sense of the word, and therefore cheerfully recommend her to the consideration of any whom it may concern should she make application for employmeat again in the capacity of nurse.

J. M. STUDY,
Surgeon in Charge.

EXHIBIT D.

BOURBON, IND., December 24, 1887.

This is to certify that I, Samuel France, of Bourbon, Marshall County, and State of Indiana, have known Margaret Miller, formerly of Goshen, Ind., but now of Elgin, Ill., and that her moral standing is above suspicion; and further, that her patriotism and love of her country and Government were so strong that during the struggle for the suppression of the Southern rebellion she volunteered her services and went to the front as a nurse in the hospitals, where day after day and night after night she might be found taking care of suffering soldiers; weary and tired though she may have been, yet she was always ready and willing to encourage and cheer up the suffering and despondent and soothe the pillow of the dying soldier.

Month after month and year after year she devoted her services to her country from the last of February, 1863, to the best of my knowledge and belief, until May 27, 1865.

And I further certify that I have no pecuniary interest in any claim she has, or may have, against the Government of the United States.

SAMUEL FRANCE,
Late Surgeon of the One hundredth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

STATE OF INDIANA, County of Marshall, ss:

Before me, Jesse D. Chaplin, a notary public in and for Marshall County, State of Indiana, on this 24th day of December, 1887, came Samuel France, to me well known, and having signed, was by me sworn to the above and foregoing affidavit, the same being in the handwriting of said Samuel France, the affiant. I have no interest whatever in the matter in relation to which this affidavit is made, and a certificate of my official character has been filed in the Pension Office at Washington City, D. C.

Witness my hand and notarial seal this 24th day of December, 1887.

[SEAL.] JESSE D. CHAPLIN,
Notary Public.

EXHIBIT E.

STATE OF INDIANA, Warren County, ss:

Before me, Merrill Moores, a notary public in and for said county, duly commissioned and qualified to administer oaths, personally appeared George O. Jobes and, under oath, made the following statement, to wit: I reside at No. 417 Indiana avenue, Indianapolis, in the county and State above named, and have resided there for about twelve years past, and previously thereto I resided in Randolph County in the same State. I am a physician, and until my removal to this city was engaged in the practice of medicine.

By appointment of Governor O. P. Morton, I served as State military agent for the State of Indiana from August, 1862, until August, 1865, and as such was in charge of the local office at Memphis, Tenn., from March, 1863, until the close of my term of service.

Part of my duties as State military agent were to receive nurses sent out by the State, procure their assignment to duty, supervise their services, and in all proper ways to promote their efficiency and personal welfare.

In the discharge of these duties I became acquainted with Margaret M. Miller, then a resident of Goshen, Ind., but now of Elgin, Ill., whom I found already on duty as a nurse at Adams Hospital, and who remained there until its close in May, 1865. During all this time I visited the Adams Hospital frequently, and I know that I express the opinion of all who knew her, from superintendent down, when I say that she was one of the most useful nurses in the hospital.

GEO. O. JOBES.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of January, 1888. Witness my hand and notarial seal.

[SEAL.] MERRILL MOORES.

EXHIBIT F.

[Salem Bank, established 1854.]

GOSHEN, IND., December 29, 1887.

To the Committee on Pensions, Washington, D. C.,
United States Senate, or whom else it may concern:

I take pleasure in stating that before, during the war of the rebellion, and for years thereafter Miss Margaret Miller resided in Goshen, Ind., where also I was then and am now a resident. That I know quite well that she, with two other ladies of this place, patriotically responded to the call for female nurses to attend to and minister to the sick and wounded soldiers. She and those other ladies went from our town to the hospitals near the front in February, 1863, and were on duty as nurses until some time in May, 1865, except Miss Powell, one of the three, who, I think, died in Memphis in said service.

No soldier who shouldered a gun, performed long marches, endured heat, thirst, rain, and marched into the face of battle did for the country a more patriotic or valorous service than did these three ladies of our town, of whom Miss Margarent Miller, now of Elgin, Ill., was one; and she deserves a pension. If the law does not reach far enough to include her claim, it should do so.

I further certify that I am in no way related by blood or affinity to said Miss Miller, and have no interest in her claim, other than to show her meritorious claim.

I further state, Miss Miller during all the many years of her residence in Goshen established and maintained an unblemished life of virtue, her good name being known and acknowledged by all persons of our town. In support of all these statements, I refer to General Milo S. Hascall, Col. M. B. Hascall, of Forty-eighth Indiana, William A. Thomas, banker, and Mrs. W. A. Thomas, Dr. M. M. Latta, Capt. Hawks, Dr. Jackson, Rev. H. Vannuys, D. D., and others, for the verity of the statements herein made.

Respectfully,

JNO. W. IRWIN.

EXHIBIT G.

ELGIN, ILL., December 20, 1887.

To the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

I, David C. Scofield, of this city, do submit the following statement, namely: Miss Margaret M. Miller, who served as army nurse in the hospitals of Memphis, Tenn., and after the war and until 1875 as teacher among the freedmen, when, in failing health, she retired for rest, and who since that time has resided in this city, filling important stations in the moral and religious life, till now, in failing health and without a home of her own, and having passed the age of sixty, very reasonably asks a pension at your hands during her natural life of not less than $25 per month.

Very respectfully, yours,

DAVID C. SCOFIELD.

EXHIBIT H.

ELGIN, KANE COUNTY, ILLINOIS, December 30, 1887.

To the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

This is to certify that I have been acquainted with Miss M. M. Miller for the past twelve years, and take pleasure in recommending her as a worthy Christian lady, in every way deserving. She has no means of support aside from her earnings, and is in delicate health, having never been strong and robust since my acquaintance with her.

Very respectfully,

S. K. WHITFORD, M. D.,
36 Dundee avenue, Elgin, Ill.

Mr. FELTON. I desire to ask for information if this bill does not carry a pension of $25 a month to a nurse; and I would like some gentleman to inform me what the rate is for a soldier or a soldier's widow.

Mr. CONGER and others. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. FELTON. I wanted the information, that is all, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Regular order.

Mr. CHEADLE. I desire to make a brief statement in reference to this case. I am informed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions that they grant pensions to nurses varying from $25 to $12, according to the amount of service performed and the amount of pay the party received from the Government. This is one of the most meritorious cases, and I hope it will be allowed.

Mr. FELTON. I desire to say that I do not want to obstruct the passage of the bill. I only wanted to get the information I asked for so that we might see on what principle we were acting.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. The rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is this: Where a nurse served and received pay and is disabled we grant a pension of $12 a month. Where a nurse served without pay, as many of them did, and became disabled in the service we have allowed $25 per month. That has been the rule of the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make a suggestion on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will be recognized.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not catch the reading of the bill exactly, but my recollection is that it provides a pension for this woman for her natural life. That is not the rule that has heretofore been adopted, and if she should remarry the effect of the bill would be to continue her pension for life.

Mr. FELTON. She may be worse off if she gets married.

Mr. MACDONALD. It depends upon whom she marries.

Mr. KILGORE. If the gentleman will strike out the words "during life," I will not oppose the bill. I will move that as an amendment.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will state that this lady is almost seventy years of age, and there is not any likelihood of her marrying again.

Mr. KILGORE. I never heard of them being too old to get married. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. OWEN. I have some remarks on the pension question which I would like to have printed in the RECORD without taking up the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OWEN] will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I desire to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

MRS. CATHERINE BARBERICK.

Mr. CARLTON. Mr. Chairman, as the bill which I called up has been ruled out by the Chair, I now ask unanimous consent to call up in its stead the bill (H. R. 9252) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Baberick.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Catherine Baberick, of Watertown, Minn., mother of William Baberick, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry (and upon whom she was dependent for support), on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9252) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Barberick, of Watertown, Minn., having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Catherine Barberick is the mother of Killian Barberick, who enlisted February 19, 1862, and died August 2, 1864, of small-pox. Her claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the fatal disease originated while on veteran furlough.

It appears that the command was furloughed for thirty days, July 2, 1864, because of its re-enlistment as veterans. From the testimony taken by special examiner it is shown that the soldier died of the disease and at the date above given, after an illness of about ten days. This being true, there can hardly be any question as to the correctness of the department in rejecting the mother's claim under the law.

The pension laws do provide pensions for disability incurred while on veteran furlough, but only for such disabilities as were incurred while with the organization. Thus a soldier on veteran furlough is not in pensionable service the moment his command arrives at the place designated as its rendezvous at the expiration of the furlough.

These furloughs were granted as a special inducement to those who had faithfully served two years and whose service the Government desired so much for a longer period than that originally contracted for.

The soldier in question had served more than two years of his original enlistment, went home, and while in the enjoyment of his veteran furlough became exposed to small-pox and died on the very day the same had expired.

There is no question whatever as to claimant's dependence upon the soldier and her needy condition at this time.

The Government, for purposes heretofore stated, having granted furloughs to those who had seen long field service, and by subsequent action having recognized the same, in part, at least, as of pensionable service, your committee are of the opinion that any disability incurred during the entire period of such veteran furlough should be pensionable, unless the same is shown to be due to gross carelessness or improper conduct on the part of the furloughed soldier. Such is not shown in this case, and the committee, being fully satisfied of the dependence of this aged claimant, therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "Baberick" wherever the same may appear in the bill and the title thereof, and inserting therein instead the word "Barberick."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN SWEENEY.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 10947) for the relief of John Sweeney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place the name of John Sweeney, late a seaman in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10947) for the relief of John Sweeney, having examined the same, submit the following report:

John Sweeney was one of four brothers who enlisted in February, 1862, in the Navy and served on the Mississippi and in the Gulf. He remained in service until July, 1864. On April 14, 1886, he was examined by a board of pension examiners at Toledo, Ohio, in which he claimed that about the last of June or beginning of July, 1862, he was injured by falling through a temporary bridge constructed by the Union forces when he was ashore near Vicksburg on picket duty. He claimed the injury was not considered serious at the time, but that about a year later his leg (the right one) broke open back of the place of the injury (the shin) and continued to break out and heal alternately for several months, when it healed. From that time to this he has suffered a great deal of pain, and the limb is very weak, so as to interfere with his work. He is falling into old age: his means of livelihood is manual labor, and what, when he was younger, was a slight inconvenience, is now a serious impediment to his exertions.

The board find that the tibia of right leg was injured; they find the scars of the abscesses occasioned by the breaking out, and that he is disabled by the wound. The claim was rejected for want of testimony; but Sweeney shows that he has made search and that he can not find a single man or officer who served with him on the Wm. Bacon, the mortar-boat he was attached to at the time of the injury. This is not surprising, as the number of men was small, and, being sailors, they are scattered, if, indeed, many of them are alive.

Sweeney is a man of the best reputation, and only seeks this relief because, in his declining years, his injuries begin to assert themselves with greater vigor and to incapacitate him to a greater extent.

We recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY E. SAWYER.

Mr. CLARK. I call up the bill (H. R. 9776) for the relief of Nancy E. Sawyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy E. Sawyer, widow of the late James F. Sawyer, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9776) for the relief of Nancy E. Sawyer, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Nancy E. Sawyer is the widow of James F. Sawyer, who served as private of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, from March 28, 1864, until July 18, 1865. He received a gunshot wound of neck in action near Savannah, Ga., January 24, 1865. The wound was 3½ inches below the base of the skull, causing severe stiffness of neck and pain in spine, shoulders, arms, and top of head. Soldier applied for pension on account of this wound, but his claim was rejected upon a very superficial examination by a single surgeon, who failed to discover any disability. Subsequently another examination by a board of surgeons was ordered, but the soldier became unable to travel and soon thereafter died.

The widow's claim has been rejected on the ground that the fatal disease is not shown to be a result of the military service.

There are on file in the case a number of affidavits of neighbors and fellow-workmen, showing beyond any reasonable doubt that the wound of neck was of a more serious character than it appeared to the examining surgeon. From their statements it appears that by reason of the disability from the same, soldier was employed at the lightest work; that he constantly complained of the wound, and that he gradually failed in health, until about a year prior to his death he was compelled to abandon work entirely.

Rev. O. W. Babcock testifies to an intimate acquaintance with Sawyer from 1876 to 1880; that during that period his attacks of illness became more frequent year by year, and more severe with each succeeding attack, producing severe pain in his head and neck and down his back, and numbness of the extremities.

Dr. Jonathan Gibbs, late assistant surgeon Forty-ninth Wisconsin Volunteers, testifies that he knew the soldier before his enlistment; was then a strong, healthy man; was much broken down in health at discharge in consequence of a gunshot wound of neck. Soldier suffered very much pain in the locality of the wound, which gradually increased in severity until he became entirely incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, and at last was confined to his bed and died of enervation and a low form of fever and general prostration, which condition was, in affiant's opinion, induced by the slow but certain influence of the wound of neck.

Dr. R. L. Cook, late surgeon Eleventh Maine Volunteers, testifies that he became acquainted with the soldier in 1869, and was his medical adviser from that time until his death. That during this entire period soldier was a sufferer from the effects of a gunshot wound of neck; that his sufferings increased from year to year until the constant and severe pain in locality of wound prevented sleep, impaired the nervous system, followed by indigestion, loss of strength, feeble circulation of blood, and finally a typhoid condition, at which time he was obliged to lie in bed on his right side, any other position producing intense pain in head and neck. This constant lying in one position in a short time produced hypostatic hyperæmia, all the tissues of the right side being much congested, particularly the right lung, which condition occurred about sixteen hours before death. The remote and also the immediate cause of the soldier's death was, in affiant's opinion, the wound of neck received in the service of the United States.

Had the soldier had the advantage of a more thorough medical examination the widow undoubtedly could have established her claim upon the evidence on file.

In the opinion of your committee the evidence clearly connects the soldier's death cause with his service, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MICAH FRENCH.

Mr. CONGER. I call up the bill (H. R. 4737) granting a pension to Micah French.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 a month, the name of Micah French, formerly a private in Capt. S. Clark's company, New York Militia, of the war of 1812; the pension hereby granted to be in lieu of all other pensions.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4737) granting an increase of pension to Micah French, have considered the same and report as follows:

Micah French was a soldier for sixty days in Captain Clark's company, New York Militia, war of 1812. He is in receipt of a pension of $8 per month as a survivor thereof and by reason of a bullet wound of arm received in the battle of Queenstown, Canada, and still carries the ball in his arm. He is ninety-five years of age, in poor circumstances financially, lame, and nearly blind.

In similar cases your committee have reported favorably bills granting increases to $30 per month.

They are of the opinion that relief should be granted in this case to render more comfortable the last years of the old veteran's life, and therefore report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty," in line 4, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SARAH R. BLEECKER.

Mr. CRAIN. I call up the bill (H. R. 6339) for increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah R. Bleecker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Sarah R. Bleecker, widow of John V. B. Bleecker, deceased, late a paymaster in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by law.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6339) for increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah R. Bleecker, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report as follows:

The petitioner is the widow of John V. B. Bleecker, late paymaster in the Navy.

The following is an abstract of his services, commissioned purser in Navy January 16, 1847:

"March 13, 1847.—To the steamer Union.
"May 25, 1847.—Detached and settle accounts.
"July 16, 1847.—To the Relief.
"August 11, 1848.—Detached and settle accounts.
"July 7, 1849.—To the Vandalia.
"October 12, 1852.—Detached and settle accounts.
"June 25, 1853.—To the Decatur.
"September 21, 1853.—Transferred to the Dale.
"January 17, 1856.—Detached from Dale and settle accounts.
"April 1, 1856.—To receiving-ship at Boston.
"April 30, 1858.—Detached and to the Maced nian, 15th May.
"July 14, 1860.—Detached and settle acconnts.
"September 1, 1860.—To the navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.
"August 8, 1863.—Detached October 1 and wait orders.
"October 3, 1863.—To the East Gulf squadron, as fleet paymaster.
"May 20, 1864.—Detached and wait orders.
"June 8, 1864.—To Mississippi squadron, as purchasing paymaster.
"Died at New York, November 8, 1864.
"Total sea service, nine years, ten months, twenty days.
"Total shore duty, five years, four months."

He was at the request of Admiral D. D. Porter, commanding the Mississippi squadron, ordered to duty as purchasing paymaster of that squadron June 8, 1864, and entered upon that duty at Mound City about July 1, 1864. When he received these orders he was just recovering from a severe attack of illness, incurred by long and arduous service as fleet paymaster in the Gulf squadron. He did not ask for leave, but carried out orders. He remained on duty at Mound City, Ill., until the last of October the same year. At that time he was so ill with typhoid fever that he was sent to his home in New York City, where he died on the 8th of November, 1864, three days after, of the disease last mentioned.

His entire record from his entry into the naval service in 1847 is the best.

His widow is poor and old, sixty years, with a large family dependent upon her for a living. She had for a time a position as clerk in one of the Government Departments, but by reason of failing health and increasing years she was, several years ago, compelled to resign.

The letters of many distinguished officers who knew and served with Commander Bleecker, recommending the increase asked for, are in the hands of the committee. These officers all testify to the high character of the officer, the great and arduous services he rendered, the destitute condition of the widow and family, and, also, of the worth and good character of the whole family.

In view of the above stated facts and also the precedents set by this committee, it is recommended, that as a matter of simple justice, the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. CRAIN. I trust the gentleman will withhold his objection and let this bill be reported to the House as other bills of a similar character have been reported.

Mr. CHEADLE. I am perfectly willing that it may be laid aside to be reported to the House with the understanding that the previous question shall be ordered and that the bill shall be voted upon in a full House after thirty minutes' debate—fifteen minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. LOUISE M. HUMPHREY.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call up the bill (H. R. 11333) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Humphrey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Louisa M. Humphrey on the pension-roll of the United States, she being the widow of the late Col. George Humphrey, of the Eighty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, and who was formerly a lieutenant in the Mexican war, and that she be allowed the same rate of pension her husband was drawing at his death, namely, $30 per month, and that it date back to the time of the soldier's death, which was in 1886.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11333) granting a pension to Mrs. Louise Humphrey, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Col. George Humphrey, who was a soldier in the Mexican war, and also served with distinction in the war of 1861–'65. At the battle of Stone River he received a gunshot wound of right shoulder, for which at the time of his death he was receiving a pension. The wound continued to cause him a great deal of trouble until some eight years afterwards, in 1871, the ball, which it was found was still in his shoulder, was removed. At the time of its removal two ounces of sero-purulent pus escaped from the cavity which contained the ball. About the 9th of June, 1886, while ascending a stairway, he made a misstep and fell upon the landing, sustaining a simple fracture. It was properly attended to, but owing to the debilitated condition of his system blood poisoning set in, from the effects of which he died August 4, 1886.

The widow made application for pension, alleging that the death of her husband was directly traceable to the gunshot wound received in the Army at the battle of Stone River. The claim was rejected on the ground that the soldier's death from accidental fracture of right leg, followed by pyæmia, can not be considered a result in any way of the wound for which he was pensioned or be otherwise charged to his service.

Dr. J. L. Gregg, late surgeon of the Eighty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, testifies—

"That he made an incision in the back of said George Humphrey and removed therefrom a round leaden ball of probably an ounce in weight, which was found in an abscess containing about 2 ounces of unhealthy pus. He also states that he is of the opinion that the gunshot wound and the inflammatory suppuration and disease of bone caused thereby resulted in the production of a chronic form of blood poisoning, depression of vitality, nervous debility, and impairment of recuperative powers to such an extent that his power of recovering from injuries not ordinarily of a dangerous character was seriously impaired, and that his chances for recovering from the effects of acute diseases or severe injuries, though not in themselves ordinarily dangerous to life, were very greatly impaired."

Dr. W. H. Myers, an eminent physician of Fort Wayne, after giving a full history of the case, says:

"I believe that the pathological lesions existing at the time of death were clearly traceable to the broken-down condition of the general health, and notably of the nervous system, due to the gunshot wound received long anteriorly. I believe that the accidental fall occurred owing to the partial paresis of the upper extremity and muscular atrophy of the fractured limb, for when the muscles of a part waste all its other tissues, nerves, vessels, and bones suffer ultimately from impaired blood supply."

Mr. E. E. Clark, special examiner, who made a special examination of the case, in closing his report says:

"From the evidence I am of the opinion that the theory of Dr. Myers in regard to this case is correct and that the claim should be admitted. Two physicians who were personally acquainted with the deceased soldier and who administered professionally to him after he received the gunshot wound and the injury that resulted in his death testify that it is their professional opinion that his death resulted from the gunshot wound."

It is a mere matter of professional opinion, and as the physicians who attended him had opportunities of obtaining correct information that the medical referee had not, the committee believe the claimant ought to have the benefit of the doubt, and we therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Wherever the name "Louisa" occurs, strike out and insert "Louise M." so that the name will read "Mrs. Louise M. Humphrey;" also strike out, in line 7, all after the word "volunteers" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES MONOHAN.

Mr. FELTON. I call up the bill (H. R. 5919) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monahan, deceased, late a private in Company A, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to pay said child, or to his guardian, the remaining pension that he would have received had his name not been stricken from the roll.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5919) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan deceased, submit the following report;

James Monohan is the son of Richard Monohan, who enlisted in Company A,

One hundred and eighty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, January 16, 1864; was discharged August 15, 1865, and died June 12, 1871.

Pension was allowed this claimant, but his name was dropped from the rolls on the ground that the death cause of the soldier was not due to his service. We quote the following evidence in reference to that point:

Dr. Pfeiffer, late assistant surgeon One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment, testifies:

"The soldier was attended by him at various times during the latter part of 1864 for rheumatism, intermittent fever, and incipient consumption. It is supposed that camp and guard duty had a severe effect on his somewhat weak constitution and finally developed consumption, of which he died."

D. Bossler, late lieutenant Company A, testifies—

"About March, 1864, at Camp Provost, Philadelphia, the soldier, from exposure on guard duty in stormy weather, contracted a fever and other diseases, and was unfitted for active duty. He also had cold and inflammation of the eyes. About January, 1865, he was relieved from duty and detailed as regimental tailor by reason of his weak and broken-down constitution."

Dr. Robert Burns testifies—

"He saw the soldier two or three times in May, 1871, in a very reduced state and beyond the reach of medical improvement; also at his house, June 1, 1871, visited him three times until his death. Disease was pulmonary consumption, induced by lingering illness contracted in service; that he died June 12, 1871, of said disease. While under his treatment he was in a hopeless state, suffering from destroying oppressions and unable to take any nourishment; that while he was in the Army he had intermittent fever, followed by pneumonia, from which time his constitution was broken down. He was well acquainted with soldier for twenty years prior to death and saw him often after his discharge, and soldier never regained his former health. His physical powers seemed to be broken up. Notwithstanding this he continued to work to keep a home for his child and a sister. He was a temperate and worthy man, and the benevolence of the Government would be well bestowed on his son. He saw soldier occasionally from the date of his discharge to date of death, and during all of the time he was in a sure decline with consumption of the lungs. He had a cough and expectoration, and gradual loss of flesh and strength from discharge to death."

Your committee have examined this case with great care, and have been unable to see why the name of James Monohan was dropped from the pension-roll. In their opinion the father, Richard Monohan, died of disease contracted in the service. The evidence seems to them entirely satisfactory as to this point, and they therefore recommend with unanimity and very heartily the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMELIA MUMM.

Mr. FORAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 10494) granting a pension to Emelia Mumm.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emelia Mumm, widow of Nicholas Mumm, late a private in Company G, Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month from the 12th day of December, 1881.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10494) granting a pension to Emelia Mumm, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the widow of Nicholas Mumm, late of Company G, Fifteenth New York Artillery. Her first husband was shot in the rifle-pits at Petersburgh in 1864, and as his widow she drew a pension for about one and one-half years, when she married Nicholas Mumm, who died in 1881 of rheumatism and disease of the heart. Her application for pension as his widow was rejected on the ground of "no record" and want of evidence of incurrence.

There is an abundance of evidence proving that after two years of service he came out of the Army badly disabled by rheumatism and heart disease; that he continued in this condition until his death, at no time being able to perform one-fourth of the labor of an able-bodied man.

Your committee are forced to the conclusion that the death of the soldier was the result of his military service, but aside from that, and making the case still stronger, is the fact that her first husband was killed in action. The remarriage of the widow saved the Government the pension she would otherwise have been entitled to, and it seems but simple justice to again place on the pension-roll the widow of these two soldiers, one of whom fell in action, and the other doubtless lost his life from disabilities contracted in the service.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out all after the word "Artillery," in line 7.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

P. F. JONTE.

Mr. FULLER. I call up the bill (H. R. 10073) granting a pension to P. F. Jonte.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of P. F. Jonte, late a member of Company A, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, of Knoxville, Iowa, and pay him a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10073) granting a pension to P. F. Jonte, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Peter F. Jonte first enlisted for one year September 30, 1861, in Company A, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was discharged therefrom November 10, 1862. He again entered the service in Company D, Fourth Battalion Ohio Cavalry, for six months on August 1, 1863, and was finally mustered out March 4, 1864.

His claim for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that there is no record of the alleged disabilities, chronic diarrhea, piles, and disease of skin, and claimant has declared his inability to furnish medical evidence of treatment therefor during service or at discharge.

Capt. J. L. Hill testifies that claimant was taken sick with camp diarrhea about May or June, 1862, and was sent home on furlough.

Addison H. Maddox, comrade and messmate, also testifies that Jonte was attacked with diarrhea in May, 1862, and subsequently with typhoid fever, resulting in piles and debility.

There is also on file a letter written by the claimant from the hospital at New Creek Station, Va., to a neighbor, under date of June 14, 1862, in which he states that he suffers from diarrhea and is too sick to write much.

Dr. B. D. Granger testifies that his records show treatment of claimant June 28, July 1 and 6, 1862, but the nature of the disease for which treated is not now known to affiant. This refers to treatment while home on furlough from hospital.

Claimant did not employ a physician for some years after his discharge, but used different kinds of patent medicines. Frequent changes of residence and almost continuous travel as agent for sewing-machines, pumps, etc., during the greater part of the time since discharge, make it difficult for him to procure evidence satisfactory to the Department as to the extent of the disability from alleged causes during that period.

Dr. J. C. Tribbet, under date of July 21, 1884, testifies that he has treated Jonte for the last five or six years for piles and erythema.

Medical examinations show the existence of piles and disease of skin.

After careful examination of all the evidence in the case, your committee are of opinion that the origin of chronic diarrhea and piles in the service is clearly established, and that pension therefor should be allowed. The existence of disease of skin is not shown soon enough after the service to connect it with the same, and therefore no recommendation is made regarding this disability.

The committee return the bill and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN B. ROSS.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call up the bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations ot the pension laws, the name of John B. Ross, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth fully the facts in this case and is adopted, with the recommendation that the bill pass.

[Senate Report No. 1279, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant under this bill, John B. Ross, enlisted in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers, August 22, 1862, and was discharged March 23, 1863, his service covering a period of seven months. On November 23, 1876, he made application for a pension, alleging that he contracted a spinal affection in the fall of 1862, caused by exposure and hard marching from Fort Scott, Kans., to Cane Hill, Ark.

He was discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability, in which it is stated he is incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of "spinal disease of long standing, existing previous to his enlistment. He was unable to walk upright, and has done no duty since the middle of November, 1862. He is entirely unfit for the service in my opinion." (Signed) "W. H. Grimes, surgeon."

In support of this claim he presents the following testimony as to prior soundness:

Dr. Charles Williamson (filed December 27, 1881): That he has known the claimant for twenty years; was his family physician, and supposed him to be a sound man prior to his enlisment; had never given him any treatment up to that time.

J. O. Peebler was well acquainted with claimant since 1855; * * * knew him when he enlisted; he was a healthy man; never heard that he was unsound in any way; if he had been so affiant would have known it, for he saw him often.

S. J. Duncan and B. F. Sanders corroborate the above fully, having an acquaintance of twenty-four years.

Maj. C. A. Woodworth, comrade, "knew claimant three years before his enlistment, and that he was an able-bodied man."

Capt. P. H. McNamara, of Company K, Thirteenth Kansas, same as above, with an acquaintance of six years with claimant prior to enlistment, and he was then a sound, able-bodied man.

J. J. Locker and D. E. Merwin have known claimant since 1859. Prior to his enlistment he was not affected with any spinal disease. They were intimate with him and his family and would have certainly known if claimant had any disease.

That as to condition during service, Major Woodworth swears that claimant was sick in the regimental hospital and other places during the fall of 1862, and was discharged for disability.

Capt. P. H. McNamara swears that claimant contracted a fever at Cane Hill, Arkansas, in October or November, 1862, which resulted in an affection of the head and spine; he was finally discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability. Has personal knowledge; was present with command.

Surgeon Grimes, who gave the certificate of disability, is reported on the books as dead.

Since discharged, Dr. Williamson swears that he has treated claimant at different times "for rheumatism of the lumbar muscles. * * * A portion of the time he was compelled to use a cane in walking. Has not treated him in thirteen years."

J. J. Locker and D. E. Merwin swear that they have known the claimant since 1859; that he has been affected with spinal disease ever since his return from the Army; * * * he has been greatly disabled for manual labor.

Dr. J. C. Birdsell swears he has known claimant nineteen years; during first eight years of his acquaintance saw him almost every day, and claimant constantly complained of spinal affection, which he said he contracted in the Army; affiant has not treated claimant, but knows, from observation, he has been complaining of spinal trouble all the time.

T. J. C. Duncan has known claimant for twenty-six years; lived within 300 yards of him for eight years immediately after his discharge; saw him brought home from the Army; he was not able to sit up; saw him almost every day; the trouble was in his back; has worked for claimant, but never knew him to do a day's work since his discharge; has seen him only about once a year for five or six years; he seems most of the time disabled from work.

John Ramsay and Gregory Ashe have known claimant for twenty-six years; lived near him and met him, on an average, three times a week until five years ago (1878); they have never known him to be able to perform any manual labor since his discharge.

Daniel Chaney and L. B. Keifer, March, 1883, swear they have known claimant for four or five years. He has been so lame in his back he could hardly walk at times; has been unable to do any labor for weeks together.

Dr. E. H. Cowgill has known claimant four years; his family physician. He suffers almost continual spinal trouble, at times greatly aggravated, and rendering him entirely unfit to labor at all.

Dr. Freeman Thompson has known claimant for three years. "Has treated him since August, 1881, for partial paralysis of right side, specially the right foot, which is the result of spinal anemia. He is in that condition he can not do any hard labor, and his right side troubles him more or less all the time. He is liable to be taken with paralysis of this side at any time, so as to entirely disable him."

The credibility and reliability of all the foregoing affiants clearly established.

The first examiner rates the disability at one-half from 1863 to 1883. The reviewer concludes that, "if claimant could prove his alleged disability due to the service, he would be entitled to about one-fourth pension since discharge."

The examining surgeon at Ottawa, Kans., rates him at one-half total, but recommends an examination by a board of examining surgeons, and accordingly he was examined by the board at Topeka, Kans., who rate him at one-fourth total.

The Pension Office, however, on November 22, 1877, rejects the claim on the ground "that the record shows that the alleged disease of spine existed prior to enlistment."

The case was reopened in 1881, and new testimony was filed tending to show that the claimant was sound at and prior to his entering the Army, and the origin of his disease in the service.

The claim was specially examined in the field during the years 1883 and 1884, and Special Examiner George W. McKean, under date of November 23, 1883, concludes "that the claimant did not contract the alleged disability in the service, but was so affected prior to his enlistment, and recommends further examination."

In the testimony taken by Mr. McKean is that of the claimant, in which the claimant admits that two or three years prior to his enlistment he "had a spell of lung fever;" also in 1855 he got overheated, which affected him so that he was not able to stand anything for several years; also in the same year, 1855, he strained his back (a stitch) "by trying to roll or pry out a very heavy log," from which he was laid up for two or three days, and that it hurt him off and on for two or three years. * * * The claimant seems to be an honest and truthful man, and he bears a good reputation where he resides.

Mr. C. W. Akey, special examiner, under date of January 9, 1884, is of the opinion the claim should be rejected, for the reason that the claimant stated that prior to his enlistment he had been overheated (probably sunstroke) which, in his opinion (Akey's), would be likely to produce spinal or cerebral trouble, and that he admits he hurt his back in 1855, and he is also of the opinion that the testimony of Dr. Charles Williamson corroborates the certificate of disability on which he was discharged from the Army.

Dr. Williamson, in his statement before the special examiner, swears that he "never prescribed for claimant prior to his enlistment, but remembers when he enlisted it was a query what he would do in the service. He was regarded as a lazy man who did but little work, but believes claimant never claimed to be a sound man and was not surprised to hear he was home out of the service. * * * Does not know whether claimant contracted any disease while in the service or not, and was surprised when he heard he had applied for a pension."

The examiner concludes: "The claim should be rejected without further examination."

E. F. Rogers, special examiner, under date of March 10, 1884, concludes the claim has no merit, because some of the witnesses swear positively that "he did complain of his back before enlisting;" and the claim was accordingly again rejected, or, in the language of the Commissioner, "the former action of rejection was adhered to May 1, 1884."

From this action an appeal was taken April 8, 1885, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, who sustained the Commissioner of Pensions and dismissed the appeal. The Secretary says:

"The evidence relied on by the appellant to overturn said certificate of disability is of a negative character, and merely shows, if anything, that the disability of appellant had been first brought to the attention of the witnesses during his military service, and is wholly incompetent to rebut the statements of the record or to independently establish origin in the service, when considered in connection with the adverse testimony above mentioned."

Your committee feel compelled to differ with the conclusions of the Commissioner of Pensions and the honorable Secretary who reviewed the case. They regard the testimony as to prior soundness, submitted by the claimant, as positive and conclusive, and in the most material allegations unshaken by anything developed by the special examiners, with the possible exception of the testimony of Dr. Charles Williamson, which in a certain sense seems irreconcilable.

The witnesses who testify to the prior soundness of the claimant are all vouched for as being reliable men in their respective communities, and the claimant himself has impressed himself upon the mind of the special examiner as a truthful man.

Your committee are of the opinion that this is a case where creditable neighbors and physicians are much better judges to the extent of the disability than any examining surgeon, who only sees the claimant a few minutes, can possibly be. They therefore feel that this is a proper case for Congressional approval, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

Mr. GIFFORD. I call up the bill (H. R. 2261) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, in lieu of the pension which he now receives, to the sum of $12 per month for wound in side, and such additional amount per month as he may now, or may hereafter, be allowed by law for the loss of an arm near the shoulder, said increase to take effect from the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The claimant in this case is receiving a pension of $12 per month for loss of arm near the shoulder and a severe gunshot wound of the side. This act was passed before the general law was enacted giving a pension of $45 for the loss of arm at or near the shoulder. The rate having been fixed at $42, the Pension Office has no power to increase it. The Pension Office rate the wound in the side at $12 per month. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA GIDDINGS.

Mr. GROUT. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4101) granting a pension to Martha Giddings, formerly Martha Priest.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to put upon the pension-roll the name of Martha Giddings, formerly Martha Priest, widow of Nathaniel Priest, of Company H, Fourteenth Vermont Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Claimant was the widow of Nathaniel Priest, private in Company H, Fourteenth Vermont Volunteers. Soldier served during the war and died very shortly after his return from diseases contracted in the service. His widow was pensioned, which pension she continued to draw until the date of her re-marriage. This marriage was brought about by false representations, was an unfortunate one in every respect, and entailed upon claimant much suffering and hardship. Procuring a divorce she made application to the Pension Office for restoration to the rolls, which was denied, accompanied by the suggestion from the Commissioner of Pensions that relief could only come through the passage of a special act.

It appears in evidence that the claimant is in very delicate health and destitute circumstances, and inasmuch as the soldier directly sacrificed his life in the service of his country your committee are of opinion that it is proper for Congress to grant the desired relief, and accordingly report the bill back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM E. TAYLOR.

Mr. HALL. I call up the bill (S. 2836) granting a pension to William E. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William E. Taylor, of Missouri, late a member of Company B, Sixtieth Missouri Enrolled Militia.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which this committee adopt as their own, and likewise recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"The claimant filed his declaration May 2, 1881, stating that he was a private in Company B, Sixtieth Missouri Militia Cavalry, and that while in the service and in the line of duty at the battle of Leesville, Mo., he incurred an injury to his eyesight by reason of the tube blowing out of his gun, causing partial blindness. The claim was rejected June 19, 1884, on the ground that the 'enrolled militia was a State organization, and disabilities incurred therein are not pensionable under existing law.'

"The evidence filed in the Pension Bureau, both as to the fact and of the disability existing as claimed in the affidavit of the claimant, and as to its incurrence in the manner set forth by the claimant, fully sustain the affidavit of the claimant. In addition to this evidence the claimant has filed with the committee testimony sustaining the claim set out in his application.

"The only objection that could be urged against granting this pension is the technical one suggested by the Pension Bureau. It has, however, been the uniform policy of Congress to place the soldiers who served in the enrolled militia of a State upon the same footing with soldiers of the same State regularly enlisted in the service of the United States who incurred disabilities in defending the Union during the war of the rebellion. Any other rule would be unjust and inequitable and would draw a distinction between men performing the same service and having the same object in view and who frequently accomplished as much good in promoting the cause of the Union. In harmony, therefore, with the numerous precedents set by Congress, the facts in this case having been fully proven, the committee is of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH HOLMES.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9388) to increase the pension of Joseph Holmes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Joseph Holmes, of Company E, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Claimant received a bullet wound in the head at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, 1864, which fractured the skull. Epilepsy and partial paralysis resulted, producing a condition of almost complete physical wreck. In the hope of relief Dr. Henry Janes, of Waterbury, Vt., a distinguished army surgeon, performed the operation of trepanning in January, 1866, removing a triangular piece of bone from the skull. The operation resulted in almost complete relief, so far as the epileptic attacks were concerned, and for a time soldier's health was greatly improved. Of late years, however, he has been rapidly failing, until now he is unable to do manual labor, being partially paralyzed and unable to talk with distinctness or to transact business. A mass of both medical and lay testimony has been filed with your committee on this point, and it is indisputable that the disabilities are entirely due to the wound received in the service.

Soldier is now receiving $30 per month, and the Pension Office declines to increase it to $50, the next highest rate, on the ground that he does not constantly require the assistance of another person. There is some testimony on file to the effect that he is so completely wrecked, both physically and mentally, as to require constant attendance, but it is probable that a small portion of the time he is able to care for himself. The case is certainly one of exceptional merit, and claimant is clearly entitled to a higher rate of pension than he is now receiving.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 6, and substituting therefor the word "forty-five," and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee in the last paragraph of the report was read, and adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RACHEL A. SINKINSON.

Mr. HIRES. I call up the bill (S. 1101) granting a pension to Rachel A. Sinkinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Rachel A. Sinkinson, widow of Robert Sinkinson, late a private in Company K, Eighty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, have submitted the following report:

"The claimant's husband served in Company K, Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, from September 25, 1861, to July 15, 1862, when he was discharged for disability. In 1863 he applied for a pension, alleging chronic rheumatism and general debility. His claim was finally allowed at the rate of $4 per month from date of discharge to date of death, and the sum paid to his widow. After the soldier's death the claimant applied for a widow's pension, but the claim was rejected on the ground that the soldier died of cancer of the stomach, which complaint could not be traced to his military service, and she therefore appeals to Congress for a special act in her behalf.

"The evidence shows that from the time of the soldier's discharge for disability until his death he was unable to work at his trade of molder, or even to do lighter work, and that his wife was compelled to provide for the family by taking in sewing. Although cancer of the stomach was pronounced the immediate cause of death, the physician testified that in addition to this complaint he found him suffering from a severe case of chronic diarrhea, contracted in the service. The soldier was also treated in the hospital for typhoid fever during service, and spent several months in the hospital after his discharge. The soldier's health was good before enlisting, but he was returned to his family a physical wreck, and remained so until he died.

"It may, therefore, be rationally inferred that the soldier's disability and death were in some measure due to his service, and the committee therefore recommend that the bill be passed."

Your committee have carefully examined the files of the Pension Office, and find the facts as set forth in the foregoing report.

Cancer is necessarily of too obscure origin to connect it with the military service under the strict terms of the general pension laws in any case. Therefore, Congress must come to the relief in this class of cases, if there is a reasonable presumption of its connection with one or more diseases shown to have been contracted in the service. In the case under consideration it is clearly shown that the soldier was broken down in health, at discharge, from the effects of typhoid fever, rheumatism, and diarrhea, and that he grew worse until November 26, 1871, when he died of cancer of stomach.

This condition seems to warrant the presumption that the fatal disease originated in the service, and therefore your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN WALLACE.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9759) granting a pension to John Wallace.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Wallace, father of Robert Wallace, deceased, late of Company C, Ninety-third Regiment of New York Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

John Wallace is the father of Robert Wallace, who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness while serving in Compnny C, Ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteers. Another son of the claimant contracted disease while in the Army, and died of the same after discharge.

The father's claim has been rejected on the ground of non-dependence upon the son at time of the latter's death in the service.

It is admitted by the claimant that at date of the son's death, and for some years thereafter, he was able-bodied and supported himself and family (the mother of the soldier having died in 1858, out of the proceeds of a farm) of which he was the owner and labor performed for his neighbors. The farm in question consisted of 312 acres of mountain land, which was purchased some years before the war at $1 per acre, and which was finally paid for by the contributions of the son and the back pay and bounty received by the claimant after the son's death.

The sons, before their enlistment, helped to improve the place, and it was principally through their efforts in that direction that the father was enabled to realize sufficient by its cultivation for the maintenance of the family.

Since 1876 claimant has been an invalid, and, at the age of seventy-six years, is no longer able to gain a subsistence by manual labor. Deprived of the assistance of his sons, the expenses of carrying on the place increased, and although as industrious as advancing age and disability would permit, the homestead became incumbered more and more, until, in 1879, it passed out of claimant's possession. The amount received therefor was about $1,100, nearly all of which went to satisfy the creditors.

While the claim was properly rejected by the Pension Office because of claimant's ability to maintain himself by manual labor, yet his advanced age and present needy condition would seem sufficient ground for favorable action on the part of Congress, and therefore your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTE TAYLOR.

Mr. HUNTER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9176) granting a pension to Charlotte Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Charlotte Taylor, widow of Thomas P. Taylor, late a private of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

In the following letter of the Adjutant-General of the Army will be found the military record of claimant's husband:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, April 18, 1884.

"Thomas P. Taylor, a private of Company C, Twelfth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, was enrolled on the 3d day of October, 1861, at Camp Hoskins, Kentucky, for three years, and is reported on muster-roll from enrollment to December 31, 1861, present; January and February, 1862, present, with remark, 'was absent, sick, rejoined company;' March and April, 1862, present; May and June, 1862, absent, sick; same to August 31, 1862. Roll to December 31, 1862, four months' muster, present; January and February, 1863, absent, sick. Company muster-out roll dated February 3, 1865, reports him discharged by order of Colonel Munday, March 16, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability."

Claimant filed an application for pension on the 11th day of February, 1884, and alleged in her declaration that the soldier died on the 7th day of April, 1871, of disease contracted in the line of duty and in the military service of the United States; but the claim was rejected on the 13th day of October, 1884, on the grounds that the soldier's death was caused by the fall from his horse in 1871, and not shown to have been the result of any disease or injury contracted while in the United States service.

It is shown by the proof on file in this case that the soldier was unfit for any kind of active manual labor from discharge to the day of his death; that he was subject to frequent attacks of dizziness, with a sensation of fullness in the chest, in the Army and since his discharge; that he could not endure exposure to the sun's rays or follow any pursuit requiring much physical exertion. It was this condition of the system which compelled him to accept a contract to carry the mail on horseback between Albany and Columbia, Ky., and while on a trip on this route, on the 7th day of April, 1871, near Creelsborough, he was seized with one of she paroxysms of dizziness referred to, and fell from his horse, dying soon thereafter.

There is abundant proof to show that the soldier was a sound, healthy man at enlistment; that he contracted the disease in the service; that he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability in consequence; that he always suffered from this disease from discharge; that he was of sober habits, and died from the effects of a paroxysm resulting from his military service.

Your committee are of the opinion that this is a meritorious claim, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. ELLIS.

Mr. JOSEPH. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10694) granting a pension to John W. Ellis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Ellis, of Sierra County, New Mexico, late an Indian scout, in the service of the United States Government in the Territory of New Mexico.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The proposed beneficiary served in Company K, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, from October 25, 1858, to October 25, 1863, during which period he participated in the campaign against the Navajo Indians, and also in the civil war. Upon the recommendations of his officers he received a commission in the First New Mexico Volunteers, and served until the close of the war. Subsequently he was employed as clerk in the quartermaster's department at Forts Bascom, Craig, and McRae, N. Mex. While thus employed at the latter post it became necessary to send troops after a band of Mountain Apaches, which was devastating the country around. Captain Gilmore, commanding the post, placed claimant in charge of seventy men of the Thirty-eighth United States Colored Troops and seventy Mexican spies in pursuit of the Indians. This selection was made because of Ellis's familiarity with the country and knowledge of Indian fighting.

He succeeded in getting on their trail, and on the morning of the fourth day overtook them and opened up the fight at a distance of only 50 yards. At the first fire by the Indians Ellis was wounded, one shot passing through his stomach, about 2 inches on left side of navel, the other entering on right side of windpipe, passing downward and lodging in left shoulder. For these wounds he was treated by Acting Assistant Surgeon William B. Lyon, as shown by the affidavits on file with your committee.

As the law makes no provisions for pensions to civil employés of the Government, no application has been filed in the Pension Office. Congress, however, has in similar cases granted relief, and as the case under consideration is one of particular merit, by reason of long and meritorious service prior to the incurrence of the above-described wounds, your committee unhesitatingly report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE H. JOHNSON.

Mr. KEAN. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 2887) granting a pension to George H. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George H. Johnson, late a seaman in the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, as follows:

"This applicant enlisted in the United States Navy September 7, 1864, and served until August 2, 1865. He alleges that about July, 1865, at Galveston, Tex., he contracted rheumatism from exposure and hardships incident to the service. The claim was rejected on the ground that there was no record evidence of claimant's having contracted the disease in question in the service.

"Allen Goble, who knew claimant intimately long before enlistment, and who served with him upon the United States steam-ship Portsmouth, testifies that before claimant shipped he was a sound man, free from all disease, but that when he saw him soon after his discharge he was severely suffering from rheumatism, and that he has been unable to work much of the time since, and only able to walk about by the use of crutches.

"James E. Dorsett, who shipped at the same time with claimant, at Brooklyn, N. Y., corroborates Goble's testimony as to claimant's soundness at enlistment, and swears that during their voyage to Galveston, where they were transferred on board the Cayuga, they were exposed to the wet; that Johnson was taken sick with rheumatism from such exposure and was treated for the same, and that he, affiant, did part of Johnson's duty, like going aloft, as far as possible; that afterward, when he, affiant, was promoted to ship's yeoman, Johnson used to spend part of his time in affiant's room, and was treated by the assistant surgeon by order of the surgeon; that he has seen Johnson frequently since discharge, and that he has gradually gotten worse and worse, until he is now totally disabled from his rheumatism.

"Dr. Robert Laird testifies that he began treating claimant directly after his discharge for rheumatism; that from 1865 to 1870 he was unable to gain a livelihood one-half of the time on that account; that the disease has gradually encroached upon his strength, until now he is unable to walk without crutches and is incapacitated for work the greater portion of the time. He also testifies that claimant was, before entering the service, a 'hale and hearty' man.

"William Curtis, who has always lived a neighbor to Johnson, testifies that he was before enlistment a perfectly healthy and rugged man, but that when he came home again he was afflicted with rheumatism, which disease gradually became worse, until now he is a 'complete cripple.'

"This case was appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, but that official affirmed the action of the Commissioner of Pensions in rejecting the case.

"There is no adverse evidence whatever in this case, and the mere absence of record evidence is all that prevents it from being technically perfect. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY SOMMERS.

Mr. KELLEY. I call up the bill (H. R. 2839) granting a pension to Henry Sommers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to $30 per month the pension of Henry Sommers, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, for loss of left arm, incurred while an employé of the Quartermaster's Department, under Col. A. J. Donaldson, United States Army.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

This claimant was discharged from the Army on surgeon's certificate of disability June 10, 1862.

It appears from the evidence that, though disabled from active service, he was employed as yard-master in the quartermaster's department at Camp Bradford, Maryland, October 19, 1863, and that a considerable amount of valuable property, consisting of horses, mules, stores, wagons, etc., was under his charge. Adjoining this camp, and separated from it by a board fence, was a "straggler's camp," composed of stragglers picked up along the line of march of the Army. These men had been in the habit of taking the horses out and riding them.

"At this particular time [as he states], between 5 and 6 o'clock, October 19, 1863, I was entirely alone in the quartermaster's camp, and I saw a party of six soldiers from the 'stragglers' camp' come over into the quartermaster's camp. I went to them and told them that they had repeatedly taken the horses out of camp and ridden them, and if I caught any of them trying that again I would have them arrested and turned over to the provost guard. Whereupon one of the men got in my rear and hit me on the head with some hard substance, and as I fell another of them shot me with a pistol, the ball taking effect in my left arm, below the elbow. After eleven days my arm was amputated above the elbow, and in about fourteen months the arm was again amputated, and it is not and never has been well since. I am constantly troubled with a rheumatic pain in the stump of the amputated arm."

James Gallagher testifies to the facts as stated by the claimant.

An honored member of this House, Mr. KELLEY, has informed your committee that he has known this soldier for forty years, and that during all that time he has maintained the highest character for integrity, and also that he is personally cognizant of the facts as stated above. So that there remains no doubt in the minds of your committee as to the entire truth of the claimant's statements.

This badly disabled soldier has hitherto been able to maintain himself comfortably, and has therefore not applied for help from the Government in the protection of whose property he received his injury. Of late years, however, he finds that he is no longer able to support himself and is reluctantly compelled to ask for the pension granted to other soldiers suffering from the same disability.

While he was employed in the Quartermaster's Department, and was not at the time enrolled in the service, yet he had served as a soldier until discharged for disability, which, however, did not prevent him from faithfully performing the duty assigned him by an officer in the United States Army, under whose orders he was acting when he received the injury.

Believing that this claim is an eminently meritorious one, your committee report favorably, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMMANUEL P. STEED.

Mr. KILGORE. I call up the bill (H. R. 10253) granting a pension to Emmanuel P. Steed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Emmanuel P. Steed, late of Company F, of the First Regiment of West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers, and pay him such pension as his disabilities may entitle him to, from and after the 12th day of October, anno Domini 1867.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10253) granting a pension to Emmanuel P. Steed, having considered the same, submit the following report:

Emmanuel P. Steed seeks restoration to the pension-rolls, from which he was dropped October 12, 1867, for the alleged reason that the disability for which he was pensioned originated before his enlistment.

The files in this case are voluminous, and give the testimony of comrades, officers, and neighbors. When he originally applied for pension, in 1865, he filed the affidavits of men who saw him hurt. The circumstances were then fresh in their memories, their testimony pointed, and these comrades, neighbors, and officers do not withdraw any of their original statements made soon after the occurrences they testified to.

The evidence upon which he was dropped from the pension-rolls does not come from persons who were present at his injury, and the applicant testifies to having had money troubles with some one or more of them. Steed's neighbors, some of them his comrades, testify they knew him before the war; that they were boys together, went swimming, played ball, ran races, and indulged in the active pastimes of young men together up to the time of his enlistment. They testify to seeing him naked when swimming, to having slept with him, and know that he had no rupture or defect, that he was active and healthy, that they heard no complaint from him nor saw any sign of rupture or other trouble on or about him prior to his enlistment. One who employed him as mail carrier from 1859 to enlistment, and who often slept and went swimming with him, ran races, played ball, and wrestled with him, testifies strongly to his thorough soundness up to his enlistment

His captain swears that in an engagement with the enemy at Blooming Gap, W. Va., February 14, 1862, while charging, Steed's horse fell upon him, "causing a very severe rupture and obliging his removal in an ambulance, and unfitting him for service." He further swears that applicant—

"Was a good soldier, ever ready to do his duty. I have known him to do duty when I knew he was suffering from the rupture caused by that fall. Our surgeon, Dr. Capehart, said he was ruptured for life. I think if ever a soldier was entitled to pension he surely is."

The applicant's second lieutenant, on June 21, 1865, certifies as an officer that—

"While in the line of duty said Emmanuel P. Steed was thrown from his horse during an engagement at Blooming Gap, W. Va., on the 14th day of February, 1862, and it is my belief that he then received the injuries for which he was discharged, namely, rupture."

On April 7, 1866, Dr. Capehart, the surgeon of Steed's regiment, swears that on said 14th of February, 1862, Steed was brought to him immediately after said action at Blooming Gap for treatment, and that applicant—

"Whilst in discharge of his duties in an engagement with the enemy at or near Blooming Gap, W. Va., on or about February 14, 1862, did receive an injury resulting in inguinal hernia, and that he was brought to me after the close of said action suffering from the ordinary symptoms of said injury. I reduced the hernia and applied a truss, which he continued to wear until he was discharged from the service of the United States in consequnce of this disability, February 9, 1863."

It would seem to your committee that the testimony in the case was absolutely conclusive, and that nothing short of the strongest evidence of fraud, corruption, and collusion could set it aside. It is proper to add here that the records of the War Department state that—

"Steed enlisted August 28, 1861; discharged February 9, 1863, on a certificate of disability because of scrotal hernia; a bad case. This disability has existed since the 14th of February, 1862, occasioned by an injury received by the falling of his horse while in action."

It is hard to understand how this record and testimony came to be set aside and the pensioner dropped from the rolls. From the files it appears that in October, 1867, unsigned statements of three persons were sent to the Pension Office asserting, first, that applicant said that he could get discharged from the service because of rupture. Another purported to say that Steed said before enlistment that he could do no kind of lifting or laborious work because of rupture. The third, to the purport that Steed, before enlistment, frequently complained of rupture. These statements caused a suspension of pension in 1867 in the face of the evidence before shown by your committee and the testimony of Steed's enlisting officer, that he saw Steed examined naked at enlistment, and that he was sound and healthy.

Steed made repeated efforts for reinstatement, but all his efforts were refused, and not until in 1885, upon an appeal from the last of a series of rejections, was a special examination accorded, and nearly twenty years after his suspension, upon the testimony of unfriendly witnesses, he was dropped from the rolls, some of the witnesses being men with whom he had had litigations. One witness was only forty years old, so that he would have been but sixteen years of age at the time of the occurrences concerning which he testified. This testimony runs from 1885 to 1887, and the examiner in his report says that "old witnesses in the case had left that vicinity."

Your committee are of opinion that the suspension of applicant's pension in 1867 was inconsiderate; that its final rejection is not supported by the testimony or warranted by the record or official certificates in the case. He was unquestionably injured in that battle charge, as has been shown, and was properly pensioned therefor. The man showed honorable service, a clear record, prior examination, and approval of his physical fitness at enlistment; his officers and comrades testify to his injury in battle, the surgeon so certifies, and the Government admits the injury in battle, and we see no reason why he should have been dropped from the rolls.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "from and after the 12th day of October, A. D. 1867."

Mr. KILGORE. This is called up at the request of a friend of mine, and under an agreement the amendment should be made.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANTHONY SHAFER.

Mr. LAFFOON called up the bill (H. R. 3512) granting a pension to Anthony Shafer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anthony Shafer, of Liberty, Adams County, Illinois, late private of Company D, One hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions of law.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3512) granting a pension to Anthony Shafer, submit the following report:

This soldier enlisted October 9, 1861, for three years, and was discharged April 1, 1863, for disability.

The report of the Surgeon-General shows that the soldier was discharged from the service April 1, 1863, on account of "loss of hearing." The certificate of disability upon which he was discharged contains the following statements:

"Said soldier is rendered unfit for service on account of deafness and other disability.

"ALEXANDER COMPHER, Captain.

"Loss of hearing; partial loss of hearing existed prior to enlistment, and disease greatly aggravated since enlistment.

"D. C. RUSH, Surgeon."

This statement of the surgeon that there existed partial deafness prior to enlistment furnished the basis of rejection. In looking over the evidence in this case two affidavits and a lengthy statement of this same surgeon, Dr. D. C. Rush, are found, in which he states that there was no noticeable hardness of hearing until after the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., and after he had treated him for malarial fever. From that time on his deafness increased until his discharge. In addition to the statement of his captain, his first lieutenant, D. F. Bugle, states that he considered him perfectly sound at enlistment. There are other affidavits to the same effect.

The soldier is quite deaf now and broken down physically, and the committee think that he should be pensioned, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was recognized in the early part of the evening to call up the bill (H. R. 11113) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, but in view of the fact it seems impossible to secure any consideration of the bill in committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had better wait until we get into the House, where the agreement which he indicates will have to be made.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, I will wait until we get into the House, when I hope we will reach some agreement in the matter.

PHEBE M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. LANDES called up the bill (S. 2711) restoring Phebe McLaughlin to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Phebe McLaughlin, widow of James McLaughlin, late soldier in Company D, Seventy-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

Your committee concur in Senate Report No. 1477, and adopt said report as their own and recommend the passage of said bill.

[Senate Report No. 1477, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2711) for the restoration of Phœbe McLaughlin, widow of James McLaughlin, jr., to the pension-rolls, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The husband of the claimant was a sergeant in Company D, Seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted December 19, 1861, and was discharged July 11, 1865. Filed his application for a pension January 12, 1871. Died November 3, 1871, before the application was acted upon.

The claimant filed her application February 5, 1872, and the same was allowed January 23, 1873. Her name was dropped from the pension-rolls in 1879, on the ground that "the soldier's death was not due to his military service." The claimant immediately made application for restoration, and her claim was finally rejected June 18, 1885.

It appears from the record in this case that intimations were received by the Pension Bureau that the claimant was not entitled to a pension, and upon these suggestions being filed, a special examiner, Mr. Mills, was sent to the vicinity of her home, and upon the evidence taken by him her name was dropped from the rolls. After her application for restoration was filed another examiner, Mr. J. F. Vinal, was sent to Ohio on November 6, 1883, to examine into the case, and in his analysis of the case he uses this expression, referring to the evidence taken by Special Examiner Mills and that taken by himself: "A very different class of witnesses have been found from those on whose testimony the name was dropped from the rolls." The bureau, not being satisfied with the evidence forwarded by him, on August 12, 1884, sent another special examiner, Mr. E. H. La Force, to investigate the case, who, in the conclusion of his report, uses this language:

"From the evidence taken heretofore by Special Examiners Mills and Vinal, I am of the opinion that this claim is of doubtful merit. I would recommend further examination at Zanesville, Ohio."

In accordance with this recommendation, on April 6, 1885, Special Examiner Vinal was sent to Ohio, and in concluding his report to the Pension Bureau he says: "Recommendation, restoration to the pension-rolls." This recommendation is approved by R. A. Durnan, supervising examiner, Columbus, Ohio, district.

Notwithstanding this recommendation and the voluminous testimony taken to sustain the claimant's right to restoration, on the 18th of June, 1885, the action taken by the bureau in 1879, dropping the name of the claimant from the pension-rolls, was affirmed.

Your committee is absolutely at a loss to understand, after an analysis of the testimony and the careful, painstaking report of Special Examiner Vinal, upon what theory the action of the Pension Bureau refusing to the claimant a restoration to the pension-rolls is based. If there was a doubt as to her right, the benefit of that doubt should certainly have been given to her; but under the evidence in the case, taking into consideration the report as to the credibility of the witnesses, the committee is satisfied that there rests no doubt of the right of the claimant to a pension as the widow of James McLaughlin.

Senate bill 2711 is therefore reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass, after amending the same, in line 7, by striking out all after the word "volunteers."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TOWNSHEND having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CARUTH reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

CARTER W. TILLER.

Mr. CARUTH. I called up in committee a bill which it turned out was in the House, and I now ask unanimous consent to have that bill taken up and put upon its passage. It is the bill (H. R. 3681) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Carter W. Tiller, dependent father of G. W. Tiller, late a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3681) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, have carefully considered the same, and respectfully report:

A similar bill passed the Forty-ninth Congress, but was vetoed. Since then proof has accumulated which in the opinion of your committee removes the objections urged by the President.

Your committee do not doubt that Carter W. Tiller was greatly dependent upon his son, George W. Tiller, who was a Union soldier, contracted disease whilst in the service of his country, and died whilst a prisoner of war. Your committee report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

For the information of the House, your committee append hereto the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Forty-ninth Congress on the veto message of the President:

[House Report No. 3200, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, having considered the same, submit the following report, accompanied by said bill, and House report thereon (No. 682), and said message:

There are but two points of objection to the bill raised by the veto message of the President, to wit: First, that of capture and subsequent death of soldier being due to and resulting from his military service in line of duty, and, secondly, that of dependence of the claimant, Carter W. Tiller, on the soldier for support.

The first objection is based on the charge of desertion in the military history of the soldier; the second objection is based on the ability of claimant to provide a competent support, and contributions of soldier to support of his father prior to enlistment or during his military service.

On the first ground of objection the committee find the following state of facts:

On the muster-rolls of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, for the months of September and October, 1863, dated October 31, 1863, and signed by William E. Benson as captain of said company, the following entry, namely, "Deserted September 20, 1863."

The report of Adjutant-General shows company and regiment stationed at Stevenson, Ala., during September, October, and November, 1863.

Report of Adjutant-General, United States Army, copy of which is hereto attached, shows that soldier died at Andersonville, Ga., while a prisoner of war, on 21st day of July, 1864.

Affidavits of William E. Benson, late captain of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; J. A. Weatherford, late second lieutenant of same company and regiment; John Martin, late captain Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and B. H. Bottger, late civil employé of same regiment, copies of which are hereto attached, show the fact and circumstances of capture of soldier.

Whilst the date of the capture is not given the detail and fact are clearly set forth in such a manner as to leave in the mind of the committee no shadow of doubt that the soldier was captured while in line of duty on the 20th day of September, 1863, or soon thereafter, and that he was held as a prisoner of war until July 21, 1864, when he was committed to the hospital at Andersonville, Ga., where he died, as shown by the records of the prison hospital.

The charge of desertion was doubtless entered on the muster-roll of the company because the captain at the time of making the roll had no official information as to the capture of the said soldier. He subsequently testifies that he had "not a personal knowledge of the capture, but was so informed at the time by reliable persons, and has no doubt of the capture and death of said soldier:" and "that said Tiller was sent out on some duty, when he was captured, but he does not now know what duty."

The Commissioner of Pensions seems to have arrived at this conclusion, as the application of the claimant for pension was rejected solely on the ground that claimant was not dependent on soldier for support. The decision is here given, and is as follows:

"Rejected on the ground that claimant was not dependent upon the soldier, as he has supported himself by the income from his occupation since prior to the soldier's death."

On the question of dependence of claimant upon soldier, attention is called to affidavits of Capt. William E. Benson, Lieut. J. A. Weatherford, Capt. John Martin, affidavits of claimant, Dr. J. C. Metcalfe, the official certificate of J. A. Krack, city assessor of Louisville, Ky., and the written statement of Hon. A. S. Willis, a member of the Forty-ninth Congress from Kentucky, copies of which are hereto attached.

Your committee also submit herewith letters from Acting Adjutant-General United States Army, dated June 28, 1886, and July 1, 1886, respectively. Latter is addressed to Hon. W. P. TAULBEE, a member of the committee.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

[House Executive Document No. 288, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Message from the President of the United States, returning, without his approval, House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act to grant a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

The records of the War Department show that George W. Tiller, the son of the claimant, enlisted in a Kentucky regiment on the 8th day of October, 1861, and that he deserted on the 20th day of September, 1863; that he was captured by the Confederates afterwards, but the time and circumstances are not given. On the 21st day of July, 1864, he was admitted to the Andersonville hospital, and died the same day of scorbutis.

The father filed his claim for a pension in 1877, alleging his dependence upon the deceased soldier. It is probably true that the son while in the Army sent money to the claimant, though he appears to have been employed as a policeman in the city of Louisville ever since his son's death, at a fair salary.

The claim thus made was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon his son.

I am entirely satisfied of the correctness of this determination, and if the records presented to me are reliable, I think the fact which appears therefrom, that the death of the soldier occurred ten months after desertion, and had no apparent relation to any service in the Union Army, is conclusive against the claim now made.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

[House Report No. 682, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, having carefully considered same, submit the following report:

George W. Tiller enlisted as private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, October 8, 1861; was captured while in line of duty near Bridgeport, Ala.; was confined at Andersonville, Ga., where he died July 21, 1864. He was sound at enlistment and capture, and is shown by records of War Department to have died of diarrhea. He never was married. His mother died in February, 1864. The claimant and beneficiary of this bill is his father, who filed claim for pension as dependent father December 31, 1877, which was rejected August 19, 1879, "on the ground that claimant was not dependent on the soldier, as he has supported himself by the income from his occupation since prior to the soldier's death."

Claimant is shown by the record to have been a very poor man ever since prior to the enlistment of his son, and never at any time since his son's enlistment to have owned more than $250 in property or other thing; that he was dependent on his son for support at enlistment, and that his said son did contribute to his father's support prior to enlistment and during his service in the Army. The father is also shown to have been a cripple and unable to perform manual labor since 1864, and is now more than sixty-five years old and in very destitute circumstances, and would doubtless have been driven to seeking aid from charity but for the fact that on account of his high character as a man and the esteem in which he was held by the city authorities of Louisville, Ky., he was given a position on the police force of that city, by which he has been able to make for himself a bare support. He is now old and badly afflicted, and your committee think it is the duty of Congress to place his name on the pension-roll.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

[H. R. 4002, in the House of Representatives, January 18, 1886.]

A bill granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Carter W. Tiller, dependent father of G. W. Tiller, late a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from your office of application for pension No. 234784, and to return it herewith, with such information as is furnished by the files of this office. It appears from the rolls on file in this office that George W. Tiller was enrolled on the 8th day of October, 1861, at Louisville, Ky., in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers, to serve three years, or during the war, and mustered into service as a private on the 10th day of October, 1861, at Louisville, Ky., in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, to serve three years or during the war. On the muster-roll of Company A of that regiment, to August 31, 1863. He is reported present, September and October, 1863. Private deserted September 20, 1863. Name not borne on subsequent rolls to April 30, 1865; May and June, 1865. Dropped as a deserter on muster and pay rolls of October, 1863. Received official notice of his dying in prison at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864. Muster-out roll of company makes similar report.

Prisoner of war records show George W. Tillar or Tiller, said company and regiment, admitted to hospital at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864, and died same day of "diarrhea;" capture not given. This report is accepted as referring to George W. Tillar, Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. BENJAMIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from your office of application for pension No. 234784, and to return it herewith, with such information as is furnished by the files of this office.

It appears from the rolls on file in this office that George W. Tiller was private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers. On the muster-roll of Company A of that regiment for the months of September and October, 1863, he is reported "Private. Deserted September 20, 1863." Regimental return for September, 1863, same report at Stevenson, Ala. (the station of the company). No evidence of company or regiment being in action on or about September 20, 1863, nor of command in whi h regiment served during that month. "This man was captured near Bridgeport, Ala., date and circumstances under which captured not stated; was admitted to rebel hospital at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864, and died same day of scorbutis."

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. BENJAMIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

William E. Benson, a resident of the county and State aforesaid, being duly sworn according to law, upon his oath declares that he is the identical W. E. Benson who was a captain of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and that George W. Tiller was a private of the aforesaid organization, and that on or about the 1st day of December, 1863, the said George W. Tiller, while in the line and discharge of duty, was captured by Wheeler's rebel cavalry, at Whiteside Station, Tennessee, and died in prison at Andersonville, Ga. Affiant has not a personal knowledge of the capture, but was so informed at the time by reliable persons, and has no doubt of the fact of the capture and death of said soldier. There is no commissioned officer who can testify from personal knowledge of the capture of said George W. Tiller, as no commissioned officer was with him at the time. Affiant was sent with his company to guard a wagon-train from Stevenson, Ala., to Point Rock, near Huntsville, Ala., and it was during his absence that George W. Tiller was captured. Said Tiller was left in camp and did not accompany him to Point Rock. He was legally excused from going, but he can not now remember the cause of his remaining behind.

Affiant has a knowledge that George W. Tiller sent money to his father twice by Lieut. John A. Weatherford, of said Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and he was a dutiful son to his father and a good soldier. Affiant learned when he came back from Point Rock that said Tiller was sent out on some duty when he was captured, but he does not now know what duty.

Affiant has no interest in the matter.

WILLIAM E. BENSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of June, 1879, and I certify that the party whose name appears signed to the foregoing affidavit is the person he represents himself to be, and a good and credible witness, and that the contents of the foregoing affidavit were duly read and fully made known to affiant before making oath to the same, and that I have no interest in this matter.

WM. E. LORAN,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 27th day of December, 1877, before me, Ch. M. Thurston, clerk of the county court within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared John A. Weatherford, aged forty-eight years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that he was formerly second lieutenant of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry; that he was well and intimately acquainted with Carter W. Tiller, father of George W. Tiller, deceased, late private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. That said George W. Tiller was captured near Stevenson, Ala., and died while a prisoner of war at Andersonville prison, Georgia, on or about July 21, 1864. That said George W. Tiller was in the habit of sending the most of his pay home to his father, Carter W. Tiller, while he was in service. He sent twice by this affiant, $50 each time, and probably oftener, but he sent home to his father by this affiant as much as $100. Said George W. Tiller was a very dutiful son, and did all he could toward the support of his father, Carter W. Tiller.

The mother of said George W. Tiller, deceased; namely, Mrs. Sophronia Tiller, is dead. She died in February, 1864, in Louisville, Ky., and this affiant was one of the pall-bearers at her funeral; that said Carter W. Tiller is a very poor man; did not own any real estate or other property on which he could derive an income at the date of his son's death, or at any time since up to the present time. Said Carter W. Tiller is now about sixty years old. This affiant has no interest in the claim of said Carter W. Tiller for a pension.

J. A. WEATHERFORD,
Late Second Lieutenant Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Volunteers.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of December, in the year 1877, and I hereby certify that the affiant is a respectable and credible person and resides as stated; that I have no interest in this matter.

I further certify that the foregoing affidavit was read over, fully explained to, and understood by the affiant before the signing and execution thereof, and also that the affiant is the identical party represented as making the affidavit.

CH. M. THURSTON,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE, ASSESSOR'S OFFICE,
Louisville, Ky., December 27, 1877.

This is to certify that Mr. C. W. Tiller is listed on the books of this office for the following property for the various years, to wit:

1863. Improvement S. Wal., Flo., and Prest. (value)	$200
1864. Improvement S. Wal., Flo., and Prest. (value)	150
1865. Improvement S. Wal., Flo., and Prest. (value)	200
1866. Improvement S. Wal., Flo., and Prest. (value)	250
1867. Improvement S. Wal., Flo., and Prest. (value)	250

For the years 1868 to 1877, inclusive, I find no assessment against the said C. W. Tiller.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 14th day of March, 1878, before me, Ch. H. Thurston, a county court clerk within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared B. H. Bottger, aged 35 years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that he was with the post baker at Stevenson, Ala., with wagon train and sutler's wagon; he was in company with George W. Tiller (now deceased), private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and when they arrived at Whiteside's Station, Tenn., on the Chattanooga Railroad, they were both captured by Wheeler's rebel cavalry; 10 barrels of flour were left at Whiteside's Station, and he (affiant) and said George W. Tiller were left at Whiteside's Station, Tenn., to guard said flour until the wagons came back to take it (said flour).

The wagons were overloaded and the flour was left, for the reason that the wagons had to lighten up. Wheeler's cavalry captured both this affiant and George W. Tiller; affiant and Tiller were taken first to General Longstreet's headquarters, and from there, via Atlanta, Ga., on to Richmond; said George W. Tiller was taken to Libby prison, Richmond, Va., and this affiant to Castle Thunder, Richmond, Va.; affiant has no interest in the claim of Carter W. Tiller, father of said George W. Tiller, deceased, for pension.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 28th day of June, 1879, before me, William E. Loran, clerk county court within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared Dr. J. C. Metcalf, aged fifty-four years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that his post-office address is southeast corner Preston and Market, Louisville, Ky., county of Jefferson, and he has no interest in this claim; that he was the family physician of Carter W. Tiller, father of George W. Tiller, deceased, late private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, for twenty years, commencing about the year 1851 and ending about 1871; that said Carter W. Tiller was shot through the left arm near the shoulder, and said shot passed entirely through his body; said shot was received by him in 1864, or fifteen years ago; said wound has always (since he received it) been a source of great disability to him, said Teller; he is also generally debilitated; he has been disqualified from doing manual labor by reason of said wound from 1864 to the present time; said Carter W. Tiller was a plasterer by occupation, and he has been a member of the police force of the city of Louisville, Ky., for the past twenty years; his average wages or earnings have been, from 1863 to the present time, as much as $60 per month.

The present wages of a policeman in this city is $1.75 per day. Affiant knows that Sophronia Tiller, mother of the deceased soldier, is dead; she died in Louisville, Ky., as much as fifteen years ago, but this affiant can not fix the exact date, although he was the family physician at the time she died; affiant knows that George W. Tiller, the deceased soldier, was never married. He knew George W. Tiller from his infancy and knew he was the child of Carter W. Tiller and Sophronia Tiller; that said Carter W. Tiller has had no means of support other than pay for services as a policeman from 1863 to the present time. He has no property or anything from which he can derive an income. He lives in a rented house, for which he pays a rent of $10 per month.

He, affiant, was to a great extent dependent on his said son, who was a very smart, intelligent boy. That while his said son was in the Army he sent him all his pay with the exception of a little for personal use. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 28, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Responding to your inquiry of this day in regard to Carter W. Tiller, whose bill for pension has recently passed the House, I desire to say that I have been personally acquainted with Mr. Tiller for twenty years. He is recognized by our citizens generally as a man of probity, good demeanor, industrious, and worthy in every respect. He was for many years on the police force of Louisville, Ky., acting as a detective, and, although quite aged, was retained there because of his valuable services in the past. As far as I know, and I think I am competent to speak advisedly of the fact, his reputation is beyond reproach both as a man and an officer. The municipal administration at Louisville was changed on January 1, 1885, and immediately thereafter Mr. Tiller's services were dispensed with. Since that time my information (which I deem perfectly reliable) is that he has had no occupation whatever, but has been supported by benevolent organizations of the city.

Very truly, yours,

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

Hon. WILLIAM P. TAULBEE,
House of Representatives.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,

In the case of George W. Tiller, a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers, pension claim 234784, records of prisoners of war furnish no additional information other than that shown in report to honorable Commissioner of Pensions, dated March 23, 1878.

Botcher, baker, field hospital, Reserve Corps, or in Major-General Granger's Corps, captured at Whiteside Station, Tenn., September 25, 1863; committed to Castle Thunder, Richmond, Va., October 10, 1863, by Captain Alexander; discharged by General Winder, Order No. 61; delivered to Major Turner March 11, 1864, to be treated as a prisoner of war; confined in Confederate States military prison, Richmond, Va., March 11, 1864; again committed to Castle Thunder, date not given, and discharged September 5, 1864, to be treated as a prisoner of war; confined in Confederate States prison same day, and paroled at Vienna, Va., September 24, 1864.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, it seems that a quorum will be demanded on the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11113) granting a pension to Mrs. General Sheridan. I would therefore move, or submit the request, that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday, December 6, next, the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill, and that the House then proceed to the consideration of the bill granting this pension.

Mr. KERR. With this amendment——

Mr. BINGHAM. Subject to the right of amendment at the time.

Mr. CHEADLE. And two and a half hours' debate allowed to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will not the gentleman allow us to go into the House with a quorum to consider the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman understand that I ask that this resolution be adopted fixing December 6 for the consideration of the bill, when I assume that there will be a quorum present?

Mr. KILGORE. I understand exactly the proposition.

Mr. MACDONALD. It occurs to me that this suggestion or motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is premature, because the effect will be to put this bill beyond the control of the House to act upon it before we adjourn at this session.

Mr. BINGHAM. You can not get a quorum at this session.

Mr. MACDONALD. You have no right to assume that.

Mr. MAISH. Regular order.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am in favor of the passage of the bill, and several other gentlemen here are, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL], who introduced this bill or another of the same kind, is not present, and we have no right to put it beyond the control of the House. For this reason I am opposed to making such an order.

BETSEY A. MOWER.

Mr. YODER. I ask that the bill (S. 2838) granting an increase of pension to Betsy A. Mower be put on its passage.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill has been reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole and the report printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask present consideration of the bill (S. 2346) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Hart Mullany.

The bill was read, as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 24, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 20th instant, a statement of the amount found due the State of California by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department under the act of June 27, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Shall the accompanying papers be printed?

Mr. HALE. I think the papers had better be referred without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be referred without printing, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. The bill should be taken up at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending an appropriation for the payment of messengers for conveying the votes of Presidential electors under section 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES. I present a petition praying for the retirement of General William F. Smith with the rank of major-general, signed by a large number of soldiers, some of whom served under him, and all of whom state that they are acquainted with his remarkable record. This petition is headed by General Charles Devens, a brigadier-general in the late war, afterwards Attorney-General of the United States, and now a judge of the supreme court of Massachusetts, and by others, all of whom have a most honorable record in the late war.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial numerously signed by citizens, farmers of Cass County, Nebraska, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Mills tariff bill for the reason that it discriminates against farming and other American industries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of the L. E. King Post, No. 105, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, Augusta, Kans., praying for the passage of certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to allow honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries before the expiration of the six months allowed by section 2304 of the Revised Statutes to make another entry, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I am instructed by the committee, in view of the importance of the matter, to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read at length for information, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person who has not heretofore perfected title to a tract of land which he has made filing upon under the pre-emption law or entry of under the homestead law, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding one quarter section of public land subject to such entry, such previous filing or entry to the contrary notwithstanding; but this right shall not apply to persons who perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws already initiated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported from that committee this morning.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that that is precisely the provision contained in the general land bill we have reported several times.

Mr. DOLPH. I simply desired to have the amendment read for information, as I came in after the bill had been called up.

Mr. PLUMB. It is based upon the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which was limited to persons who had rendered honorable service and been honorably discharged from the Union Army; but the committee concluded to adhere to its former action and provide that where a person had made a filing or entry of homestead which he had not pursued to the point of completion, and which the law required in detail, he might now make a homestead entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry."

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6896) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in certain cases. I ask that the bill may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read for information.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in all States wherein by the laws thereof judges of courts of record are required to reduce charges and instructions to juries to writing, judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall conform to such practice, and such written instructions shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, returned with their verdict, and retained with the files and be a part of the record in each case.

Mr. STEWART. I think that should lie over.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will state that the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee is simply the bill on this subject as it was passed by the Senate. The House of Representatives has sent us a bill in somewhat different terms, and we propose to amend that House bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the bill which has already been passed by the Senate. As reported, it has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me it would be well to disembarrass the courts to this extent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Nevada that debate is not in order if the bill is to go over. Does the Senator insist on his objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the bill may be proceeded with.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me to make my suggestion perhaps he will consent to have it go over. I desire to make an amendment to the bill providing that the courts may have their charge taken down, if they desire, by a shorthand reporter, because in the rapidity of the business in the circuit courts the judges would be very much embarrassed if the charge had to be written out beforehand. Very many of the judges are in the habit of stating the charges from the bench, and it would accomplish the purpose by having them taken down by a shorthand reporter, and it would facilitate business very much.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like unanimous consent to make a suggestion to the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill this morning reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I was going to ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to hear the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read for information.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I object to that measure. I know what bill it is. I propose to antagonize that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I present to accompany the bill a telegram which I have just received from J. J. Daniel, president of the board of health of Jacksonville, Fla., a very distinguished lawyer and citizen of that State, requesting the establishment of a commission for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in relation to yellow fever and its prevalence in the United States. I move the reference of the paper to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

MEMPHIS, TENN., September 22, 1888.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Member United States Senate,
13 First street, northeast, Washington:

The prevalence of yellow fever in Florida and its presence at Decatur, Ala., and at Jackson, Miss., is due to unrestricted intercourse between Cuba and Florida during the past two years, and demonstrates the necessity of a rigid and perfect system of seaboard quarantine for future protection of health, life, and commerce; we therefore urgently request the re-establishment of the National Board of Health, or of some similar health organization, and its full equipment with power and means to carry out the desired object in connection with State and local boards of health.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3582) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Chippewa bands of Indians in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Traders.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3583) regulating the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Traders.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3584) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LOUISIANA ELECTION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections while engaged by direction of the Senate in the inquiry into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, shall be, and is hereby, authorized as a full committee, or through any subcommittee appointed by the chairman, to send for persons and papers; to sit during the sessions of the Senate; to employ a clerk, stenographer, or stenographers, and one or more messengers, and to take testimony at any places which it may deem it expedient to visit; and the necessary expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day.

The resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN September 17, 1888, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On a former day it was agreed that this resolution should retain its place in the order of current morning business.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that it be laid aside temporarily, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] would be entitled to speak on the resolution this morning.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama, who wants to speak upon the resolution, left the Chamber this morning with the understanding that the resolution should go over until to-morrow, retaining its place, so as to come up then at the conclusion of the morning business, as it came up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will then retain its place and be presented in the order of current morning business to-morrow.

PRESENTATION OF BILLS TO THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] on the 21st instant, which comes over under objection.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged in the public press and elsewhere that the presentation of bills to the President of the United States which have passed both Houses of Congress, been duly enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, is frequently delayed for several days, and sometimes for weeks, by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Senate, as a branch of the legislative department of the Government, do call the attention of the House of Representatives to said alleged delays on the part of its Committee on Enrolled Bills in presenting bills to the President of the United States which have been duly enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, and respectfully ask the House to require its officers to present such bills to the President without unnecessary delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. I desire the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Rules, and I beg leave to point out to that committee the authorities, which may be of some convenience to it.

So far as the Senate is concerned, the twenty-fifth rule provides that when a bill has been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by the President of the Senate, it shall be forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States.

The House of Representatives has no direct rule as to the time when a bill shall be transmitted. The forty-fourth rule of the House, however, adopts Jefferson's Manual in all matters not provided for in the special rules, as will be found in the House Manual, page 264.

Jefferson's Manual makes it an infringement of the rules of Parliament to withhold a bill from the king, and it also makes it the duty of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to present bills to the President. Senate Manual, page 180.

When a bill is sent by one House to the other and is there delayed it is parliamentary to send a messenger to the other House calling the attention of that body to the omission. Senate Manual, page 261.

When there is unreasonable delay it is in order for one House to send to the other a complaint calling attention to the fact. This rule will be found in Senate Manual, page 214.

I simply call attention to these matters. I hope the Committee on Rules will examine into the question and see if there has been unreasonable delay on the part of the other House in sending bills to the President, and suggest the proper mode to that body or request it to furnish a remedy.

The Senate is interested as much as the House of Representatives in having a bill, after it has passed the two Houses, presented to the President within a reasonable time. My suggestions have no reference to any particular bill now, but in order that there may be no misunderstanding hereafter as to the proper time to present bills, I think this matter ought to be investigated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the one hundred and tenth amendment of the Senate to the bill, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN the managers of the further conference on the part of the House.

LIEUT. STARKEY R. POWELL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up House bill 10068, which is a private bill, and one to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to interfere with the request made by the Senator from Illinois, because I understand his matter will take but little time. After that is disposed of I desire to call up the general deficiency appropriation bill, and I hope it may be passed in a short time. I shall make that motion, with the leave of the Chair, at the end of the bill suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell, of Black Hawk war.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell, of Black Hawk war, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Starkey R. Powell, late lieutenant in Capt. William B. Smith's company of the Third Regiment Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, at $30 a month.

Mr. CULLOM. I only desire to say that this gentleman is a very old man, and the universal sentiment is that the bill ought to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to a message from the House of Representatives. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. The House amendment is an important one, I think, and as the bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce, I move that the amendment be referred to that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be printed as passed by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed as passed, and referred with the amendment of the House to the Committee on Commerce.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. Let the bill be taken up and then I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. As I gave notice a few minutes ago, I proposed to call up the general deficiency appropriation bill at the present time, but I learn that the Senator from Kansas gave notice and desires to submit some remarks on the bill called up by him, not with the intention, as I understand, of continuing its consideration beyond his remarks.

Mr. PLUMB. As far as I am concerned, of course, it would naturally give way anyhow to the time necessary to allow the deficiency appropriation bill to get through, although I did purpose, and so stated, that when the bill was called up I should ask the Senate to proceed at its earliest convenience to its passage. But, of course, the appropriation bill will have the right of way, and there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. HALE. Then I give notice that at the close of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas I shall move to take up the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Maine at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me to have passed a bill six lines long, which will not take two minutes?

Mr. PLUMB. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

BRUNSWICK COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district, in the State of Georgia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I will simply state that the Secretary of the Treasury has been consulted and has no objection to the passage of the bill; and it is a House bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Kansas.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the two great political parties in this country present upon all economic, political, and administrative affairs a radical conflict of systems; and in no direction are the lines of controversy more sharply drawn than in the methods and objects of legislative and executive action relative to the public lands. The Democratic party has at all times sought the benefit of the few as against the many. Possessing the cheapest labor in the world in the section of country from which it has mainly drawn its support, it has never sought by the subdivision of landed interests or by the maintenance through advanced methods of cultivation of soil already reclaimed to foster a population of industrious middle classes. On the contrary, by the abandonment of plantations as soon as they were worked out, the necessity was created for such a public-land system as would constantly provide new areas for easy occupation and as would naturally maintain a landed oligarchy.

In striking contrast, the Republican party came into existence with the land policy, which it has ever since maintained, of "Land for the landless, homes for the homeless." It has at all times sought to subdivide the public domain amongst and for the benefit of actual settlers. It has zealously guarded, preserved, and improved the areas once conquered by cultivation; it has in regular progression pushed onward its ever-advancing fringe of small agricultural homes; and it has thus developed and fostered empires of citizens enjoying an honest and prosperous equality before the law.

It is, therefore, but natural that when the Democratic party succeeded to power in 1885, after twenty-four years of enforced retirement, it should at once attack the Republican administration of the public lands. It was to be expected that its leaders should seek to break down the system which had in the previous quarter century so signally multiplied, developed, and strengthened the North. As it went out of power in 1861 with a veto of the homestead law, it came into power in 1885 with the purpose and the necessity of repudiating its beneficent results. And no better way to accomplish that result occurred than to discredit those results by loud cries of fraud, and by alleging that its administration for the benefit of actual settlers had really been in the interest of great monopolies.

Accordingly, Mr. Cleveland's administration came into power with the assertion that the public-land laws had been administered by the Republican party in deference to the interests of land-grabbers and monopolists. The policy of reform was, therefore, to be initiated. The poor settlers of the country were to be protected from speculators; and railroad companies and similar monopolies were to be restricted to such rights as would accrue to them under a rigid construction of the statutes. Furthermore, the Land Bureau was to be put upon a strictly business basis, and by correct methods of administration its expenditures were to be reduced, and arrears of work were to be put up to substantially an even date. In a speech made by Vice-President Hendricks before the Bay State Club in Boston on the 26th of June, 1885, four months after Mr. Cleveland took the oath of office, he illustrated the reform which was to be brought about by the result alleged to have been attained by himself when Commissioner of the General Land Office under President Pierce.

> Its surveys were then extending beyond the Missouri, beyond the mountains, along the valleys of California, and the settlers were going out from the old Bay State and from Maine and finding their homes on the lands that were then being surveyed. When I took charge of that office, with one hundred and eighty clerks, I found the business four years behind. The patents which ought to have gone to the people living upon the lands were four years behind date. I said at once, "This will not do; the man who has purchased the land of the Government has a right at an early date to his patent, so that he may sell it; so that he may obtain his rights, whatever they may be." I said at once, "There must be reform in this office." My ambition was connected with the reform. I could not well afford to take that appointment and go out of that office without having brought the work up to date; so I did commence the work of reform seriously and very earnestly, and very soon I became acquainted with all the clerks of the office. I knew the clerks that would be able to help with the work that was to be carried through, and very soon those that limped or were unwilling or indifferent did step out. [Applause.]
> The "hickory broom" of Jackson that represented Democratic reform was the sentiment and emblem of the reform that I sought to bring about, and in the stead of the men who had to step out there came in young and earnest fellows who were willing to do the work, so that by one general order I required that the work done at each desk should be 25 per cent. more than it had been before. These men came in and took their share readily and cheerfully and cordially, and when I left that office nearly four years afterwards it was only four months behind in the delivery of the patents to the men who had bought the land. [Applause.] From four years it came down to four months, and that was as close as it was practicable to bring the work. That I thought was reform.
> I am not personally very much acquainted with the bureau officers employed by the Secretaries at Washington. I know some of them in the Interior Department. I know the Commissioner of the Land Office. I know the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I know by reputation the excellent gentleman who is in the Office of Patents. I believe they, by their own judgment and force, will bring about civil-service reform in their departments. [Applause.] I think I am safe in saying that I know they have already taken steps in that direction; that the people will not be sold out by them. [Applause.]
> This is my own history of civil-service reform. It may be of no account, but it is mine. [Applause.] And that administration, whenever and wherever it may be, that will fill all the bureaus in Washington City with capable men at the head, and tell them that the work devolves on them and holds them responsible, will bring about certain and prompt reform. I think we are going through all right.

As the first step in the inauguration of this reform policy Mr. Commissioner Sparks was sworn into office on the 26th of March and took his seat March 27, 1885. In precisely six working days he assumed to have so mastered the theory of the public-land system, and to have got the details of its practical administration so well in hand, as to warrant him in issuing the following sweeping order:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
> Washington, April 3, 1885.
>
> Order:
> Final action in this office upon all entries of the public lands, except private cash entries and such scrip locations as are not dependent upon acts of settlement and cultivation, is suspended in the following localities, namely:
> All west of the first guide meridian west in Kansas; all west of range 17 in Nebraska; the whole of Colorado, except lands in the late Ute reservation; all of Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Washington, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada, and that portion of Minnesota north of the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad and east of the indemnity limits of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad.
>
> In addition, final action in this office will be suspended upon all timber entries under the act of June 3, 1878; also upon all cases of desert-land entries.
> WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Two remarkable facts will appear upon the face of this order. Whilst it pretendedly was aimed at the suspension of fraud by suspending the laws under which frauds were possible, it—

1. Draws a clear distinction in favor of speculators and scrip-owners and against actual settlers. The laws suspended affected all "entries of public lands, except private cash entries, and such scrip locations as are not dependent upon acts of settlement and cultivation." The preemption, homestead, and other settlement statutes were taken by the throat and the perfection of titles thereunder was absolutely inhibited, whilst private entries (cash purchases without limit as to quantity and without requirement of settlement) and all character of scrip or warrant speculation requiring no acts of settlement or cultivation, were left wholly undisturbed. The immediate effect was to give a larger enhanced value to all such outstanding scrip in the hands of a land ring, what are known as "additional homesteads" alone rising at once from eight or nine dollars per acre to between twenty and thirty dollars per acre. Probably three or four men held the greater proportion of all such outstanding scrip and realized large fortunes from the immediate effect of this order.

2. The order assumed the lines of suspected fraud under the settlement laws of Congress to be geographical and political. The fraudulent line was drawn at the line of the States "recently in rebellion." Whilst all lands in the Southern States were by law subject to sale at private entry and continued to be so disposed of, their disposition not being prohibited or otherwise affected by the Commissioner's order, the lands in the Northwest were not so subject, and could only be located with the prospect of obtaining title, after the issuance of the foregoing order, by means of land scrip at largely enhanced prices, until (as under the order recited) the Administration was convinced that every Northern man who wanted to settle on the public domain was not a thief and a swindler. The theory of the order was that the great body of settlement entries in the Western country were fraudulent. So that, taking a given point as a center in very many land districts, there would not in its opinion be an honest settler within the range of thirty or forty townships. And their idea of correcting the alleged evil was not by adopting better administrative methods for the future, but by simply stopping everything that had been done in the past.

At first Sparks thought of asking the President to order the closing of the district land offices in the Western States and Territories, and then the Democratic policy diverted into the idea of recommending to Congress a suspension of the public-land system for a continued period of years, until finally it was determined to dispense with the assistance of either the President or of Congress, and by the mere order of Sparks to close up the business: after it had passed through all the ordeals required by statute, and had reached a point where by direction of law patents should issue, all cases were then to be thrown into a drag net and subjected to a system of suspension. This system condemned in a wholesale way the settlers of the Republican States and Territories in the Northwest as a band of thieves and perjurers. It advertised to the world the official opinion of the Administration that the settlers of that country, made up very largely of sailors and soldiers who fought the battles of the late war on both sides, and who are supposed to represent the real strength of the Government, were, in fact, an army of tramps and outlaws. It represented the mass of the people in that section of the country who were engaged in agriculture upon public lands as devoting, in combination with their friends, the balance of their lives to the business of swindling the Government. All entrymen there under the settlement laws were presumed to be rascals, and were required to overcome that presumption of guilt.

The legislation of the Republican party had furnished ample facilities for preventing the perpetration of fraud, if proper administrative methods were adopted. Settlers were required to give in a newspaper designated by the Government notice for thirty days of their intention at a fixed time and place to make their proof and entry, stating therein the description of their lands and the names of their witnesses. They were, by law, restricted to the use of those witnesses. Then the act of May 14, 1880, rewarded any citizen who would prove at the hearing the noncompliance with law by the entryman by giving to such informer a preference right to enter the tract of land in question. So that the Government not only had all the time between the original filing and the final proof to investigate the case, but it was distinctly put upon its inquiry as to the credibility of the named witnesses and to the real facts of the case by the publication which it authorized and controlled. In addition thereto an inducement as valuable as the claim itself was extended to any citizen who would come forward and prove its fraudulent character. Thus every man in the vicinage was made an interested party on the side of the law. If, however, no one appeared against him, and his proofs were satisfactory to the register and receiver, the settler received a final certificate, whereupon the act of Congress said that he "shall be entitled to patent," but inasmuch as the General Land Office has always been more or less behind the current date in its work, a considerable period would necessarily elapse before the patent would issue. False swearing was made punishable as perjury, and numerous decisions of the Supreme Court sustain the power of the United States to set aside these settlement patents in ex parte cases on proving fraud. Considering, then, the long period during which the claim was subjected to the crucial test of the entire neighborhood, of the register and receiver, of the vast army of clerks under the direction of the Commissioner, and of all the other tests with which the judgment or caprice of the executive office had burdened the settler, the Government was furnished with ample opportunity to determine, under the legislation of the Republican party, whether or not a settler was entitled to his patent at the date when the case was reached in its regular order. But under the order of the present Administration the policy was not preventive, but was pretendedly curative. Nothing was done until the entries were allowed and had been reached substantially for action.

The real trouble then commenced for the unfortunate victim of national generosity. An army of Land Office detectives were to thenceforward look down his chimney and to peer through his windows in search of suspected fraud. And these detectives were in turn to be subjected to a species of watching and counter detection. This system speedily demonstrated that settlers who were willing and able to respond to pecuniary demands of such agents thereby secured favorable reports upon their entries. Those unable to meet such demands and to whom a ten-dollar bill meant food for their families were dragged again and again hundreds of miles to the local land office with their witnesses to prove over and over again their compliance with law. The thousands of such flagrant outrages are illustrated by the plaintive story of John Stevenson. After making full proof and payment he was compelled, under attack by a special agent, to again and again attend renewed hearings to contest the effort to destroy his entry. Being again required to respond by a third hearing upon demand of the Commissioner, he appealed for relief to the Secretary. The Secretary's decision recites the claimant's conceded story of his wrongs in the following language:

> It is urged by the claimant that the order for a hearing will work injury to him; that his land lies about 100 miles from the local office, and that a great part of said distance is over broken and unsettled country, either entirely without roads or with roads in an almost impassable condition, thus rendering the trip extremely difficult, laborious, and expensive; that at the instance of the Government he has already made three trips to the local offices with his witnesses, at each time being to great expense; that he is a poor man, a farm laborer by occupation, and unable to bear the expense of a rehearing, because the former hearing and continuances have exhausted his means; that some of his witnesses, by whom he can establish the legality and validity of his claim, have moved away and their whereabouts are now unknown to him; that the Government had a whole year to prepare for the former trial, had two continuances in order to get its witnesses there, and was represented at said hearing by several special agents, and should, therefore, be estopped from prosecuting the case further, and that the theory upon which the case is prosecuted, to wit, the existence of a fraudulent conspiracy between claimant and the aforesaid corporation, has no foundation in fact.

Yet, conceding the truth of his statement, the Secretary sanctioned Sparks's unjust requirement of a renewed hearing. (See sixth "Land Decisions," page 39.)

Somewhere between fifty and one hundred thousand cases were thus taken hold of by this order of April 3, 1885, and nearly that same number of entries were annually added to the volume of suspension. This followed because the means adopted for acting upon entries were so far inferior to the means for sale.

The execution of the public land system, past, present, and future, for nearly the entire Western part of the United States, was suspended upon general suspicion. A drag-net was thrown over almost the entire Western country for the purpose of ascertaining by a vast system of secret espionage whether or not some entries had not been consummated upon false proofs. Obviously this required for its projected application to so many States and Territories an army of special agents. With the limited number authorized, or liable to be authorized, by Congressional appropriation, many years of inquiry would be required to thus examine in the field the hundreds of thousands of entries which were in terms suspended by this order.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, forty-two special agents were employed by the Interior Department in the field to investigate these suspended entries. The average period of service of each was seven months four and one-quarter days, being equivalent to the employment of twenty-five agents for the whole year. In the General Land Office Report for 1886 (page 453) it appears that, during the year aforesaid, the number of cases referred to these special agents for investigation was 4,017, and the number of cases investigated and reported upon by them was 3,073. It will be readily seen that with such wholesale suspension of from fifty to one hundred thousand old settlement entries, and with nearly 50,000 entries per year to be similarly suspended for investigation and report, whilst, on the other hand, the means available for such inspection and report acts upon only about 3,000 per annum, the system must necessarily result in a terrible accumulation of suspended entries. In this progressive country the ownership of property never remains dormant; and the necessary effect of the foregoing policy was to arrest all real estate transactions, whether by way of sale or mortgage and which were predicated upon public lands titles. No conveyancer would pass a title unless complete upon the record, and this order of suspension indefinitely withheld the foundation of that record.

The practical result of these investigations has been to determine a very minor percentage of fraud, probably not equaling more than 1 per cent. of the entries examined. For illustration: A board to examine these suspended land entries was appointed, consisting of the Assistant Commissioner, the chief clerk, and a law clerk. Presumably the first series of cases passed by them received their most careful attention, and quite naturally they took up cases in Dakota and Nebraska, where the matter of fraudulent entries was largely alleged to exist. Yet, according to the first report of this board as found in the National Republican of December 23, 1885, in 216 final homestead entries in those two States, the result of all the investigation by special agents and of examination by the aforesaid board was to recommend 126 cases for approval for patent, 53 to be held for further evidence, 35 for further investigation by special agents, and only 2 for rejection. In 35 pre-emption cases reported upon at the same time, in the Aberdeen district, Dakota, 1 was recommended for patent, 8 for rejection, and 26 for special investigation in the field.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, the number of special agents employed had been increased to 58, and the number of entries disposed of under their report is stated in the annual report of the General Land Office (on page 51) to have equaled 2,312 entries. For the year ending June 30, 1884, under the Republican administration, only 30 special agents were employed, who reported upon 3,563 entries. So that by a change of administration the number of special agents has been increased from 30 to 58, with an increase of annual expenditure of at lest $50,000, but with an actual diminution in the volume of results accomplished through their investigations.

Most of the labor performed, both by the special agents and by the board of review, or other cumberous machinery adopted in the General Land Office, has been in the direction of minor and purely technical defects. In the proof of settlers, non-essentials have been magnified into questions of actualities; failures to comply with unimportant regulations of the Land Department have been treated as a gross violation of the essential requirements of statutes. Thousands of cases have been suspended from patent because, whilst the requirement of publication of their intention to prove up on a given day was at one time held by the General Land Office to require an insertion four times in a weekly newspaper, a subsequent order required five publications, and a still subsequent one required six. And yet these failures to comply with a subsequent change of executive construction have swept all such entries into the mass of alleged fraudulent cases which the vigilance of a Democratic administration has prevented from ripening into patents.

Changes in directions to registers and receivers concerning details of proof required of the entryman were not only made without notice, but were made to take effect before the receipt of the directions at the local land office. In one case a direction of this character was not received at the land-offices in Kansas until nearly a month after it had taken effect, and all the entries made during the intervening period had to be made over again, involving the settlers of a single county in that State in an extra expense of over $10,000, totally unnecessary, effecting nothing whatever in results, except to put a burden upon men already poor and who were entitled to be protected instead of being robbed.

Although the Supreme Court in Meyers vs. Croft (13 Wall., page 391) distinctly ruled that it was lawful for settlers to sell their lands after entry, and before the issue of a patent, and although it had been the immemorial executive practice to recognize both mortgages and sales subsequent to such date, yet by the instructions to special agents, dated October 24, 1885, and emanating from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it was held that any conveyance, whether by mortgage or otherwise, of lands embraced in duly entered unpatented homestead or pre-emption entries, passed no legal title or claim whatsoever; and that a transferee or mortgagee of such claims would not be recognized in any manner as having any right, interest, or claim in such land.

This ruling interposed a tremendous obstacle to the consummation of entries by bona fide settlers. The great proportion of them are poor, and are obliged to raise money both to make their improvements and to pay their purchase-money. Their land is usually the only basis of security they have to give for such advantages. When the power to use the same for such purposes was thus taken away, they were stranded beyond possibility of help. This ruling also made non-salable lands purchased bona fide after entry, and under it entries were set aside where the original entryman had made sale based upon a certificate of entry issued by the local land officers, and which certificate is, as it always has been, by the laws of all the public-land States and Territories, evidence of title as high and complete as that of a patent; and after its issue the land described in it became taxable as private property. The Commissioner's order treated all these things as of no account, and the entries were often summarily set aside and new settlers invited to go upon the land, of course in time to be ejected, losing all time and improvement spent thereon, every dollar of their losses being due to the illegal and arbitrary act of the Commissioner.

Then, too, in the machinery of the General Land Office, and in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, such a division of responsibility was inaugurated and such a duplication of labor was created as to become the really oppressive occasion of additional delay. The General Land Office took the form of various boards, such as the board to examine suspended entries, the board of review, and the contest board. The board of review, for illustration, was created by detailing clerks from other divisions of the General Land Office to act on it. So that if, previous to its organization, four hundred clerks had been engaged in one way or another in the examination of entries and determining upon compliance with the requirements of law, then after the organization of this board three hundred clerks would continue as before and one hundred would go over all their work again, by way of review.

In effect this would be attempting to pass 4 inches of water through an inch pipe. The result has, therefore, been that this board has pending before it over twenty-six thousand cases. Entries which under Republican administration would have been patented two years ago have just been reached for consideration by this board; and in the same ratio of backward progression, any entry which under the Republican administration would have been patented to-day will not, under this administration, be patented for four years to come. Instead of having four hundred examine the entry papers, and after approval sending them to patent, the present administration has two hundred clerks first examine them, and thereupon the other two hundred examine them over again, the only discernable motive being to correct the work of the first and incompetent set of clerks. Thus the same amount of work is put on one-half the number of clerks previously employed, and is thereafter submitted to the other half to be considered anew. The work is thus doubled, while the force is diminished one-half.

The same delay and obstruction occurs in the work of the so-called contest board to which are submitted for decision all contested cases from the public-land and pre-emption divisions. This board has on its files to-day enough cases to thoroughly employ its present force for two years or more without any other cases being sent to it. The contests now pending before that board aggregate 2,000 cases, and they are being disposed of by a force of six clerks. That force is now examining cases which were received in the General Land Office in 1886, and are just about holding their own against the number of new contests received by it. As each case necessarily involves two parties, and often several claimants, it is fair to presume that from four to five thousand litigants are before the General Land Office, and must be kept there for at least two years before the possibility of securing decision of their contest in any form by the Commissioner. And after decision by the Commissioner appeals lie to the Secretary, where delay of years more will necessarily occur.

As a result of the above system of administrative methods, the ability to complete the land contracts of the Government by issue of patents has been very materially diminished. This will appear from the following tables taken from the report of the General Land Office:

1884.		1885.
Appropriation	$450,000	Appropriation	$507,350
Force in office	294	Force in office	376
Acreage disposed of	27,531,000	Acreage disposed of	20,995,000
Number of entries	51,740	Number of entries	44,186
Patents issued	51,337	Patents issued	71,131

As the Democratic administration did not take charge of the General Land Office until April, 1885, and as all issuance of patents was thereupon suspended, the foregoing figures represent in substance the work of the last two years of the Republican administration in the Land Department. Now compare these with the result of the next two years of the Democratic administration:

1886.		1887.
Appropriation	$511,350	Appropriation	$517,675
Force in office	378	Force in office	377
Acreage disposed of	22,124,000	Acreage disposed of	25,111,000
Number of entries	40,886	Number of entries	52,751
Patents issued	19,885	Patents issued	24,558

Showing a diminution of over 64 per cent. in number of patents issued during the first two years of Cleveland's administration as compared with the last two years of Republican administration.

To the foregoing figures may be added the further statement that on the 28th of January, 1888, there were pending in division "H" alone, of the General Land Office, 9,295 contested cases. Of this number over 2,000 cases were known as "docketed cases," that is, cases in which trials have been had and testimony taken. Of this class of cases only from 125 to 150 had been disposed of since the contest division was established in June, 1887.

Similar ratios of decrease in work accomplished in the General Land Office under the present Administration are shown in the reports of other divisions.

For example, the report of the surveying division shows that from 1883 to 1885 there were 471 surveying contracts examined, but only 144 from 1885 to 1887, and that from 1883 to 1885 the number of plats examined was 3,809, but from 1885 to 1887 there were but 431 such examinations made.

School indemnity selections were approved in 1883 to 1885 for 236,130.43 acres, but in 1885 to 1887 only 95,358.25 acres were approved.

Of miscellaneous claims settled in the Private Land Claims Division, there were in 1883 to 1885, 1,882, and in 1885 to 1887, 1,065.

In the division of public lands the postings on the tract-books during four years were as follows:

1883–'84	327,186	1885–'86	325,914
1884–'85	398,993	1886–'87	340,117
Total	726,179	Total	666,031

Being 60,148, or nearly 10 per cent. less in the first two years of present Administration than in the last two years of previous Administration, although forty additional clerks have been employed.

In the same division the cases examined and approved were as follows:

1883–'84	60,276	1885–'86	40,772
1884–'85	70,656	1886–'87	24,475
Total	130,932	Total	65,247

Being 50 per cent. less work during the first two years of the present Administration than in the last two years of the previous Administration.

The same condition of affairs exists in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. February, 1885, was the last month of the Republican administration under Mr. Teller. His force, consisting of only six law clerks, was then working upon appeal land cases which had been forwarded from the Commissioner in October, 1884, and there were then pending in round numbers not more than 500 cases. There are now seventeen law examiners in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and there are pending about 2,000 appeal cases. They are now working upon cases which came up from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August, 1887, and they are disposing of not more than 150 cases per month at a fair estimate. So that with a largely increased force the work is now eighteen or twenty months in arrears. The Republican administration went out of power with the work up to within three months of the current date; and with largely increased facilities the Democratic administration has in three years run the work in arrears fourteen months, and on the urgent recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior there were added ten law clerks by the sundry civil bill of this year.

It will now require about five years on a fair average, from the time of the initiation of a land contest before the local office, and with the utmost expedition, to secure a final decision from the Secretary of the Interior. The injurious effect of this delay will not be appreciated until it is known that often both contestants are living upon and improving the land which is the subject of controversy. The one against whom decision is rendered loses not only his years of time but all improvements; while during these years of time the opportunity of getting as good a tract of land from the Government has diminished, and, after having paid taxes and helped to create the appliances of civilization for the benefit of his family, himself, and the country, he is obliged not only to surrender all he has created, but, if he would enter a tract of public land, go to a remote frontier, older, weaker in purse, and begin anew his contest with the forces of nature. Prompt decision of contest cases would operate to largely prevent these consequences, and is required by every consideration of obligation and public policy.

It is to be further observed that as the original order of suspension was directed primarily against the West and Northwestern States, so the administration of the Department in the matter of work successfully accomplished has been proportionately in favor of the Southern States. Examination of the records will show that contested cases therein have been specially advanced and disposed of with rapidity, and that a large proportion of the patents issued have been for lands located in that portion of the country.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

As a foil to this persecution of settlers, this incompetence of administration, this truckling to scrip monopolies, the Administration has talked loud, long, and maliciously about Republican land grants to railroad companies and about the restoration to the public domain by its action of such lands since March, 1885.

Let us consider these things in their order. The acts of March 30, 1822, and of March 2, 1827, to aid in the construction of a canal from the Illinois River to the southern bend of Lake Michigan, was the pioneer legislation granting public lands for works of internal improvements; and from then until 1850 the aggregate of such donations to canals, wagon-roads, and river improvements equaled 5,000,000 acres. So that not only was this principle of land-grant legislation not a Republican invention, but, furthermore, the pioneer act in aid of railroads was the distinctive and prominent feature of a Democratic administration. That was the act of September 20, 1850, which, under the disguise of a grant nominally to the respective States, gave to the Illinois Central Railroad Company 2,595,053 acres of rich prairie land along a line where settlements had created an imperative demand for railroad facilities, and where the road paid a large profit from its immense traffic, independent of the land grant, as rapidly as constructed. The same act gave to the Mobile and Ohio River Railroad Company in Mississippi 1,004,640 acres, and to the same company in Alabama 404,800 acres, this road connecting the border towns and rich plantations of the two States with the city of Mobile. Upon the passage of this act Senator Foote, of Mississippi, said: "I understand the lands to be sold nearly along the whole line, as far as the State of Mississippi is concerned." Speaking of Illinois, Senator Douglas said: "The road runs through several fine towns, such as Bloomington, for instance, and for 5 or 6 miles around the towns the land is all taken up and cultivated." These statements were made to show that the lands in place were so taken up that indemnity provisions would be necessary to satisfy the grant.

Then came the acts of June 10, 1852, and February 9, 1853, giving to the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, of Missouri, on the line of overland travel across the State, 781,944 acres; to the Southwestern Railroad Company, of Missouri, 1,161,235; to the Cairo and Fulton Railroad Company, of Missouri, 219,262; to the same company in Arkansas, 1,160,067 acres; to the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company, in Arkansas, 550,525 acres, and to the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company, in Arkansas, 438,646.89 acres. (Land Office Report, 1865.)

In consistent keeping with Democratic hostility to the distribution of public lands to actual cultivators and inhabitants of the soil, and in consonance with the Democratic policy of favoring corporations and monopolies, President Buchanan vetoed the first homestead law passed by Congress, but approved all grants made to railroads. Under his administration, and the guardianship over the public lands of Thomas A. Hendricks, who was then Commissioner of the General Land Office, the following grants for railroads were made in 1856 and 1857:

RAILROAD WITHDRAWALS.

The act making the grants for the Illinois Central and Mobile and Ohio roads was approved September 20, 1850. Upon its passage in the Senate Mr. Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, moved an amendment, that the lateral limits of the grant should be fixed at 15 miles, remarking in substance that that was the distance which a loaded team could habitually travel in a day, and hence would be the requisite limit to exclude adverse settlements. This declaration was the more important, as the grant to the canal in 1822 and 1827 had appropriated the alternate sections not proposed to be granted to the railroad. But immediately upon its passage, and without waiting for its approval by the President, the distinguished statesmen of that period who had combined their efforts to spoliate the public lands for the benefit of wealthy coadjutors and influential constituents in the construction of roads for which no national aid was necessary, united in a request to the President to at once withdraw from sale and settlement every alternate section of public land for 25 miles in width on each side of the lines of the respective roads. The following is a copy of this modest request, from the files of the General Land Office:

To the President of the United States:

The undersigned, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, would respectfully state that an act has passed both Houses of Congress "granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Mobile," by which there is granted to said States the right of way through the public lands and every alternate section within 6 miles of the line of said railroad, and to supply any deficiency arising from the previous sale, or other cause, of any portion of the lands within 6 miles, the said States are authorized to select other lands within 15 miles of said road on either side to an amount equal to said width of 6 miles; also providing that said alternate sections within 6 miles retained by the United States shall be advanced in price to the sum of $2.50 per acre. A copy of said bill is sent herewith.

In order to prevent the entry of said lands for the purpose of speculation by individuals before the route shall have been definitely located and the United States and said States be in some measure deprived of the advantages designed to be conferred on both parties by the passage of said bill, the undersigned respectfully request that the sales of that portion of the public lands be suspended for the period of six months, or until the lands shall have been located lying within the distance of 25 miles on each side of a line designated in the accompanying statement, in order to furnish time to make the necessary surveys and selections of said land.

Dated at Washington, September 18, 1850.

The withdrawal of lands was promptly made as requested, within both granted and indemnity limits, upon problematical routes, before the railroad lands had been surveyed, before any right whatever to a withdrawal of lands had been acquired under the act, and before the legal rights of settlement and entry by citizens of the United States on any portion of the lands had been impaired by the legitimate operations of the act. This withdrawal, arbitrarily and without color of authority, excluded legal settlements and entries over an area covering 10,000,000 acres of land to prematurely secure a grant of 4,000,000 acres.

It moreover laid the foundation, established the policy, and set the precedent for railroad indemnity withdrawals, which continued uninterrupted through the successive Democratic administrations and became the inheritance of the Republican succession to the Government and the administrative authority binding upon Republican officials.

It will be observed that the request to the President to withdraw lands for the benefit of the Illinois Central grant was "in order to prevent the entry of said lands for the purpose of speculation by individuals." Under the settlement laws then in force only a single quarter section could be entered by one person. This was the "speculation" to be guarded against. Millions of acres for a railroad company was an honest, useful disposal of the public lands, to make sure of which the honest settler was not only to be cut out of his right of entry of a single quarter section, but the withdrawal was made for 25 miles in width on each side of the line, although the extreme width of both granted and indemnity limits was only 15 miles. No person desiring to secure a home upon the public lands was to be permitted to get any benefit whatever from the building of the road; at least not until the company and its friends had been sated.

The railroad indemnity withdrawals made by Democratic policy and Democratic officials previous to 1861 amounted to upwards of 75,000,000 acres in the eleven States of Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, and Wisconsin. But Democratic administrations did more than this and worse than this. They withdrew public lands from market for the benefit of railroad companies not only before the acts were signed, but before the acts were passed, and they made blanket withdrawals covering great areas of country in anticipation of acts that never were passed.

These withdrawals were made, as stated in the Executive orders, "on the representation and at the solicitation of members of both Houses of Congress," then in overwhelming control by the Democratic party.

In 1853 and 1854 upwards of 30,000,000 acres were withdrawn in solid bodies where no grants had been made. (Land Office Report for 1854, page 6.)

Of other withdrawals made before the granting acts were passed, or before they received the signature of the President, the following are among those reported by the Democratic Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Sparks (Senate Executive Document No. 170, first session, Forty-ninth Congress):

In anticipation of a grant to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of four railroads in that State, Commissioner Hendricks, on May 10, 1856, issued telegraphic instructions to the registers and receivers for the six land districts in said State, withdrawing from sale or location all lands south of the line between townships 91 and 92, comprising about two-thirds of the entire State. The act making the grant did not receive the signature of the President until May 15, 1856.

During the year 1856, in anticipation of railroad grants to the States of Louisiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Mississippi, the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued telegraphic instructions to the local officers of twenty land districts in said States, suspending from sale and location large bodies of land, as follows:

State.	Order of suspension.	Date of grant.
Louisiana	May 31, 1856	June 3, 1856
Michigan	May 30, 1856	June 3, 1856
Wisconsin	May 29, 1856	June 3, 1856
Mississippi	Aug. 9, 1856	Aug. 11, 1856

The lands thus withdrawn in anticipation of proposed grants amounted to at least 50,000,000 acres, exclusive of lands previously appropriated.

During the same year railroad grants were made to the States of Florida and Alabama, and in 1857 grants for several roads were made to the Territory of Minnesota. Long before any of the roads provided for in said grants had been located, and consequently before any right to any particular lands under the grants had vested in the States, the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued directions to the local officers of nineteen land districts in said States and Territories suspending the sale and location of all lands within what was supposed would be the limits of the several grants, amounting to more than 28,000,000 acres, exclusive of lands previously appropriated, as follows:

State.	Date of grant.	Order of suspension.
Florida	May 17, 1856	May 17, 1856 May 23, 1856 June 9, 1856 July 8, 1856 Sept. 6, 1856
Alabama	May 17, 1856	May 17, 1856
Do	June 3, 1856	June 19, 1856
Minnesota	Mar. 3, 1857	Mar. 7, 1857

Representations having been made that pre-emption claims for speculative purposes were being placed upon the lands within the limits of the withdrawals in the States of Wisconsin, Michigan, Alabama, and Florida, the local officers in said States were, on December 16, 1856, February 2, February 13, and April 29, 1857, respectively, directed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to refuse to receive any pre-emption claims based on settlements initiated after the receipt by them of said orders on large bodies of lands in their districts. These suspensions from pre-emption were prior to the location of the several roads in whose interest they were made, and consequently prior to the attachment of any right under the grant to any particular lands. This inhibition against the right of pre-emption affected more than 40,000,000 acres of public land.

As a sample of the orders see the following:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 5, 1856.

REGISTER and RECEIVER, Sioux City, Iowa:

By my telegraph dispatch of the 10th instant you were directed to suspend from sale or location all the lands in your district situated south of the line dividing townships 91 and 92 until further orders.

The object of this withdrawal was to protect from sale the lands granted to the State of Iowa for four railroads, running from the Mississippi River to the Missouri, by a bill which has just passed both House of Congress.

Said bill, having this day been approved by the President, has become a law, and you will continue to withhold the lands from sale or location until otherwise directed.

It is designed to adjust these several grants with as little delay as practicable, in order that lands remaining to the United States may be returned to market.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
Commissioner.

(Precisely similar letters, same date, sent to the register and receiver at Council Bluffs, Fort Dodge, Fort Des Moines, Dubuque, and Chariton.)

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 12, 1856.

REGISTER and RECEIVER, Mineral Point, Wis.:

By my telegraphic dispatch of the 29th ultimo you were requested to suspend from sale or location until further notice all the lands in your districts. The object of this withdrawal was to protect the lands from sale granted to the State for railroad purposes by a bill which has passed both Houses of Congress, which having been approved by the President on the 3d instant and thus become a law, I have to request that you will continue the reservation until otherwise directed.

The governor has this day been advised and requested to furnish in advance sketch maps of the route of the roads, with a view to releasing as many of the lands as can be safely returned without interfering with the public limits of selection, and also for the maps of actual final location, on the receipt of which letter a further reduction may be made.

Acknowledge the receipt of these instructions by mail, giving the date of their reception at your office.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
Commissioner.

(A copy of same and same date sent to register and receiver at Stephens Point, La Crosse, Menasha, Superior, and Hudson, Wis.)

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 13, 1856.

REGISTER and RECEIVER, Duncan, Mich.:

By my telegraphic dispatch of the 30th ultimo you were requested to suspend from sale and location until further orders the following-described lands in your district, to wit:

All the lands in your district in the southern peninsula between range 1 west and 14 west, and south of township 36; also in the northern peninsula all the lands north of township 39 and west of range 19 west.

The object of this withdrawal was to protect from sale the lands falling within the probable limits of the grant to the State of Michigan for certain railroads, by a bill just passed both Houses of Congress, which having been approved by the President on the 3d instant, and published in yesterday's Union, has this day become a law.

I have therefore to request that you continue the reservation of these lands as heretofore ordered until otherwise directed.

Acknowledge the receipt of these instructions by mail, giving the date of their reception at your office.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
Commissioner.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 9, 1857.

REGISTER and RECEIVER, Red Wing, Minn. Ter.:

By telegraphic dispatch of the 7th ultimo, you were required to suspend from sale or location, until further orders, all the lands in the following-named townships, to wit:

North of the base line and west of the fifth principal meridian, townships 111 of ranges 15, 16, and 17 west; townships 111, 112, 113, 115, of ranges 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 west; townships 111, 112 north, of ranges 28, 29, 30, 31 west.

The object of the above suspension or withdrawal is to protect from ordinary sale and location, so far as they can be described by townships, all the offered lands falling within the probable line of routes under the grant to the Territory of Minnesota by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1857, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in that Territory, and I have to request that you will continue the aforesaid withdrawal from sale or location until otherwise directed.

Acknowledge the receipt of this by mail.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOS. S. WILSON,
Acting Commissioner.

[Extract from annual report of Commissioner of General Land Office for 1854.]

At the instance of many members of Congress and others, about 31,000,000 of acres in several of the landed States have been withdrawn from market in anticipation of grants for railroad and other internal improvements; as such grants were not made, it was deemed expedient to restore these masses of lands to market, especially in view of the passage of the bill graduating the price of the public lands, and this has been done, except where the reservation was for a fixed period or grants have already been made.

The withdrawals in Iowa covered nearly two-thirds of the entire State and were made by the then Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Hendricks, and the urgency was so great that not only were they made ten days before the final approval of the granting act, but they were made by telegraph. The effect of them was not only to prevent settlement so long as they remained in force, but they also prevented the consummation of entries already begun by settlement and filing. These withdrawals were enforced for many years, impeding settlement, and benefiting the railroad companies to the disadvantage of actual settlers.

Similar action was taken by Mr. Hendricks and his predecessor in the case of grants in Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Minnesota, nearly always in advance of the passage of the bills making the grants, and always before definite location. In several of the orders the perfection of pre-emption entries already begun, based upon actual settlement, was prohibited. It was the railroad company, and not the settler, in which the Democratic party was then interested, and such preference has continued to the present time.

The official statement of facts confirming all that I have said in this connection is found in Senate Document 170, Forty-ninth Congress, being the response of Mr. Sparks, then Commissioner of the General Land Office, to a resolution of the Senate.

The total amount of lands withdrawn by Democratic administration previous to 1861, for the benefit of railroad companies, is shown by the Commissioner's report to be as follows:

	Acres.
1853–'54. Withdrawals for grants that were never made	31,000,000
1856. Two-thirds of the State of Iowa in anticipation of railroad grants	23,000,000
1855. Anticipatory withdrawals in Louisiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Mississippi	50,000,000
1856–'57. Anticipatory withdrawals in Florida, Alabama, and Minnesota	28,000,000
Total	132,000,000

These anticipatory withdrawals were exclusive of the final withdrawals on lines of definite location, which may or may not have included, but were not restricted to, the same lands, and which were:

FOR FORTY-SEVEN RAILROADS PREVIOUS TO 1831.

	Acres.
Granted lands	30,000,000
Indemnity lands (1½ times more)	45,000,000
Total Democratic withdrawals prior to 1861	207,000,000

Or more than the entire volume of all the grants made for railroads both before and after 1861.

In 1856 the volume of railroad land grants in Alabama, Florida, Michigan, and Wisconsin aggregated 9,660,395 acres, as follows (Land Office Report, 1865):

	Acres.		Acres.
Florida Railroad	281,984	Flint and Pere Marquette	513,000
Florida and Alabama	165,688	Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon	552,515
Florida, Atlantic and Gulf Central	37,583	Grand Rapids and Indiana	855,000
Pensacola and Georgia	1,275,212	Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis	805,816
Alabama and Florida	394,420	Wisconsin Railroad Farm Mortgage Land Company	40,049
Selma, Rome and Dalton	460,700	St. Croix and Lake Superior	843,000
Coosa and Tennessee	68,000	Branch to Bayfield	565,000
Mobile and Girard	505,000	Chicago and Northwestern	550,000
Alabama and Chattanooga	460,000	Total	9,660,395
South and North Alabama	440,000
Coosa and Chattanooga	60,000
Port Huron and Lake Michigan	37,428
Jackson, Lansing and Saginaw	750,000

To secure favorite railroad companies in these four States in premature, unearned, and unacquired possession of grants amounting to 9,660,395 acres, Mr. Hendricks, by an arbitrary and unlawful order, prohibited pre-emption entries over an area embracing 40,000,000 acres. (Senate Executive Document No. 170, first session Forty-ninth Congress. See also orders of withdrawal already cited.)

These are pregnant instances of the paternal care with which Democratic administrations favored land-grant railroad companies against public rights and interests and of the supreme domination that railroad companies exercised over Democratic administrations of the General Land Office and Department of the Interior in the early days of the railroad land-grant system. Invented by Democratic legislation, that system grew and expanded under the fostering care of Democratic officials, which appear to have hesitated at no step and to have refused no demand required by corporate assurance or inspired by corporate greed.

Not only did these administrations lock up an aggregate of lands rivaling the superficial areas of all the thirteen original States of the Union for the benefit of the forty-seven Democratic railroad land grants of the ante-bellum period, but they hastened to convey to railroad companies the legal title to great quantities of public lands embraced within granted and indemnity limits before any road had been constructed and far in advance of the progress of construction, and in many instances where no road was ever built.

These Democratic railroad granting acts gave in each case outright 120 sections, or 76,800 acres to each road, before a dollar had been spent by the companies or a stroke of work done. The title absolutely vested to 76,800 acres in each railroad company receiving the grant, whether any road was ever built or not, and the law provided that as fast as each section of 20 miles of road should be built another 120 sections of land might be sold by the grantee company, and so on, the law giving the land 20 miles in advance of construction continually. This was to provide means at public expense for building the roads for the companies, without requiring the companies to put their own money into construction. But the Democratic administration was worse than the Democratic statute. These administrations, conspicuously the administration of Commissioner Hendricks, certified almost at once the greater portion of the lands all along the lines of the roads without regard to the limitation of 120 sections for each 20 miles, and before any road had been constructed or completed.

Indemnity lands were also conveyed in bulk, in the same way, without evidence of right to receive indemnity, without even an assertion of losses on which an indemnity right could be based, and before it was known whether any losses had occurred, and before any right to indemnity had been acquired. (See Land Office Reports 1885–'87).

The ascertainment of quantities was upon an equally erroneous basis. The practice was to multiply the alleged length of the located line as if upon a plane surface by the full area of the number of sections granted, and after conveying the vacant lands in place, to then convey in bulk a sufficient amount of indemnity lands to cover all deficiencies. The true rule has been repeatedly determined by the courts to be that the grant must be taken according to the actual acreage upon the ground, and indemnity should be allowed only for the reasons and to the extent authorized by the terms of each grant. The difference between the two systems of adjustment would equal from 20 to 25 per cent.

In many other cases the original companies sold out their franchise to construct and operate railroads, retaining the land grant as a consideration for the sale. The roads have been built by said successors without aid of the subsidy, whilst the lands are frequently at this date held by the original corporation, as several States by their Democratic Legislatures conferred these land grants upon said original parties, with the condition of exemption from taxation until sold, and great hardships have thereby been occasioned. Several instances of this now exist in Minnesota. Lands are to-day exempt from the ordinary State burdens because held by the original grantees, who sold out their franchise, but retained the lands without themselves building a foot of road.

The Democratic care that "speculating" settlers should not get lands within 15 miles of a proposed railroad was well supplemented by the action of that party upon the homestead bill. In the last hours of the Thirty-fifth Congress, in the Senate, the House bill to secure homesteads to actual settlers was set aside by the Democratic majority in order to take up the bill for the purchase of Cuba. Mr. Seward stated the issue in the following words:

One, the homestead bill, is a question of homes, of lands, for the landless freemen of the United States. The Cuba bill is a question of slaves for the slaveholders of the United States.

In the Thirty-sixth Congress the same bill again passed the House, receiving the vote of every Republican, and having cast against it the vote of every Southern member (including three gentlemen now members of this body and one who has recently been appointed to the Supreme bench). In the Senate the bill was amended so as to be less completely a homestead measure by, among other changes, requiring a payment of 25 cents per acre by the homesteader at the time of making his final entry. In this shape it was opposed by every Southern Democrat. Mr. Buchanan promptly vetoed the bill, partly on the ground that Congress had no constitutional authority to give away the public lands (he had already signed bills giving to railroads more than 30,000,000 acres of those very lands) and partly because "it may introduce among us those social theories which have proved so disastrous in other countries." The next Congress being Republican, the bill was again passed and Mr. Lincoln signed it, not being afflicted with the constitutional and other objections which had induced its veto by Mr. Buchanan.

DIFFERENCE IN GRANTS BEFORE AND AFTER 1861.

Great stress is often laid upon the fact that the earlier grants were made to States while the Pacific Railroad grants were made to corporations.

The distinction is illusory. All the grants were made for the benefit of railroad companies, and railroad companies obtained the lands in every instance. The State was a mere naked trustee, without use or benefit, and bound to transfer the lands on demand of the corporations.

A difference that might be advantageously drawn in favor of grants to corporations directly, instead of through State mediums, is that corporations created by Congress can be controlled by Congress and the public donation better guarded than can be done when the corporations are protected by State charters, and the Congressional control for all purposes excluded. This is the practical fact, although the reason for making trans-continental grants to corporations was, chiefly, that the roads passed generally through Territories instead of States, and the undertaking was national in scope and not limited to State boundaries.

Deceptive charges are also made against the Republican party founded upon a contrast, at the present time, between the amount of lands embraced in grants made prior to 1861, and the amount granted after that date. Such charges ignore the vast differences between the enterprises undertaken at the different periods, and the total difference in the conditions of locality and construction.

The earlier grants were made in settled States, embracing towns, cities, and villages, where interstate communication was already established, where a demand for railroad facilities already existed, and where the means of construction were at hand. There was no need for most, if any, of these grants. The roads could have been built without them, as far as, and further than, they were constructed prior to 1861, and as a rule it may be confidently asserted that none were built then or thereafter until construction was profitable without the aid of any land grant.

In numerous instances, as, for example, the Cedar Rapids and other roads in Iowa, the Southwestern and other roads in Missouri, the Alabama roads, the Arkansas roads, the Florida roads, the Louisiana roads, and largely throughout the entire list of distinctive Democratic grants, considerable portions of lands were sold by the original companies as soon as certified, and the roads wholly, or in great part, were left to be completed, if at all, by some succeeding corporation that had little if any benefit from the grant.

These early grants thus fell into two divisions—first, those that, like the Illinois Central, were for roads that paid from the start and needed no Federal assistance; and, second, those that were not constructed until they would pay without the grant, and in these cases the lands were very generally, if not always, sold and the proceeds appropriated by original State transferees who built but few miles, or none at all, of the roads for which the grants were ostensibly made.

The grants of the later period were for roads in wild, unsettled country, where construction was an untried and hazardous experiment, and where the necessity for trans-continental communication was of infinite national importance. The inauguration of the Pacific Railroads was a potential factor in saving the Pacific States and Territories from European invasion and from the wiles of the Confederacy during the late war.

As a financial proposition the saving to the Government in the transportation of troops and supplies for its border and Indian service exceeded the subsidies granted, while in a still larger economic sense the opening of the vast solitude between the Missouri River and the coast range of the Pacific Slope to civilization and improvement outweighed beyond comparison the then present or ever prospective value of the Federal donation.

The Supreme Court of the United States, construing the Pacific Railroad acts (91 U. S., 79), thus refers to the causes which led to the Pacific Railroad grants:

> In construing an act of Congress we are not at liberty to recur to the views of individual members in debate nor to consider the motives which influenced them to vote for or against its passage. The act itself speaks the will of Congress, and this is to be ascertained from the language used; but the courts, in construing a statute, may with propriety revert to the history of the times when it was passed, and this is frequently necessary in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of particular provisions in it.
> Many of the provisions in the original act of 1862 are outside of the usual course of legislative action and can not be construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it was passed. The war of the rebellion was in progress, and, owing to the complications with England, the country had become alarmed for the safety of our Pacific possessions. The loss of them was feared should the complications result in open rupture; but even if this fear were groundless it was quite apparent that we were unable to furnish that degree of protection to the people occupying them which every government owes to its citizens. It is true the threatened danger was happily averted, but wisdom points out the necessity of making suitable provision for the future.
> This could be done in no better way than by the construction of a railroad across the continent. Such a road would bind together the widely separated parts of our common country and furnish a cheap and expeditious mode for the transportation of troops and supplies. If it did nothing more than afford the required protection to the Pacific States, it was fit that the Government, in the performance of an imperative duty, could not justly withhold the aid necessary to build it, and so strong and pervading was the opinion that it is by no means certain that the people would not have justified Congress if it had departed from the then settled policy of the country regarding works of internal improvements and charged the Government itself with the direct execution of the enterprise.
> This enterprise was viewed as a national undertaking, for national purposes, and the public mind was directed to the end in view rather than to the particular means of securing it. Although this road was a military necessity, there were other reasons active at the time in producing an opinion for its completion besides the protection of an exposed frontier.
>
> There was a vast unpeopled territory lying between the Missouri and Sacramento Rivers which was practically worthless without the facilities afforded by a railroad for the transportation of persons and property. With its construction the agricultural and mineral resources of this territory could be developed, settlements made where settlements were possible, and thereby the wealth and power of the United States largely increased; and there was also the pressing want, in time of peace even, of an improved and cheaper method of transportation of the mails and supplies for the Army and the Indians.
> It was in the presence of these facts that Congress undertook to deal with the subject of this railroad. The difficulties in the way of building it were great, and by many intelligent persons considered insurmountable. Although a free people, when resolved upon a course of action, can accomplish great results, the scheme of building a railroad 2,000 miles in length over deserts, across mountains, and through a country inhabited by Indians jealous of all intrusion upon their rights was universally regarded at the time as a bold and hazardous undertaking.

The pertinent distinction between the Pacific grants and the earlier State grants is that good cause existed for the former, and that every acre so granted has returned its value by the thousand-fold, while no good reason existed for the early State grants and no national benefit has ever been derived from them.

Again, the distinction which marks State and Congressional supervision and illustrates the difference between Republican and Democratic administration is exhibited in the manner by which grantees were placed in possession of granted lands under the two systems.

As already shown, the Democratic administrations of the executive department of the Government approved lands to the States largely in advance of construction, leaving the Government to bear the loss of a failure to build the roads.

Under grants to corporations, administered by Republican officials, not an acre of land has ever been conveyed to a single one of these corporations until fully earned by construction, and this is equally true of State grants made since 1861.

The total amount of land certified or patented to or for railroad companies up to June 30, 1887, was as follows:

To States for railroad corporations	36,582,573.53
To corporations direct	13,163,141.74
Total	49,745,715.27

The grant for the Pacific roads was urged and supported by State Legislatures, the press, and by public men all over the country, without distinction of party. The support of the Democratic party was pledged to the measure by the Democratic national convention at Cincinnati in June, 1856; by the Douglas wing at Charleston and Baltimore in June, 1860, and by the Breckinridge wing at Charleston and Baltimore in June, 1860. (Public Domain, pages 266, 267.)

Legislative measures to this end had been urged from 1850, and various bills were at different times introduced, considered, and favorably reported upon by Congressional committees prior to 1861. The first proposition for a money subsidy to construct these roads was made in a bill reported to the Senate in 1858, under the administration of James Buchanan. (Ib., 266.)

As early as 1845 Senator Douglas had proposed a land grant of alternate sections for 40 miles in width on each side of a line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and a grant to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa to connect Lake Erie with the Pacific line at the Missouri River. (Ib., 265.)

The Pacific corporation grants were non-partisan when made. They received the votes of leading Democrats in both Houses of Congress, and afterwards received the steady support of leading Democratic Senators and Representatives, including such names as William R. Morrison, of Illinois; James Brooks and Fernando Wood, of New York; Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, and the late Vice-President Hendricks.

The vote in the Senate on the passage of the Union and Central Pacific Railroad act of 1862 included such Democrats as Cowan, Davis, Kennedy, Latham, McDougal, Nesmith, Rice, Stark, Willey, and Wilson, of Missouri, in favor of the bill. There were only five votes against the bill, namely, Howe, King, and Wilkinson, Republicans, and Pearce and Wright, Democrats.

Of the Democrats who voted for the bill in the House were Allen, Biddle, Brown, Clements, Corning, Delaplaine, Edgerton, Haight, Hall, Leary, Menzies, Noell, Perry, Price, Rollins, of Missouri; Steele, Ward, and Webster; while of Republicans against it were Babbitt, Baker, Blair, Brown, Buffinton, Chamberlin, Cobb, F. A. Conkling, Diven, Dunn, Harregon, Kellogg, Lovejoy, of Illinois; McKnight, Justin S. Morrill, Morris, Pike, A. G. Porter, of Indiana; Shanks, Sheffield, Thomas, Wadsworth, Walton, A. S. White, and Woodruff.

The act of 1864, extending and enlarging the privileges of the grant, was vigorously supported by leading Democrats, among them Baldwin, Brooks, of New York; Coffroth, English, of Connecticut; Kalbfleisch, of New York; Julian, of Indiana; Knox, of Missouri; Morrison of Illinois; Myers, Odell, of New York; Ross, of Indiana; J. B. Steele, W. G. Steele, and Sweat.

The Northern Pacific Railroad bill, passed May 31, 1864, was supported and voted for by the following Democrats in the House of Representatives: Allen, of Illinois; Baldwin, of Missouri; Boyd, Coffroth; Eden, of Illinois; Eldridge, of Wisconsin; Heall, King, Knapp, Lazier, McAllister, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Pruyn, J. B. Steele, W. G. Steele, Sweat; Voorhees, of Indiana, and Ward.

Of Republicans who voted against the bill were Messrs. Alley, of Massachusetts; Baxter, Eckley, Elliott, R. E. Fenton, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Littlejohn, Morrill, Orth, Pike, Pomeroy, Schenck, Scofield; Spalding, of Ohio; Tracey, E. B. Washburne, Wardsworth, and Wilson, of Iowa.

In the Senate the bill passed without opposition, receiving the support of the Democrats in that body, including Mr. Hendricks, who spoke in its behalf.

The Atlantic and Pacific grant passed the same way. There was not a vote against it in the Senate; in the House many leading Democrats supported it, and some leading Republicans opposed it.

The Texas and Pacific grant was passed by the Senate without a division, not a Democrat voting against it. In the House it received the support and votes of Archer, Axtell, Beck, of Kentucky; Bethune, Booker, Buck, Connor, Corker, Dockery, Dox, Duke, Hambleton, Hamill, Hamilton, Heflin, Johnson, Jones, Manning, McKenzie, John Morrissey, Mungen, Meyers, W. W. Caine, Schumaker, Shober, J. S. Smith, Strader, Swann, Trimble, of Kentucky; Wallace, Wilson, and Young, all Democrats.

SWAMP LAND GRANTS.

But, Mr. President, Democratic prodigality never began nor ended with grants to railroads.

The swamp land grant by the acts of 1849 and 1850, and the extension of these acts by the acts of 1855 and 1857, mark the most unique and extensive scheme for exhausting the public domain that distinguishes both Democratic legislation and Democratic administration.

The ostensible purpose of the grant was to enable the several States to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands within their limits. That it was at once used for the purpose of sweeping into collusive private possession, through State medium, vast bodies of the public domain, with no intention of carrying out its professed objects, is evidenced by the alacrity with which selections were made, irrespective of the non-swampy or agricultural character of lands claimed, and the further fact that neither then nor since has any other object than land possession been achieved under the operations of the act.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report for 1887, says:

Many of the States transferred their claims to the counties, and the proceeds have been used for the construction of roads, bridges, public buildings, and almost every purpose other than that intended by Congress. Other States have disposed of the lands in large quantities for a small consideration, or granted them to railroad and other corporations. But a small proportion of the proceeds has been applied to the reclamation of the land, and the purposes of the grant have generally been ignored and defeated.

All this has made the grant a prolific source of fraud and corruption. Personal interest has prompted the grantees of the States to exert all possible means to swell their claims, and their plans have been made largely successful by the aid of a loose administration of the laws.

Agents undertake the prosecution of the claims upon commissions, amounting in some cases to 50 per cent. of the proceeds, and, invested with authority to represent the State, make selections of land or file claims for indemnity, which they insist is due the State, and manage to enlist the Representatives of the State in support of their demands. They have thus succeeded in carrying their selections through and obtained patents, or money indemnity, for many tracts of land which are as valuable for agricultural purposes, or for timber or minerals, as any in the United States, upon the alleged ground that the same are rendered unfit for cultivation by reason of their swampy character or liability to overflow.

In 1886 he said:

Most of the States having the original grant under the acts of 1849 and 1850 made selections in the early years following the acts of all lands then claimed as swamp, including lands not swamp, to such a degree that Congress was called upon to confirm the selections as made, and in 1857 an act was passed for this purpose. Notwithstanding the exhaustive selections originally made, and the confirmation of selections that ought never to have been made, some of the States have since 1860 largely increased their original claims, and additional claims are still being presented.

There is little or no evidence to show that the lands conveyed to the States under this grant have ever been appropriated to the purposes for which the grant was made. The contemplated levees do not appear to have been constructed from the avails of the granted lands; the lands do not appear to have been reclaimed as a result of the grant; but the purposes of the grant would seem, generally at least, to have been totally defeated.

In some instances the lands have been sold in bulk for a trifling consideration; some of the States have given the grant to railroad corporations; in other cases the lands are sold to speculative purchasers in advance of selection; in still other cases contracts are entered into, as I am informed, by which the parties making the selections and securing the approval of lists are understood to receive a perceatage as high, in some instances, as 50 per cent. of all that can be obtained from the United States, either in land or cash indemnity. The transferees, or advance purchasers, as the case may be, or the contracting agents, or their attorneys, armed with the authority of the State, appear before this office and Department in the character of State agents, make selections in the name of the State, insist upon their approval as the dues of the State, and array the influence of State representations in support of the demands of what has thus become corporate and private speculation. It is through such means, and not by the States themselves as sovereign commonwealths, that the additional and exaggerated claims have been presented under the swamp-land grant. It is not surprising that swamp-land and swamp-land indemnity claims have been greatly augmented when the incitement of corporate and personal interest has been made a factor in the instrumentalities of swamp selection and the preferment of indemnity claims.

The latter arise under the acts of 1855 and 1857, which give to the States the value at Government price of lands embraced in the swamp-land grant of 1850, which, after that date and prior to 1857, were sold by the United States. It would be presumed that the amount of swamp and overflowed lands unfit for cultivation in 1850 sold by the United States and purchased by individuals between 1850 and 1857, at a period when settlers and purchasers had their choice of the best lands in most of the States, would be very small; but claims for cash indemnity, based upon the alleged swampy character of lands pre-empted and otherwise purchased from the United States between 1850 and 1857, have already been allowed to the amount of nearly $1,400,000, and land indemnity has further been allowed to the amount of 572,000 acres; and such claims at the present time are more freely presented and more importunately urged than at any previous period. Efforts have also been made to induce Congress to extend the indemnity provisions so as to allow indemnity for lands sold by the Government between 1857 and the present date.

Indemnity is now claimed for numerous tracts of land which were sold as agricultural between the years 1850 and 1857, the "State agents" alleging recent discovery that the lands were swamp in 1850. These claims threaten substantially the mass of agricultural land sold by the United States between those dates. If foundation existed for such claims to any great extent, it must be supposed that the settlers of that day chose swamp lands instead of arable lands for farming purposes; that the early pioneers, who went to the border line of civilization to make homes upon public lands, deliberately selected and purchased swamp and overflowed land, "rendered thereby unfit for cultivation," in preference to good agricultural land, which was then abundant, and which they could have taken at the same price.

When the swamp-land act was passed in 1850, the then Commissioner of the General Land Office, in response to a resolution of the Senate, known as the Corwin resolution, reported that the amount of the proposed grant was "a fixed and ascertained amount," and would equal about 5,000,000 acres. That statement is repeated in the General Land Office report for 1886. Previous to 1861 upwards of 57,000,000 acres had been selected and claimed, chiefly prior to 1857, and so generally had these selections embraced well-known dry and cultivable lands that the beneficiaries of the grant obtained the passage of an act in that year making a wholesale confirmation of the illegal and fraudulent selections. The total amount of swamp claims filed up to July 1, 1887, was 77,407,273 acres, equivalent to the combined area of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, although the provisions of the grant apply only to fifteen public-land States admitted into the Union prior to 1860.

The following table from official reports shows the present surveyed areas of the swamp-land States, the amount of land selected and claimed under the grant, and the amount thus far actually approved:

Name of State.	Surveyed area.	Selected.	Approved.
	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.
Alabama	33,462,115	514,642.47	414,310.31

Arizona	39,704,639	349,836.19	129,325.67
Total		77,407,273.16	58,820,368.16

From the foregoing it is seen that one-fourth of the entire area of Arkansas has been selected and claimed under the grant of swamp and overflowed lands "rendered thereby unfit for cultivation;" that one-half of the entire area of the State of Florida, and two-thirds of the surveyed lands in the State, including, as developed by official investigations, some of the best and driest lands of the State, have been appropriated under this act, with 7,000,000 acres of unsurveyed lands, embracing the chief swampy areas, still to be heard from; that every tenth acre of the prairie State of Illinois and one-eighth of the swampless State of Iowa are so claimed; that nearly one-half of the State of Louisiana has been seized under cover of the swamp-land grant; that one-fifth of Michigan, one-ninth of Mississippi, one-ninth of Missouri, and one-eighth of Wisconsin have become the prizes of this piratical act, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office states that there is no cessation in the continued presentation of those claims.

It is apparent that swamp claims will not end so long as the United States holds any public lands in swamp-grant States, and the agents for claimants under the States can purchase or procure the pro forma affidavits upon which good agricultural lands are swept into the maelstrom of swamp-land grants, while the rapacity with which cash and scrip indemnity is claimed for alleged swamp lands sold or disposed of by the United States need not be expected to be satisfied until the value of all the lands disposed of by the Government during the period in which the indemnity provision operates or may be extended shall have been taken from the Treasury under contracts with agents and attorneys receiving in some cases as high as 50 per cent. of the plunder for their services in "securing the allowance of indemnity claims." (See Land Office Reports 1886, 1887.)

The total amount of land thus far patented or certified under this grant, as shown by the foregoing table, is 58,820,368 acres, a quantity larger by 10,000,000 acres than all the public land of the United States that has yet been patented or certified to States and corporations for railroad purposes.

Previous to 1861 the amount of land embraced in swamp-land selections in the five public-land States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi, and mainly confirmed to these States under the act of 1857, was 35,311,548.07 acres, as follows (Land Office Report 1861):

	Acres.		Acres.
Alabama	479,514.44	Louisiana	11,318,317.95
Arkansas	8,652,432.93	Mississippi	3,070,645.29
Florida	11,790,637.46
Total			35,311,548.07

Here were 35,000,000 acres added in a lump to the slave plantations of the South under one act, passed as a Southern Democratic measure ostensibly for public purposes and appropriately administered by Democratic officials as an ingenious and gigantic scheme of public land spoliation, with the sanction and validation of a Democratic Congress through its confirmatory acts. We have the evidence of the late Democratic Commissioner of the General Land Office that swamp-land selections, as a class, embrace the most desirable agricultural lands, including the "entire body of lands in the vicinity of rivers and creeks," notoriously the choicest farming lands of the country (Land Office Report, 1886). We have also his testimony, if it were needed, to supplement the common stock of general information, that the lands obtained under cover of the swamp-land grant have generally been disposed of by the direct beneficiaries of the Government "in large quantities for a small consideration." (Land Office Report, 1887).

OTHER DEMOCRATIC DISPOSALS OF PUBLIC LANDS IN THE SOUTH.

The States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi contain a combined area of 160,000,000 acres, as follows:

	Acres.		Acres.
Alabama	32,462,080	Louisiana	26,461,440
Arkansas	33,406,720	Mississippi	30,179,840
Florida	37,931,520
Total			160,441,600

Prior to 1861 public lands had been disposed of in these States, approximately, in round numbers, as follows:

	Acres.
Cash sales, including public and private sales, sales under the graduation act, sales of Indian lands and sales by pre-emption, etc.	45,000,000
Swamp-land grant	35,000,000
Railroad grants	11,000,000
Military bounty land-warrant locations	5,000,000
Private and miscellaneous grants and claims	5,000,000
School grants	4,500,000
Private extinction of permanent Indian reserves	3,000,000
Internal-improvement grants	2,500,000
Total	111,000,000

Of the 111,000,000 acres of public land disposed of by the Government in the five Southern public-land States prior to the war over 50,000,000 acres were embraced in the swamp, railroad, and other State grants; 20,000,000 acres in Indian lands, mostly obtained in large bodies at small cost; 25,000,000 acres were sold under the graduation acts at prices ranging chiefly from 12½ cents to 50 cents per acre, and the remainder was embraced in miscellaneous donations and in cash sales at minimum Government rates.

In this manner the demand for new lands to replace those worn out by slave labor was met at the expense of the public domain.

DEMOCRATIC DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS BY MEANS OF FRAUDULENT PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

If time permitted, I should be glad to devote a few moments to the results of Democratic administration in the matter of private land claims in Louisiana, Florida, Missouri, and California. I can only say, what the record fully proves, that special and irresponsible tribunals were created, the functions of which appear practically to have been to foist upon the United States the confirmation of all manner of private claims to the public domain. No machinery was provided and no appropriation made for the adequate defense of the United States. Claimants alone were heard, and unless some adverse private claimant appeared in any case there was little or no resistance to demands of any character. The United States was a fat goose to be plucked by all comers, and the chief service of Government officials under this system seems to have been to apportion the spoils. The Louisiana, Missouri, and Florida claims were confirmed in bulk by Democratic Congresses upon the reports of such commissions, and public lands were passed to private claimants by leagues in extent with less consideration and debate than evoked by appropriations for the pay of an additional clerk, messenger, or laborer in the Executive Departments.

The results of Democratic private land claim legislation are conspicuously apparent in the wholesale confirmations made in 1858 and 1860 of vastly exaggerated grant claims in New Mexico. The laws of Mexico authorized grants of not exceeding 4 square leagues (about 17,000 acres) for town settlements or pueblos; 1 sitio, or fractional part thereof (a sitio being about 4,400 acres), for individual grants, and not exceeding 11 square leagues (about 44,000 acres), for colonization grants. The great majority of claims rest upon sitio and fractional grants, many of them for only sufficient land to plant a few fanegas of wheat, and yet, by two acts of Congress, passed December 22, 1858, and June 21, 1860, no less than 55 grant claims were loosely confirmed, in general phrase, which, upon settlement according to the confirmation, were found to embrace a total of 8,202,110 acres.

A table of the grants and areas embraced in these confirmations appears in the Land Office Report for 1885, from which it is seen that the act of December 22, 1858, confirmed twenty-two town and pueblo claims, ostensibly for the benefit of the inhabitants, aggregating 1,060,375 acres, and including the pueblo of Acoma, confirmed for 95,791.66 acres, or more than five times the quantity ever granted to pueblos by Mexican authority; the pueblo of San Felipe, confirmed for 34,766.86 acres, or twice its legal quantity; the pueblo of Santo Domingo confirmed for 74,743.11, or four times its granted area; the pueblo of Isleta confirmed for 110,080.31 acres, or six times its normal quantity; the town of Tome, confirmed for 121,594.53 acres, or seven times more than granted; the town of Casa Colorado, confirmed for 131,779.87 acres, or nearly eight times more than allowed by the laws of Mexico; the town of Chilili, confirmed for 41,481 acres, or two and a half times more than the town limitation, and the town of Belen, confirmed for 194,663.75 acres, a quantity more than eleven times greater than the lawful area of such grants.

The act of June 21, 1860, comprised thirty-three individual claims designated merely by their numbers "as reported by the (Democratic) surveyor-general," and aggregating 7,141,734.19 acres in this single act, without mention in the act of the names of grantees, or any exhibition of the quantity of land so confirmed. The House Private Land Claims Committee on April 2, 1860, in recommending the confirmation of those claims, stated that the "area of but five of them is either stated or estimated. Whether the other claims embrace a less or a greater amount is not and can not be known from the documentary evidence of title forwarded by the surveyor-general. The grant in each case refers to some stream, hill, mountain top, valley, or other natural object for boundary." (See House Report 321, pages 180, 182.)

This broadcast confirmation embraced the notorious "Maxwell" land-grant of 1,714,764 acres, conveniently veiled in the act of confirmation as claim number "fifteen;" the "Sangre de Christo" grant in New Mexico and Colorado, designated in the act simply as claim number "four," but embracing in reality, as subsequently discovered, over a millon acres; the claim of Preston Beck, jr., confirmed simply as number "one," but being actually for 318,699.72 acres; the Tierra Amarilla, confirmed as number "three," 594,515.55 acres; and the claims confirmed as "numbered from twenty to thirty-eight," both inclusive, "as reported" by the aforesaid Democratic surveyor-general, including the "Las Vegas" claim, so confirmed for 496,446.96 acres, and its duplicate under an alleged grant of the same land, so confirmed for 496,446.96 acres more; the "Cañon de San Diego," 116,286.19 acres; the town Anton Chico, 378,537 acres, which became the property of an individual as a result of this confirmation; the "Mora" grant, embracing 827,621.01 acres as blindly confirmed; the "Armendaris" grant, 447,535.18 acres, and other smaller claims with areas ranging below 100,000 acres.

Yet every one of these grants were limited and restricted under Mexican laws to an area which at most could not exceed 44,000 acres to a claimant, and it is very doubtful if many of them were of the class entitled to even that area.

The Republican administrations of the Government, succeeding to the legacy of these confirmed claims and to the ministerial duty of recording their results, vainly attempted to interpose checks upon the fruition of the schemes which had crystallized into "vested rights" by virtue of Democratic legislation.

Secretary Cox in 1869 sought to limit the final survey of the Maxwell grant to 22 square leagues, or about 97,000 acres, but the Supreme Court of the United States in 1876 construing the act of June 21, 1860, in the Tameling case, held that "the confirmation being absolute and unconditional, without any limitation as to quantity, must be regarded as effectual and operative for the entire tract as reported by the surveyor-general."

It had already been settled by the court "that such an act passes the title of the United States as effectually as if it contained in terms a grant de novo." This decision necessarily governed the patenting of the Maxwell grant, for which Republican officials have been ignorantly condemned.

The last act in confirmation of such claims by the Democratic Congress which expired March 4, 1861, was the act of March 1, 1861, confirming claim number "43" in the report of the surveyor-general, this being the "Ortiz Mine" grant, so called, embracing, as confirmed, 69,458.33 acres of mineral land.

It is well known that the Mexican Government never granted mineral lands, and the present Democratic surveyor-general of New Mexico, in his report for 1887, speaking of the needless confirmation of this claim, says:

> In the case of the Ortiz Mine claim I think no grant was ever made. It was invented by the surveyor-general, and made legal by the hasty act of Congress confirming it.

And again, referring to the wanton and shameful surrender of public lands to the rapacity of monopolists, he says:

> I have already referred to the Ortiz Mine grant, in which Congress was induced to unite with the surveyor-general in squandering upon private parties over 69,000 acres of exceedingly valuable mineral land which the Mexican Government never granted.

FALSE DEMOCRATIC CLAIMS AS TO RESTORATION OF LANDS TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

In view of these facts it is not surprising that the present Administration should seek to divert attention from the past record of its party by a pretended exhibit of virtue in the matter of restoring forfeitable granted lands to the public domain and in such superior administration as would prevent frauds under the settlement laws.

For this purpose the Commissioner of the General Land Office has recently put forth an official statement, which has been printed in circular form at the public expense and for general distribution, and which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,

The above statement has been compiled from the official records of the General Land Office.

S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Commissioner.

A brief analysis of the foregoing "statement" is sufficient to expose its utter falsity.

In the Land Office Report for 1887 (page 113) the items are given which make up the aggregate of 2,108,417.33 acres, classified in this statement as "lands in granted railroad limits restored." These items are as follows:

Lands in granted railroad limits restored.

Name of road.	Location.	Acres.	Remarks.
Southern Pacific	California, within forfeited limits of Texas and Pacific Railroad	550,000.00	Commissioner's decision April 4, 1885; affirmed by Secretary of the Interior November 2, 1885.
Atlantic and Pacific, from San Buenaventura to San Francisco, Cal.	California	1,500,000.00	Commissioner's decision July 13, 1886; affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior March 23, 1886.
Northern Pacific	Washington Territory.	32,400.00	Commissioner's decision September 13, 1886; affirmed by Secretary of the Interior October 18, 1886.
Sioux City and St. Paul.	Iowa	26,017.33	Commissioner's recommendation February 17, 1887; affirmed by Secretary of the Interior September 12, 1887.
Total		2,108,417.33

Now let us see precisely what lands were actually restored to the public domain in the cases and by the decisions and action above referred to, and how much and to whom the credit, if any, should be given.

1. The Southern Pacific and Texas and Pacific roads had a joint grant within conflicting limits where the former road crossed the route of the latter, both grants having been made on the same day and by the same act of Congress (16 Stats., 573). The rule of the Department and of the courts in such a case is that each road takes a moiety.

Congress, by act approved February 28, 1885, before Mr. Cleveland took office, forfeited the Texas Pacific land grant. Commissioner Sparks construed the act as forfeiting so much of the earned lands of the Southern Pacific Railway Company as lay within the common limits. This is not the law, but even if it is the credit belongs to Congress and a Republican administration.

The next item which goes to make up the list of alleged restored lands is 1,500,000 acres on the projected line of the Atlantic and Pacific road in California, between San Buenaventura and San Francisco.

The Commissioner held that the act of Congress did not make a grant for that portion of the line. This was an inheritance, not a discovery, the circuit court of California having previously so held, and the lands were moreover embraced in pending forfeiture proceedings before Congress which had been commenced under the prior (Republican) administration, and which were consummated a few months after the departmental decisions were made.

The third item going to make up this total of "restored" lands is the claim that 32,400 acres in Washington Territory were "saved" by adhering to a former ruling of the Department made under Republican administration. No lands were, however, saved in this instance, for what the railroad company lost by rectification of line on one side it gained on the other.

The last item of alleged "restoration of lands in railroad granted limits" is the claim of the recovery of 26,017.33 acres which were surrendered by the State of Iowa. As the proceedings to this end were begun under the administration of Secretary Teller and Mr. McFarland, and merely completed in due course under the present Administration, there is no original virtue in this claim.

The 2,108,417.33 acres claimed to have been restored to the public domain from railroad granted limits under this Administration is therefore in truth and in fact reduced to a very intangible minimum.

The second claim of "lands actually restored to the public domain" is placed under the head of Congressional forfeitures, footing up to the asserted aggregate of 28,253,347 acres.

On September 8, 1887, Commissioner Sparks reported (Land Office Report, 1887, page 113) that the total of Congressional forfeitures since March 4, 1885, was 6,849,760 acres, being the lands of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company forfeited by act approved July 6, 1886. No act of forfeiture has been passed by Congress since the date of that report, yet Mr. Stockslager, in his official campaign document, asserts that Congressional forfeitures since March 4, 1885, amount to 28,253,347 acres, or 21,403,587 acres more than reported by Mr. Sparks for the same period of time. Where does this difference of more than 21,000,000 acres come from? Not from acts of Congress, for, as already stated, no forfeiture acts have since been passed. Has Mr. Stockslager gathered up all the legislative acts passed under Republican administrations previous to March 4, 1885, and feloniously appropriated them to the credit of the present Administration? It would seem that this is precisely what he has done, since the aggregate of the forfeitures previous to March 4, 1885, amount to 21,358,720 acres, or substantially the increase made by Mr. Stockslager over his predecessor's statement.

The only other alternative is to suppose a deliberate falsification of the official estimates reported by Commissioner Sparks.

Now let us see exactly what has been done under Republican and under Democratic administrations in the matter of the forfeiture of railroad land grants.

The first forfeiture act was passed July 14, 1870, declaring the forfeiture of the grant of 1856 for the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad in Louisiana, covering a nominal area of 967,840 acres.

By bill of June 15, 1874, the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad grant in California, embracing 320,000 acres, was declared forfeited; and the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad grant in California, embracing 200,000 acres, was declared forfeited by the act of April 15, 1874. The act of July 24, 1876, declared a forfeiture of lands granted to the State of Kansas for the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company, the original grant being estimated at 260,000 acres.

The next railroad forfeitures under Republican administration were those of the Forty-eighth Congress, preceding the present Administration, and embraced the forfeiture of the Oregon Central Railroad grant (act January 31, 1885), 810,880 acres, the forfeiture of the Texas and Pacific Railroad grant (act February 28, 1885), 18,500,000 acres, and the forfeiture of the Iron Mountain Railroad grant in Missouri (act June 28, 1884), 300,000 acres.

Legislation, in accordance with the recommendation of President Arthur, proposing the forfeiture of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad grant, embracing a nominal area of 23,871,360 acres, but an estimated actual area of about 6,000,000 acres, was first introduced, and in both Houses of Congress, in 1884. Each House passed a bill, but on account of differences upon details no agreement was finally reached. But in the Forty-ninth Congress the bills were reintroduced in the House, as before, by Representative PAYSON, of Illinois, a Republican, and the result was a final passage of the bill July 6, 1886.

The one original forfeiture act of Democratic inspiration, passed under the present Administration, is an act of forfeiture only in name, it being an act passed February 8, 1887, which confirmed to the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company (a land and not a railroad company) of Louisiana, successor to the land grant for the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad, about 1,000,000 acres of good public land. This confirmation was urged and carried through upon the recommendation of the Democratic Secretary of the Interior. It settled a long and troublesome controversy. The gain, however, was to a knot of private speculators, and not to the Government.

The act of July 10, 1886, introduced into the House by Mr. PAYSON, for the forfeiture of the grants of seven small roads in the Southern States, operated only to remove a cloud from the title to the lands originally covered by the grants; but as no road had ever been built, and the lands had long since been disposed of by the Government, there was practically no restoration of lands as a consequence of its passage.

It is a fact worthy of mention that during the twelve years of Democratic control of the House of Representatives no bill forfeiting railroad grants introduced by a Democrat ever passed that body, all such having been introduced and pressed to passage by Republicans, and all, since 1881, being the work of Representative PAYSON, of Illinois. All bills forfeiting railroad grants have had Republican initiative and been passed as the result of Republican interest and endeavor.

1887.—New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad. No lands actually restored under this act.

NOTE.—This was an act of confirmation by which the claim under the railroad grant of about 1,000,000 acres was confirmed. A nominal forfeiture was declared of a portion of the lands within railroad limits east of the Mississippi River, aggregating 140,000 acres, but as none of these lands belonged to the United States there was no restoration of them to the United States.

1886.—Tuscaloosa and Mobile Railroad, Mobile and New Orleans Railroad, Elyton and Beards Bluff Railroad, Memphis and Charleston Railroad, Savannah and Albany Railroad, New Orleans and State Railroad, Iron Mountain Railroad, of Arkansas. These forfeitures were nominal; no lands restored; no road ever having been built and the lands having been sold by the Government. The bill was introduced and pressed to passage by Mr. PAYSON.

The account current stands as follows:

But during the period covered by the term of the present Democratic Administration the Republican Senate has vainly endeavored to secure the passage of an act forfeiting the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad in Oregon and Washington Territory, being the lands on the unconstructed Columbia River line, and the lands on the then unconstructed branch line through the center of Washington Territory, aggregating 9,000,000 acres, and also of the unearned lands within the limits of these Democratic railroad land grants in Michigan.

The Democratic House steadily refused to adopt the Senate proposition on the pretext of desiring a forfeiture along constructed as well as unconstructed portions of the road, and thus defeated the passage of any act of forfeiture until the company has now completed its branch line and placed the lands on that line beyond the reach of Congressional action. These lands, embracing the great coal-fields of Washington Territory and three and one-half million acres of desirable agricultural and timber lands, might have been saved to the Government by an acquiescence in the Senate proposition of forfeiture, but the Democratic majority of the House would not assent to it, and thus defeated forever the forfeiture proposed and urged by the Republican minority in Congress.

Let me emphasize this further. There was no open contention, at least, that the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company should not be forfeited. Public sentiment demanded it, and there was no suggestion even that Congress had not ample legal power for the purpose. The Senate, as I have said, passed a bill for the accomplishment of this purpose, and to cover the apparent reluctance of the House to forfeit unearned lands unless it at the same time forfeited those earned by construction after the date named in the granting act included a proviso that the forfeiture of the unearned lands should not be taken as confirming the right of the company to the lands it claimed as having been earned, or as limiting the right of Congress to forfeit them if it should thereafter see fit to do so. The Senate practically said to the House: "Let us join hands in doing that which everybody (except the railroad company, of course) professes to wish to have done, and which we have undoubted power to do, leaving the exercise of what is at best a doubtful power as to earned lands to come up in a separate bill and as a separate proposition, which you can send to us at any time. The status of the earned lands can not meanwhile change, while that of the unearned is changing every day by reason of the construction of more road, whereby the company creates at least a claim of right to them."

But the House declined the proposition. No bill was passed. The company took advantage of the delay, built its branch line from Wallula to Tacoma before Congress again assembled, and thus "earned" and became entitled under the decision of the Supreme Court to 3,500,000 acres of valuable lands which would have been saved if the House had acceded to the Senate proposition.

There is evidence that this experience is to be repeated in the present Congress. The Senate has passed a bill forfeiting all unearned lands heretofore granted to States or corporations for railroad purposes, saving the right to make further forfeiture, as in the bill passed in the last Congress, making a thorough and final clean-up of land grants made under both Democratic and Republican administrations. This bill will forfeit at least 5,000,000 acres of the Northern Pacific grant, besides considerable quantities of land in Michigan, Wisconsin, and California. The House has amended the bill so as to forfeit earned lands as before, and the subject is now in conference.

The Supreme Court has over and over decided that earned lands are not subject to forfeiture. To pass a bill forfeiting them would not only be illegal and without useful result, but it would be an invitation to settlers to go upon the lands thus claimed to be forfeited, subject them to the loss of money and time, which would inevitably come when the purchaser from the railroad company finally prevailed, and leave the Government subject to a just claim for the damage which had resulted from the disaster to which the settler had been invited by legislation. The non-action of the House in the last Congress has already cost the Government the loss of 3,500,000 acres of land, as before stated. Continued non-action will produce similar results. It is proper to inquire if this is the intention. It is quite certain, at all events, if this non-action is long persisted in, there will be no forfeitable lands left among those granted, whether by the Democratic grants of 1856 or the Republican ones of 1864. It is sufficiently evident that, up to date, Democratic ascendency has not brought any legislative forfeitures of railroad land grants. That party has simply confirmed 1,000,000 acres to a Southern railroad and refused to forfeit 9,000,000 acres of the Northern Pacific grant, and perhaps half as much more in other grants above mentioned.

The next item in the "campaign list" of Commissioner Stockslager is "railroad indemnity lands restored, 21,323,600 acres." Indemnity limits, established either by law or executive order, are areas within which railroad companies might select lands to make up for losses within granted limits. As has heretofore been shown, it was the practice of Democratic administrations to withdraw lands in bulk, cutting off all settlement and other entries until the railroad company had obtained full satisfaction of its claim. This finally drifted into a withdrawal of a small area adjoining the grant on each side. As soon as the grant was satisfied, the indemnity lands remaining were all restored to market. This was the performance of a merely administrative duty, as simple as the issue of a patent to a settler in due course. In this way a number of grants had been finally settled under Republican administrations, the indemnity lands restored and the account closed. But unless the Land Office was corrupt or negligent, even if the indemnity lands were not formally restored, they could never go to the railroad company beyond its legal rights, but remained the property of the Government in a state of reservation, so that the formal opening of them to settlement, which is what is meant by the word "restoration," did not necessarily "restore" anything to the Government which it did not already have.

Even if the term "restoration" had anything but this Pickwickian meaning, yet the results claimed by Mr. Stockslager are conspicuously fallacious and untrue. He obtains his aggregate of lands "restored" by classing as lands taken from the railroads and subjected to general settlement all odd sections within the withdrawn limits. Whereas a very large portion thereof (about 50 per cent.) were either disposed by the United States prior to the railroad grants or from natural causes are deficient upon the ground. In other words, these acres did not exist for the order to operate upon. And of the remaining moiety, the railroad companies are shown in the official pamphlet published by Secretary Lamar, and entitled "Railroad Indemnity Withdrawals," to have exhibited a shortage of over 20,000,000 acres, and to have either selected years ago all of said remaining moiety in satisfaction of that shortage, or were allowed additional time to complete selections before pretended restorations should become operative. The matter is, however, conclusively disposed of by the fact that by the express terms of said alleged orders of "restoration" all applications of settlers to enter the lands embraced therein were to be "held subject to the claim of the company, of which claim the applicant must be distinctly informed, and memoranda thereof entered upon his papers." So that the avowed purpose of the pretended orders of "restoration" was not to open a road to the acquisition of settlement titles to lands so recovered to the Government as to be subject to clear disposal, but rather to invite settlers to an interminable lawsuit with powerful corporations whose claim to the lands is declared in the invitation to be paramount.

Early in the Forty-ninth Congress it became evident that there was a "play" going on between Commissioner Sparks, of the General Land Office, and his superior, the Secretary of the Interior, whereby the ordinary processes of adjustment of land grants were being impeded and the interests of the railroads subserved. One of the favorite measures of the Commissioner, and which he heralded in his annual reports for 1885 and 1886, as comprehending a "recovery" to the public domain of 10,000,000 acres of public land, was what he styled a "rectification of the lateral limits of railroad land grants."

He asserted that a greater quantity of land had been included in the withdrawals than were embraced in the grants, which alleged excess he estimated as averaging 500 acres per mile. In his report for 1885 he said:

> The total length of constructed and unconstructed land-grant road for which withdrawals have been made exceeds 20,000 miles. At an average rate of 500 acres per mile, the aggregate area of overdrawn lands will amount to 10,000,000 acres, which vast amount has hitherto been treated as the absolute property of the corporations, but is in fact public land of the United States, recoverable to the public domain.

Here was a splendid promise of land saving well calculated to impress the country with the conviction that the Land Department was in safe hands under the Administration.

The decision which the Commissioner rendered in pursuance of his theory was, of course, appealed to the Secretary by the railroad company which was thereby threatened with loss. Meanwhile all adjustments of land grants were suspended, settlers were complaining that they were prevented from going upon lands unnecessarily held for indemnity, and a grave suspicion arose that in some way a game of battledore and shuttlecock was going on between the Commissioner and Secretary which meant profit to the railroads and loss to the public. To meet this condition of things Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, a Republican, introduced into the House a bill requiring the Secretary of the Interior to proceed forthwith in the adjustment of unadjusted land grants, and providing means whereby lands which had been or should be improperly conveyed to or for the benefit of railroad companies might be recovered. This bill finally became a law March 3, 1887. Although only requiring in the matter of land-grant adjustment what the law already authorized, and what had already been practiced by former administrations, it seems to have been the means of accelerating the work of the Interior Department somewhat, for within a week after its passage the Secretary decided the case so long before him on appeal from the Commissioner heretofore referred to, involving rectification of withdrawal limits. The Commissioner was, of course, overruled, it being neither the first nor the last decision by the Secretary which gave to railroads their entire claim upon public lands. The adjustment provided by the act did not, however, proceed with very great rapidity, for it was not until the August following that any order was issued revoking indemnity withdrawals with a view to final accounting. Meanwhile the railroad companies had had ample notice of the proposed action and had selected every possible acre of land within indemnity limits.

The whole of this claim of "railroad indemnity lands restored," so far as it relates to action initiated by the Department or to any of the steps taken or things done by this Administration, is void of foundation. A law of Congress became necessary to compel the Interior Department to proceed promptly to adjust land grants and restore unearned lands to the public domain so that they could be taken by actual settlers; it was passed, was hesitatingly obeyed, has not yet been wholly complied with, and the railroads were shown every possible favor under it. The fact is that the dilatory action of the Department, coupled with the favor shown the railroads in the matter of selections, enabled the companies to select practically all the lands within indemnity as well as within granted limits, and it is doubtful if even so much as 1,000,000 acres of land were actually restored even nominally as the result of departmental action. But whatever of good followed the passage of the law is due, not to the Administration, but to Congress and to the initiative and work of Republicans in that body.

The next item is that of 576,000 acres, claimed to have been restored from withdrawal on account of a private land claim in New Mexico. This is known as the "Nolan grant," which was settled some years since by Congress, and the release of the lands from withdrawal was a mere ministerial duty following the legislative act, to be performed whenever the question of their disposition rose. The actual restoration was, therefore, effected by prior legislation, and not, as the public would be led to believe, by the executive acts of the present Administration, even if it had the power to usurp legislative functions.

The next item of claimed "restoration of lands to the public domain" exhibits an assumption of public ignorance which may be proper as applied to the Democratic party.

This is the statement that 27,460,608 acres of land have been "actually restored" from the cancellation of "entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber-land laws, canceled in the regular course of examination and proceedings in the General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes."

The gross misrepresentation in this paragraph does not consist alone in the guess-work of aggregate amount, which, being incapable of verification, may, for the same reason, be thought to be incapable of authentic rebuttal, and therefore safe from exposure, but consists, first, in the assertion that such cancellations are a consequence of the "regular course of examination and proceedings in the General Land Office," which implies official scrutiny and the exercise of judgment and discretion in official action; and, second, in asserting that the result of such cancellations is a "restoration" of this great body of public lands to public entry.

It is well known that the major part, certainly not less than 90 per cent., probably more nearly 99 per cent., of all the cancellations recorded in the General Land Office for the past eight years are cancellations on "voluntary relinquishment."

Usually this means that the entryman has sold his improvements to an intending settler who enters upon the land at once, and it therefore never goes even formally "back to the public domain." No one but the purchaser gets the benefit of the cancellation of the entry, and therefore there was no, and could be no, actual restoration to the public domain. But suppose that the entryman abandoned without sale to a succeeding settler; the land became again subject to entry without any affirmative action of the Land Office, which might just as well claim the credit for the early and latter rain which falls upon the lands of the Government as well as those upon those of the settler, as to claim that it had "restored" lands to which the title was already in the Government, and which, having been delivered into the possession of a settler, he had of his own volition abandoned.

Whether, therefore, the volume of cancellations or relinquishment amounts to 27,000 acres or 27,000,000 acres in a given period adds nothing to the efficiency or merit of the conduct of the Land Office and nothing to net results of administrative action.

It is rather an evidence of the extent to which the present Administration has discouraged and extinguished settlement claims.

A certain but comparatively small proportion of entries are always and necessarily canceled "in the regular course of examination and proceedings in the General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes," chiefly as the result of individual contests; but these seldom imply a "restoration" to the public domain. They imply simply that of two claimants to a tract of land one is adjudged to have a better right, and the entry of the losing party is canceled, usually, however, saving his right to make another entry elsewhere.

The annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1887 lets the cat out of the bag completely as to the false pretense of these alleged restorations. He says:

> Under the timber-culture laws relinquishments of entries and the making of entries for the purpose of selling relinquishments is a business of great magnitude and an unqualified abuse of the privilege of the laws. The same tracts of land are entered and relinquished over and over again. Generally in each case a new entry is filed simultaneously with the presentation of a relinquishment of the former; and the process goes on indefinitely. Meanwhile the lands are held from settlement and remain uninhabited, unimproved, and uncultivated.

The comment upon this subject made in a recent issue of the New York Tribune is too good to be lost and makes the exposure complete:

> The Commissioner then cites a number of examples from the official records. In one case the same 160 acres in Nebraska had been "entered" six times and "relinquished and canceled" five times in the last eight years, four of the entries and three of the relinquishments having been filed under the present Administration. In another case, in Dakota, 160 acres had been "entered" and "relinquished and canceled" five times. It appears that the ingenious but not ingenuous Democratic mathematicians have taken these and thousands of cases and counted each of them as many times as they were "relinquished and canceled" according to the record. In this way the same 160 acres would figure as 800 acres if five cancellations had been recorded, and the two specific cases cited would yield an aggregate of 1,600 acres to be credited to the "reform Administration." Could anything be more false or misleading than a "statement" based on such calculations?

Given a sufficient number of "cancellations" for a multiplier, and the same quarter section would yield Stockslager's total of 27,460,608 acres. Now, everybody knows that "General" Sparks was a more energetic, fearless, and industrious "reformer" than Stockslager, but Sparks declared officially that between the 1st day of April, 1885, and the 30th of June, 1887, 2,197 entries only were canceled, embracing 351,520 acres. If Stockslager's "statement" were true, he would have investigated, examined, reviewed, adjudged, and canceled about 169,000 entries in the short period covered by his own incumbency, which began only about eleven months ago. Sparks assaulted Congress frequently and violently for an increase of force upon the plea that his clerks had disposed of the stupendous number of 1,559 cases, representing in the neighborhood of 249,440 acres—probably less—in one year; hence it follows either that the present accomplished and versatile Commissioner had, with the same force, canceled somewhere near 169,000 entries, or as many in eleven months as Sparks, by his own showing, could not have succeeded in doing in a less period than one hundred and eight years.

Upon Stockslager's "statement" and other equally trustworthy data supplied by him was based the land plank in the St. Louis platform.

Can a cause be otherwise than unjust which requires to be bolstered by such palpable falsehoods as this claim to virtue and devotion to public duty on account of this alleged "restoration" of 27,460,608.74 acres of land to the public domain?

The next item in this catalogue of Democratic virtues is the claim to having saved to the public domain "invalid State selections" (internal improvement and swamp) 968,747.52 acres. So far as the rejected school selections are concerned, there can be no possible saving. If a State makes a selection of school lands which is disapproved for any reason, it makes another. The net result to the public domain is exactly in acres what it would have been if the first selection had been approved. As to swamp lands selected and claimed by the various States to whom such lands were granted, it has for years been the policy to reject all such as were for lands in the prior possession of settlers and to such as settlers had located upon before the State selections were approved. In following the precedent set by Republican administrations of the General Land Office the Commissioner has done well. He might have gone further and made expiation for the original Democratic fraud in the passage of the swamp-land acts. What he now claims credit for is for ordinary diligence in seeing that the Government is not defrauded. In most cases, however, the Land Office will grant to the State indemnity for lands taken by settlers, so that the Government is not likely to gain in any event.

These items comprise the 80,690,720.59 acres which, it is alleged in this remarkable circular, have been "actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement." This claim is wholly false, as the foregoing analysis from official data abundantly proves. It is not only false, but fraudulent, as it was put forth with intent to deceive.

Under the head of "Recovery of lands recommended," in this Democratic bulletin, appear various recommendations made by Commissioner Sparks, which never went beyond the pigeon-holes of the Secretary's office, except, as in many cases, to be overruled by him, together with the quantity of lands embraced in various "buncombe" bills introduced in Congress every year, but which have never reached the dignity of practical legislative propositions, and the credit sought to be derived from such "recommendations" to restore 65,020,538.33 acres is a windy exhibit of impudent pretense.

The first item of 12,300 acres is not of sufficient moment to be examined. The second item of 1,500,000 acres is of lands claimed for the benefit of a railroad extending from Portland, Oregon, to Tacoma. The Commissioner of the General Land Office decided against the company. The Secretary reversed him and the company gets the land, and this reversal occurred before Stockslager's circular was issued. The "suits commenced for the recovery of land" have only been recommended by the Commissioner and not extensively concurred in by the Secretary. The ultimate authority in the Department has not yet passed upon these applications, and if he should approve and order suits he would only be obeying the direction of the land-grant adjustment act of 1887, heretofore referred to. But the great claim is on account of "railroad forfeiture bills before Congress," the assumption being that these bills have been "recommended." Recommended by whom? By the President? His only recommendation on this subject was contained in his message of December, 1886, in which he said, referring to the outstanding unearned land grants made to aid in building railroads:

A faithful application of the undiminished proceeds of the grants to the construction and perfecting of their roads, an honest discharge of their obligation, and entire justice to all the people in the enjoyment of their rights on these highways of travel is all the public asks, and it will be content with no less.

It will be observed that Mr. Cleveland does not want earned lands forfeited at all, and only wants unearned lands turned over to somebody who will complete the railroads. Has the Secretary of the Interior recommended these forfeitures? Not at all. Who, then, did do the recommending which cuts so large a figure in Mr. Stockslager's circular? Why, the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, put out under circumstances of special indignity. The Administration has actually crawled under his skirts in order to hide its own delinquencies and to claim virtue on the public-land question. Two-thirds of these lands have been earned by the construction of road, and so, according to the Supreme Court, are non-forfeitable. But if the Department thinks these lands should be restored to the public domain, why does it not restore them? The first section of the land grant adjustment act of 1887 is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court, each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and heretofore unadjusted.

Under this section it is the duty of the Secretary to immediately adjust all outstanding land grants, giving to the roads what he thinks them legally entitled to under the decisions of the Supreme Court, and restoring the remainder to the public domain. If the companies think they ought to have more than the Secretary gives them their redress is in the courts, where this question must finally be tried. Action by Congress is not at all needed, but the Secretary of the Interior, under the stress of a pending political campaign, permits to go out this claim based on the recommendations to him of a disgraced and deposed subordinate, while he is himself responsible, if the recommendations are based upon law and justice, for carrying them into effect, and has the means at hand for that purpose. If Congress were to declare a forfeiture in compliance with these discredited recommendations the companies affected would take their claim to the courts, and undoubtedly prevail. If the Secretary decided against them they would do the same thing. Therefore, the Secretary does not act, but he is willing to have this claim to superior virtue go out to the country on behalf of his administration.

The "recommendations" are of a piece with the non-action of the last House of Representatives, calculated, if not designed, to prevent forfeitures, and thus actually in the interests of the railroad companies.

This latter theory finds ample support in the affirmative action taken by the Interior Department in the conveyance of lands earned after the date named in the granting act. All the acts making grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads named a time within which the roads should be completed, and provided that if they were not completed by the date named the lands granted should revert to the Government. The House of Representatives, under Democratic leadership and controlled by a Democratic majority, claims that no lands can be earned after the date of reversion named in the granting act, and so that no matter how much road may thereafter be constructed, it is always within the legal power of Congress to forfeit all lands opposite such portions of road as were completed out of time.

This is the theory the House proceeded upon in refusing to forfeit unearned lands unless the Senate would join it in forfeiting lands opposite portions of road completed out of time. This is the theory upon which the "recommendations" of Mr. Sparks were made and which are now paraded by Mr. Stockslager as evidence of Democratic virtue, and the echo comes from every Democratic speech in the country, the Secretary of the Interior himself taking up the refrain. On the other hand, the Supreme Court has decided that all road built before forfeiture, even if after the date named in the granting act, carries with it the right to lands opposite thereto. The Senate, yielding to the decision of the court as the supreme law of the land, declines to attempt what it knows can not legally be done, but asks the House to join it in doing the only legal and practical thing, that is, to forfeit lands opposite uncompleted portions of road. The House declines, nothing is done, the companies go on constructing road and thus putting millions of additional acres beyond the reach of forfeiture.

Meanwhile the Democratic Administration and the Democratic party denounce the Senate and the Republican party, and parade their own virtuous opposition to railroads involved in the proposition that lands can not be earned by the completion of road after the date named in the granting act. That this has for its design the prevention of the forfeiture of any lands, and thereby allowing the railroad companies to earn all remaining lands by the completion of their roads, is shown by the action of the Democratic Interior Department, which during the very period of time in which this controversy was going on between the House and Senate has conveyed hundreds of thousands of acres of land to various railroad companies, all of which were earned, if at all, out of time. Nearly 400,000 acres were so conveyed last year to a single railroad corporation, the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad Company.

This is a Democratic land grant, having been made June 3, 1856, to aid the company in building a road from St. Croix River to Bayfield, Wis. The time fixed for the completion of the road was May 5, 1869. None of the road was built prior to that date nor for many years thereafter, and it was not completed until 1883, fourteen years after the time named for that purpose in the granting act. Last year the company made application for lands on account of the completion of its road. The Commissioner of the General Land Office decided against them, but he was overruled by the Secretary of the Interior, who, after a hearing, in which the present Democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency eloquently argued the case in behalf of the railroad company, decided in an elaborate opinion that the company, having completed its line before the exercise by Congress of its right of forfeiture, notwithstanding all the work of such completion was done after the date named in the granting act for such completion, was as fully entitled to all the lands embraced within the limits of the grant as though the road had been completed in time.

This was the decision of Mr. Cleveland's first Secretary of the Interior, and his first appointee to the Supreme bench, but the responsibility was not that alone nor chiefly of Mr. Lamar, for the decision he rendered was dictated or at least concurred in by the determination of a Cabinet meeting, at which, of course, the President presided. This was also followed by the issuance of patents bearing the President's signature. The decision of the Secretary was a denial of the position of the Democratic House and an affirmance of that of the Senate. Thus it will be seen that a Democratic President has perpetrated what a Democratic House denominates "robbery of the public domain for the benefit of a railroad company." And yet the Administration is seeking retention in power on the false pretense that it is engaged in "recovering" lands instead of conveying them to railroad companies, and is availing itself of the falsehoods of the Stockslager circular as a means to that end.

The Secretary followed his decision in the foregoing case to its logical conclusion, and on the application of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company also conveyed to that corporation several hundred thousand acres of land on account of road built out of time.

If legislative non-action continues much longer the Democratic Interior Department co-operating with the railroad companies will have removed all occasion for the forfeiture of railroad land grants by absorbing all that remains.

It may be mentioned, in passing, that the quarrel between the Secretary of the Interior and Sparks about the first-mentioned grant occasioned the removal of the latter. Sparks was determined to delay the certification of lands so they could not go to patent until after Congress had assembled, when he intended to secure the introduction of a resolution into the House which would stop the whole proceeding.

The Secretary heard of this, and put sufficient force at work in order to have the certification completed before the assembling of Congress, so that no impediment should be put in the way of the acquisition of this great body of land by the railroad company. But meanwhile Sparks was dismissed, and while the patents did not actually issue until after Congress met, the backbone of opposition to "railroad robbery of the public lands" had been broken by Sparks's deposition, and the leading Democratic members of the House who had been associated in the public prints with the project of a resolution to stop the issue of patents seemed to find discretion the better part of valor, and the subject was allowed to drop; but the howl about "Democratic land reform" seems to continue louder than ever, perhaps with intent to conceal from public notice the action of the Democratic Administration.

The narrative of performance under the head of "private land claims" is of the same pretentious character. Congress has been recommended to reject certain private land claims. While a confirmation by Congress is legal and effective, a rejection by Congress of a private land claim would not be conclusive or even detrimental to the final allowance of the claim by its courts where its validity must finally be determined. As I have heretofore shown, such of the private land claims as have been confirmed were so done by Congress under Democratic rule. Since that time Congress has practically confirmed no private land grants, and none, not even the best and most satisfactorily proven, could be got through in that way, even with the favorable recommendation of the Commissioner. In due time Congress will create a tribunal to confirm or reject all such claims as may be outstanding, according as they may be shown to be good or bad. The "recommendation" of the Commissioner is, therefore, superfluous, to say the least.

Concerning the last item in the Commissioner's circular, that of "lands forfeited in Oregon and recommended for recovery under grants for military wagon-roads, 2,368,320 acres," it is only necessary to say that early in the last Congress the Senate passed a bill directing suit to be brought to set aside the certification made to the State of Oregon for these lands. The title having passed from the United States can only be vacated and the land restored to the Government by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. The House did not act on the Senate bill, and it fell with the close of Congress. At the present session the Senate has again passed the same bill, but up to date it has not received action in the House. After the passage of the foregoing bill the second time in the Senate the President sent to Congress a message recommending the forfeiture of the same lands, apparently having overlooked the action of the Senate. His recommendation is somewhat belated at the best, but the necessity for something on which to base a claim that this is a reform administration perhaps warrants the unscrupulous use made of it.

There is not a material statement contained in Mr. Stockslager's circular which is not false in fact.

Something, of course, had to be done to make performance apparently equal promise. Great things had been declared as certain to result in the way of land reform if only the Democracy were brought into power. It is not in evidence that the President has or had any sympathy with the kind of land reform the Democratic party talked so much about before the election. Quite the contrary, as his message hereinbefore quoted and his subsequent actions show. But all the clamor made could not be permitted to go for naught and acknowledged to have been without basis. So Mr. Sparks was appointed Commissioner of the General Land Office, a person who knew nothing whatever about the public-land system and had no special qualifications for the discharge of the legitimate duties of the place. But he was suspicious, querulous; a man who could, on paper at least, make mountains out of mole-hills, and who possessed one especial qualification for the performance of what was expected of him—he thoroughly hated the Republican party and all its works.

As might have been expected, Mr. Sparks first voided his malice on the settlers of the West and Northwest, in whose acquisition of a quarter-section each of the public land he saw evidence of fraud, and all of whom he treated, so far as in his power, as thieves. Nothing in the history of the Government has been more outrageous than the persecution of frontier settlers under Mr. Sparks's administration. It has been claimed for him that he was sincere, but misguided; but how he could have been sincere while venting his spleen on settlers, and at the same time winking at the acquisition by speculators of millions of acres of valuable lands in the South, I leave to those who defend him to determine. He could not have been more sectional and discriminated more largely in favor of the South if he had been Jeff Davis himself. He made furious onslaught on the swamp-land act and its administration, but his illustrations were all drawn from comparatively infinitesimal fraud which he claimed to have found in Oregon, Minnesota, and Iowa, ignoring completely the immense frauds which he well knew to exist in Florida, Arkansas, and the other Southern swamp-land States. It may be said in his favor that he made many decisions against railroad companies affecting their rights to lands; but they were promptly appealed from and as promptly revoked by the Secretary of the Interior. He filled the newspapers with accounts of what he was doing in the way of reclaiming public lands from railroad companies, and the Administration claimed and got the credit. It also saved its bacon with the companies through the action of the Secretary, and the companies and the Administration took good care that the newspapers should not be filled with accounts of the Secretary's action in their favor.

The Secretary represented the President; what he did was the act of the President, and therefore final. The arrangement between Sparks and the President was therefore practically what Frederick the Great said existed between him and his subjects. "They say what they please; I do what I please." No exception was taken to Sparks's claims in the newspapers concerning lands "restored to the public domain," nor to his oppression of the helpless settlers. They were chiefly in the Territories and in Republican States; they were isolated, poor, and could make no noise loud enough to be heard in the national arena, while the railroad companies could contribute, as they already had, to campaign expenses and control significant votes in the doubtful States. And thus the sham contest went on between Commissioner and Secretary; but the latter finally became weary at the necessity for so much overruling, and the former, becoming nettled at the impatient expressions of the Secretary, took issue with him concerning the effect of a decision by which he had been overruled in his efforts to "restore" about 400,000 acres of land to the public domain claimed by the St. Croix and Lake Superior Railroad Company, heretofore referred to. This was too much for the Secretary. The settlers were nothing, but when the sacred "rights" of a railroad company to public lands were touched, not formally but in earnest, it was too much, and Sparks's head rolled in the basket without a moment's delay. And thus ended Sparks; but the false pretenses of the Administration did not die with him, for the "recommendations" which he made, and which were either overruled or pigeon-holed, are made the basis of claim to reform in the administration of the public-land system. Paraphrasing a declaration made in the Chicago convention which first nominated Mr. Cleveland, they "love Sparks for the recommendations he made."

During the delivery of Mr. PLUMB's speech as given above,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the special order, which is the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

Mr. STEWART. I ask that that may be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Kansas concludes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the special order be laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PLUMB concluded his speech as already given.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me that I may give a notice?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] contains statements that I had not expected him to make in regard to the public lands of the country. I prefer, however, to see the speech in print before replying, and I give notice that at an early day I propose to address the Senate upon the same subject, and in reply to the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

AWARDS UNDER MEXICAN TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN. The special order set for to-day is Senate bill 994, relative to the case of the Weil claim against Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that I had an agreement with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is absent from the Senate and has been for some days, that I would not call up that bill in his absence, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be made a special order for this day week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the special order laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock may be made the special order for this day week at 2 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desired to make his remarks this morning upon a bill relating to the public lands, and I yielded to him in the morning hour when I had the right to the floor upon the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I respectfully ask the Senate to allow that resolution to be called up in the morning hour to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been already made. The resolution will be called up in the current morning business to-morrow.

MONUMENT OF BURGOYNE'S SURRENDER.

Mr. EVARTS. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. HALE. For what purpose?

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senator to yield for a moment. If it shall take time, of course I will not press the bill I wish to call up.

Mr. HALE. I yield for a moment.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3460) to appropriate $10,000 for the completion of the monument commemorating the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed, and, if there be no objection, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the text of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "State Department," on page 1, line 8, after the words "salaries foreign ministers," to strike out:

And to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of salaries of ministers, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $5,661.04.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 3, to insert:

Salaries, chargés d'affaires ad interim: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of salaries of chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887, $2,053.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 19, to insert:

Contingent expenses United States consulates: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of contingent expenses of United States consulates, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $519.44.

M. Gwin), $84,862.68.

For reimbursement of the Chickasaw incompetent fund for moneys improperly disbursed from said fund, as ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, as required by Article IV of the treaty with the Chickasaws, dated June 22, 1852, $99,280.41.

The appropriation hereby made shall be a permanent and continuing appropriation, not subject to lapse or to be covered into the Treasury; and said sums shall be paid, from time to time, upon requisitions signed by the Chickasaw governor, national secretary, national treasurer, and auditor of public accounts; and the sum hereby appropriated shall be received in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States under Article IV of said treaty.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the last clause in the amendment:

And the sums hereby appropriated shall be received in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States under Article IV of said treaty.

I do not want to disturb the report of the Committee on Appropriations, especially as I am a member of it myself, but this clause seems to me to be in direct violation of a treaty that we made with the Chickasaws.

The Chickasaws claimed that the United States had illegally diverted from their funds portions of their trust money in the custody of the United States. The United States made a treaty with them in which they agreed to refer that matter to the Secretary of the Interior as an arbitrator, and stipulated that the award of the Secretary of the Interior should be final between the United States and the Chickasaw Nation.

That award is provided for in this amendment with the exception of an item of $56,021.49 to the assignee of W. M. Gwin. That item was awarded by the Secretary of the Interior under the treaty, which bound both parties to it as final. It is proposed by this amendment to strike that item out and then to insert a provision that if the Chickasaws take the rest they must take it in full satisfaction.

I will state the character of that item and then state what seems to me to be a fairer proposition than the one reported by the committee. The item is for attorney fees paid to William M. Gwin upon a contract he made with the Indians, with the approval of the Interior Department, which contract had been declared valid by a court. William M. Gwin was employed by the Chickasaws to investigate and search out the illegal appropriation of the trust funds of the Chickasaw Nation, and it was upon an agreement that he should have this sum of money, which the United States approved of.

William M. Gwin found out that between $200,000 and $300,000 of the trust funds of the Chickasaw Nation had been illegally diverted by the United States to its own use. The United States now agrees to pay that, but takes out of the trust fund the fee of William M. Gwin for bringing home to the United States its action in regard to this trust fund that was in its custody. It charges the expense of making itself restore the trust fund over to the cestui que trust.

The Secretary of the Interior in his award finds that the United States should make that fee good. The Committee on Appropriations object to that, and have stricken that out. Therefore, if the amendment in this form is adopted, we agree to be bound by the award of the Secretary of the Interior in part, but not in whole, and force the Chickasaw Nation to release all claim for anything more. I do not think that is right.

While there may be doubt enough about the propriety of having the United States make good the fund in this particular, and asking the Secretary of the Interior to reconsider that item, it is not fair, when we bound ourselves to stand by the award of the Secretary of the Interior, for us to go back on it. Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he permit the amendment to be modified by striking out the words:

And the sums hereby appropriated shall be received in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States under article 4, of said treaty.

And inserting:

Provided, That said payment to the assignee of William M. Gwin be referred to the Secretary of the Interior for reconsideration.

That leaves it undisposed of, but does not bind the Chickasaw Nation to take a less sum than the award.

Mr. HALE. I am inclined to think that it would be better to strike out the whole provision. This is an Old Settler, and we have never been able to get the other House to agree to it. The committee believed that it would not be able to get the other House to agree to it unless this attorney fee is stricken out.

Mr. Gwin, by a contract with the authorities of the nation, like a good many contracts of that kind, I suppose, took the case "on shares," and it was agreed that he should have a certain percentage of the amount recovered. That has been paid, and they want us to pay them for their attorney fees. The other House will never consent to that, and quite likely will not consent to any part of the clause. I am willing that all of the item shall be stricken out if this issue is to be raised on the attorney fee, which will kill it, rather than to lumber the bill with items which I am entirely convinced that we shall never get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose to amend the amendment?

Mr. DAWES. Of course the Senator from Maine will do as he thinks is his duty. I will say that this was a treaty made as long ago as 1852, and the claim was submitted a long time ago by the United States on the one side and the Chickasaw Nation on the other, in conformity with that treaty, to the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, and he made the award. We bound ourselves to consider it final. We have not been able, it is true, to get the award carried out just like the award made on the Choctaw case, which ultimately the Supreme Court of the United States decided, holding that an award made forty years ago was an absolute conclusive judgment against the United States. The Choctaws had been appealing to Congress for twenty-five years, and at last a judgment of the Supreme Court had to be rendered upon that award.

It may be that the House of Representatives will not listen to this claim; but we ought not to assume that, and my friend ought not to say that if I talk as I do about this clause he will strike the whole of it out.

Mr. HALE. I shall not strike it out, but the other House will.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator would let the appeal be made to the sense of right and justice and obligation of the House of Representatives before he yields to it. I submit that it is not right to say to these Indians, "You shall not have a dollar of the award unless you bind yourselves to give up $52,000 of it." All I ask is that the case be recommitted to the Secretary of the Interior for further consideration. I do not move the amendment if the Senator insists that he will have the whole provision stricken out.

Mr. HALE. No, I do not say that.

Mr. DAWES. I can not resist that.

Mr. HALE. I have not said I should have it stricken out. I have only pointed out to the Senator, who I know is seeking to do what he thinks is right, the additional danger that will come to the whole appropriation if the clause is changed as he proposes. I do not agree with him about it, but if he thinks it is wise to amend it, I do not object.

Mr. DAWES. When this matter was under consideration, of all the items that made up the award it struck me that the rules of equity upon which we bound ourselves to submit it to the Secretary of the Interior were as clear as anything could be, that the expense of restoring illegal appropriations of a trust fund by a trustee should not be paid out of the trust fund itself, but should be paid by the trustee.

Mr. HALE. We propose simply to restore these misappropriations exactly as they were misappropriated. The tribe made a contract with an attorney, who took the case, I suppose, on shares; and in addition to restoring the misappropriations they want us now to restore to them what they paid the attorney under that trade. I do not take the same view that the Senator from Massachusetts does. I do not think that is the most equitable part of it. I think the rest is equitable and that is not; and I am not in favor of paying that particular item, as we have ascertained heretofore that the conferees of the other House are not in favor of paying it, but I will take the instruction of the Senate and do the best I can with it.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the words I have indicated and to insert the words I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee's amendment, page 42, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words:

> And the sums hereby appropriated shall be received in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States under article 4 of said treaty.

And to insert:

> Provided, That said payment to the assignee of W. M. Gwin be referred to the Secretary of the Interior for reconsideration.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to ask who was the attorney who made the agreement?

Mr. DAWES. William M. Gwin.

Mr. DOLPH. The former Senator from California?

Mr. DAWES. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. When was the agreement supposed to be made?

Mr. DAWES. It was made forty years ago, when he was a practicing attorney in Mississippi, long before he won those great honors on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DOLPH. He was a Senator from California until he went into the rebellion.

Mr. DAWES. It was long before he went to the Pacific coast. I am confident that a good deal of the opposition to this item springs from prejudice against William M. Gwin that has grown up in the country, whether wise or unwise.

Mr. DOLPH. These services, then, were rendered before 1850, before he was a Senator of the United States?

Mr. DAWES. They were rendered while he was a private citizen. He was an attorney at that time. The matter was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, as all contracts with Indians had to be, and it was approved in advance. Then it went into the courts and the United States courts decided upon the legality of it. It is the legal fee, therefore, of the attorney of the cestui que trust seeking to get the illegal appropriation of trust-funds by the trustee restored. The Secretary of the Interior, to whom we submitted the claim and bound ourselves to abide by his award, awards that the United States should pay that.

Mr. HALE. Supposing the tribe would agree to pay their attorney the whole amount, would the Senator believe we ought to appropriate twice for it?

Mr. DAWES. When I agree to abide by the award of my own Secretary of the Interior I would not back out of it.

Mr. HALE. There was no agreement to abide by the award. The matter was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, as a great many things are, and they afterwards come before Congress, which has to appropriate the money.

Mr. DAWES. There was a binding covenant in the treaty of 1852 that the award of the Secretary of the Interior upon this item should be final between the United States and the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. DOLPH. What Secretary of the Interior made the award?

Mr. HALE. Secretary McClelland.

Mr. DOLPH. What was the amount of the fee?

Mr. HALE. Fifty-six thousand and twenty-one dollars and forty-nine cents. It was a share.

Mr. DAWES. It was an agreement that Mr. Gwin should have a certain sum.

Mr. DOLPH. What share of the amount was it?

Mr. HALE. I think at least 25 per cent., perhaps 30 per cent.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] made allusion to the prejudice which had grown up in the country against William M. Gwin, and suggested that the opposition to this claim might perhaps have in some way been derived from that prejudice. I think it due to ex-Senator Gwin—he having died and gone to another world—to say that there was perhaps no man in the United States who possessed a higher quality of character than Mr. Gwin. He was a friend of my forefathers and an associate and particular favorite of General Jackson. He was noted for all the elements of the highest manhood and the most distinguished virtues.

There was perhaps no man in the world who with a higher order of courage united a greater tenderness and kindness towards all humanity. He was a man of vigorous intellect, engaged in many adventures among the Indians and in foreign lands. He crossed the Isthmus, I think, some twenty times in the early days of California history and adventure. He was always prominent in everything that attracted the American mind; and in this matter, which was one of his early engagements, there is nothing whatever to cast any kind of reflection upon him.

He made a contract, as it appears from the Senate and House reports upon the subject, with these Indians to hold the Government of the United States responsible for the abuse, not by him of their confidence, but for the misuse of their money by agents of the United States who had been employed in the removal of these Indians and in the disbursement of the money which the United States had agreed to pay them. According to the custom of those days, he made a contract with them that he should be paid a certain proportion of this money, which was adjudicated by the Department and allowed to him.

These Indians claimed that they were the wards of the Government of the United States, and that the contract originally made between them and an agent, an officer of the United States Army, who was sent to remove them and pay their expenses, was abused, and the trust which had been reposed in the United States in their favor and for them was not executed by the United States and by its officers, but that a large amount of money claimed to have been expended for them was fraudulently expended, and that for that money the United States were properly accountable. They also claimed that for the fee for the lawyer or agent who was to prosecute their claim the United States were justly responsible, because it was the fault of the United States. It was trust-money, and having been misused, as the Government conceded it had been, and as the court decided it had been, the Indians claimed that the Government should pay the expense of the litigation.

That is the ground upon which this claim rests, and I think at the proper time, while it may not be expedient now to force this matter upon the committee, it is a very strong ground. It is that the Government of the United States is responsible for the costs of the litigation which its default, its negligence, has imposed upon its cestui que trust.

Mr. DAWES. I did not say anything in disparagement of Mr. Gwin.

Mr. CALL. Not at all. I do not impute that to the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. I could not understand why this particular item, more than the others, should be objected to. Therefore it was that I threw out that suggestion in reply to the Senator from Oregon. At first it was supposed that this was a fee earned by him while he was a United States official, but the decision of the court and the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior showed very clearly that there was no fault to be found with this contract. The only question is, when the agent of a trustee fraudulently diverts a fund and the cestui que trust is obliged to employ counsel to get it back, and you submit it as a question of equity to a tribunal, whether the trust fund shall not be made good for that item, and the tribunal decides that you ought to pay it, whether you shall do it. The question before us now is whether we ought to pay it after that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

SEC. 6. That for the payment of the claims certified to be due by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department under the act approved March 3, 1883, or under appropriations the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, being for the service of the fiscal year 1886 and prior years, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 252, Fiftieth Congress, first session, there is appropriated as follows:

For compensation of postmasters readjusted under act of March 3, 1883, payable from deficiency in postal revenue, 1886 and prior years, $70,038.42.

For deficiency in postal revenue, 1886 and prior years, $1,831.20.

Mr. HALE. In line 10 of the proposed section 6, "252" ought to be "253;" so as to read:

As fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 253, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

I move to so amend it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. On page 13, after line 9, I move to insert:

ELECTORAL MESSENGERS.

For the payment of the messengers of the respective States for conveying to the seat of Government the votes of the electors of said States and for President and Vice-President of the United States at the rate of 25 cents for every mile of the estimated distance by the most usual road traveled from the place of meeting of the electors to the seat of Government of the United States, computed for one distance only, for the service of fiscal year, $9,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 27 I move to strike out the clause from line 15 to line 21, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the clause on page 27 from line 15 to line 27, inclusive, as follows:

For payment on account of Army transportation, 1882 and prior years, as certified to Congress as due, by the accounting officers of the Treasury, in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session, namely: To the Hoboken Land Improvement Company of New Jersey, $15,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 29, line 17, after the word "therefrom," the words "in all" should be inserted. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 41, line 7, the committee amendment should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 7, after the words "two thousand," the Senate has stricken out "two hundred and seventy-six" and inserted "seven hundred and forty-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of expenses of depositing public moneys, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887, $2,749.72.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the vote by which this amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment will be regarded as disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HALE. On page 45, lines 7 and 8, I move to strike out "forty-one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight" and insert instead thereof "forty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-one."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 7, after the words "two hundred and," it is proposed to strike out "forty-one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight" and insert "forty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, being a deficiency on account of the fiscal year 1887, $242,271.21.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 49, after line 13, I move to insert:

For the payment of the widow of the late Chief-Justice Morrison R. Waite, this sum, being equal to the balance of his salary for one year, $8,745.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 57, line 7, after the words "Printing Office," I move to insert the words "for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888;" in the same line, before "thousand," to strike out the word "eighteen" and insert the word "twenty-five;" and at the end of the clause to add:

And the Public Printer is hereby directed to pay forthwith all persons for services covered by deficiencies for said years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Secretary to read, commencing on line 5, so as to show the context.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested, beginning in line 5.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the law granting fifteen days' annual leave to the employés of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888, $25,000; and the Public Printer is hereby directed to pay forthwith all persons for services covered by deficiencies for said years.

Mr. HALE. I have no further amendments from the Committee on Appropriations, but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has an amendment to offer from the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 53, I move to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, in the following words:

And for support of prisoners, United States courts, balance for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, $25,000.

And to insert:

For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, and transportation from place of conviction, being for the service of the fiscal year, 1887, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer an amendment to come in at the close of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be proposed by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. We are through with the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas proposes to amend the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. 7. That all the laws of the United States now in force respecting crimes and offenses be, and they are hereby, extended to and declared to be in force in the unorganized Territory bounded on the north by the States of Kansas and Colorado, on the west by the Territory of New Mexico, on the south by the State of Texas, and the east by the one hundredth degree of longitude west of Greenwich, for all the purposes of enforcing the laws of the United States in respect of crimes and offenses, and is annexed to and made a part of the district of Kansas, and the courts and officers of the said district connected with the administration of justice are hereby invested with all the powers and jurisdiction now by law existing in the said courts and officers in respect of crimes and offenses committed within the said district. The foregoing provision shall not be held or construed to abolish or in any wise impair any jurisdiction now existing in or possessed by any court of the United States respecting any crimes or offenses heretofore committed within the aforesaid Public Land Strip. And the circuit court of the United States for the said district of Kansas is hereby invested with jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all civil cases arising in the above-described public land district, or in respect of the inhabitants thereof in the same manner, under the same limitations, and with the same effect that the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico has within the Territory of New Mexico in respect of cases or persons arising or residing therein, and all the laws of the United States are hereby extended over said Public Land Strip, and for the purposes of the privileges and benefits of the land laws said Public Land Strip is hereby attached to the southwestern land district of Kansas, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause the subdivisional lines of townships in said Public Land Strip to be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service: Provided, That the public lands in said strip shall be subject to entry only by actual settlers under the homestead laws, excluding the commutation provided by section 2301 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PLUMB. I was instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer this amendment to cover an emergency which exists in regard to the strip known as No Man's Land. By some oversight that strip has not been included in any judicial district of the United States, and, while there are 6,000 or 7,000, or, perhaps, even 10,000, people on that strip, they have no means of protecting their rights to life or property, and no means of acquiring title to the lands on which they have settled.

A year ago last winter the Senate passed a bill which the House finally concurred in, which went to the President a couple of days before the adjournment of the session in March, but the President did not sign it. That bill is in substantially the terms of this amendment which I have proposed. During this session the Senate has passed two bills with reference to this subject, one to accomplish what is proposed by this amendment, and another to attach the strip permanently to the State of Kansas. The other House has acted upon neither.

This arrangement is a temporary one. I have little doubt myself that in due course of time this Public Land Strip will be incorporated in whatever Territory may be formed out of the Indian Territory, but in the mean time it is a Botany Bay for all that section of country. About two months ago some six or seven people were killed at one time in that Territory. The dispatches say that some sixteen or seventeen others have been killed since that time. Lawless characters from the whole country around go into that strip and prey upon the adjoining portions of Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, and Kansas.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the amendment propose to extend the jurisdiction of the courts?

Mr. PLUMB. It proposes to extend the jurisdiction of the United States courts, and it provides for the survey of the land. It provides that these people may make entries under the homestead law in the adjacent district of Kansas. That will not be inconvenient to them, because all the business can be done by mail, and before the time when these entries are required to be made, as they can only be made in five years, undoubtedly Congress will act in such a way as to make some permanent disposition of this territory.

Mr. CULLOM. All I desire to say is that this Congress certainly ought not to adjourn without doing something to protect those people.

Mr. PLUMB. This amendment, of course, is out of order as much as anything can possibly be; but I very much hope that in view of the circumstances of the case and the very great emergency no point of order will be made upon the amendment. It meets with the unanimous concurrence of the Public Lands Committee. The subject has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and no member of that committee, I think, will make a point of order. This appears to be the only possible chance of obtaining any legislation which will protect the lives or the property of the people who are living on that strip, or the lives or the property of the people who live adjacent thereto, and who are being preyed upon by lawless characters who make their headquarters on that strip.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the reception of the amendment, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. On page 80, after line 19, I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of the estate of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, the sum of $22,224, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for supplies furnished to the Army and Navy of the United States, the same being the amount found to be due her by the Court of Claims.

I wish to state that a bill making this appropriation passed the Senate at this session, and then the item was put upon the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and was lost there. It is a very meritorious claim, which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] can explain more fully than I can.

Mr. HALE. I do not like to raise the point of order upon this claim, because I know its underlying merit, but there are many others of the same class, it being one of the Bowman act claims, which do not of course come under the rules which allow judgments of the Court of Claims to go on this bill. The committee has been very strict in all of those items and has kept them off the bill because they go to another committee and are reported in another bill.

If the deficiency bill is made the medium of passing one of these claims, of course there will be no end. I know one Senator already who has claims amounting to one hundred and odd thousand dollars that he will move if this is allowed to go on. Under these conditions, while I regret it very much, I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable, but the Chair will hear the Senator from North Carolina by unanimous consent.

Mr. VANCE. I was speaking in the nature of an appeal to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think that the adoption of this amendment will involve any of the consequences suggested by the Senator from Maine. This is a case adjudicated by the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, and it is within the spirit of the law to be treated as a judgment equitably.

A bill has passed the Senate embodying the payment of this claim in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims. In addition to that the Senate adopted this amendment to the urgent deficiency bill, but it was disagreed to in the committee of conference. So I think it stands on a different footing entirely from the great mass of claims which have merely been adjudicated under the Bowman act and have not met the approbation of the Senate on two occasions, as has been done in this case. It is a very meritorious claim, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and his point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. Very briefly. Of course I know nothing as to the merit of the claim presented by the Senator from North Carolina. I think that the finding of the Court of Claims in respect to all matters investigated by it makes a strong prima facie case as to every material fact going to the allowance of the claim. I certainly shall not object to the Senate's adopting this amendment; but it is fair that I give notice to the Senator from Maine and the Senate that there are two or three hundred Tennessee claimants, involving pretty large amounts in the aggregate, and if the Senate adopts the rule of putting these findings or these claims in respect to which the Court of Claims has made findings upon the deficiency bill I shall expect it to extend to me the same courtesy that it is extending to the Senator from North Carolina, and I shall unquestionably ask the Senate to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken, and that the proposed amendment can not be received. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir. I suppose the decision is correct in point of strictness. I just hoped that nobody would make the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to insert on page 80, after line 19:

The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, $144,092.92.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To avoid mistake, will the Senator from New York send the proposed amendment to the desk?

Mr. HISCOCK. There is a second amendment which will follow it, which will be necessary to correct the sum total.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done by the clerks. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 80, after the word "cents," in line 19, it is proposed to insert:

The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, $144,092.92.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception of this amendment?

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from New York whether this is one of those matters regularly estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is. I have in my hand the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 3, 1888.

SIR: In reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 28th ultimo—"That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate * * * a list of judgments of the Court of Claims requiring an appropriation at the present session, not already transmitted to Congress"—I have the honor to transmit herewith a judgment in favor of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company for $144,092.92, rendered during the present term of said court, but not heretofore presented to Congress because an appeal has been pending in the case. The appeal having been withdrawn by the Attorney-General on the 9th of August, 1888, the claim is now forwarded for appropriation.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore United States Senate.

Judgment of the Court of Claims.

No.	Claimant.	Date.	Amount.	When presented for payment.	When payable if not appealed.
14624	The New York Central and Hudson R. R. Co.	1888. May 14	$144,092.92	1888. May 19	1888. Aug. 12

Mr. HALE. It is a judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The total will be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be changed to correspond with the increase made by the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 10, after line 8, I move to insert:

Public building at Concord, N. H.: For fitting-up the attic story, for curbing, for approaches, and for incidental expenses necessary to finish the building, $6,594.

Mr. HALE. Is that estimated for by the Department?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the estimate of the Department in my hand, and also the recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this amendment be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 11, after line 12, I move to insert:

For the payment to Samuel H. Robinson for services rendered in connection with the sanitary improvement of the Treasury Department building in a proper sanitary condition by improved plumbing and sewerage, $595.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Florida if that estimate was sent down from the Department?

Mr. CALL. It is contained in the Book of Estimates and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following amendment to be inserted on page 29, at the end of line 6:

Reimbursement to certain States and Territories for expenses incurred in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, act June 27, 1882, $11,723.64.

Mr. HALE. Is that the item for which the papers came in this morning?

Mr. DOLPH. That is the item. The account has been audited and allowed to the State of California since the last report. A similar sum has been paid to Texas, Kansas, and some other States, but nothing has been paid to California, and this is the amount audited.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 54, after line 18, I move to insert:

For one year's salary to the widow of Lafayette E. Dancy, an employé of the Internal Revenue Bureau, who remained in the discharge of duty in the public service at Jacksonville, Fla., and died of yellow fever, leaving a widow and children without means.

I have here a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, inclosing a letter from the collector at Jacksonville, Fla., stating the circumstances. The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, September 21, 1888.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of letter from Collector Whitfield Walker, district of Florida, dated August 28, 1888, in regard to Deputy Collector L. E. Dancy. Before this letter reached here (August 31) the death of Mr. Dancy was announced by telegram. Mr. Dancy was chief deputy to Collector Walker, at a salary of $1,400 per annum, and an allowance of $125 for his traveling expenses. He was a faithful, zealous officer, and of high standing in the service, and the circumstances under which he performed his duties at the last during the epidemic of yellow fever rendered them singularly meritorious.

Respectfully yours,

JOS. S. MILLER,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senator.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
District of Florida, August 28, 1888.

SIR: Owing to the prevalence of yellow fever here, our deputy, H. W. Wightman, left for the North, being afraid of the disease; this leaves in this office only our chief deputy, L. E. Dancy, and myself. In the present outlook it is improbable that it would be prudent for Mr. Wightman to return before the 15th of November; in view of these conditions Chief Deputy Dancy will be obliged to do Mr. Wightman's work as well as his own, and thus be on double duty, as it would be exceedingly difficult to supply Mr. Wightman's place even temporarily. Mr. Dancy is a healthy, robust young man, is a native Floridian, has passed through two epidemics, is not at all nervous, or apprehensive of the slightest danger from the present epidemic; he has sent his wife and children to a safe retreat in the piney woods, has fixed up a sleeping room in this office, is exceedingly prudent; he is perfectly willing and physically able to do Mr. Wightman's work (which will add at least four to six hours to each day's labor), provided he shall receive the compensation allowed Mr. Wightman in addition to his present pay as chief deputy during Mr. Wightman's absence.

As I am familiar with all the circumstances as stated, I respectfully request and urgently recommend that Mr. Dancy be allowed the additional pay as suggested above. Our city is in a deplorable condition, on account of the unprecedentedly foolish panic that has seized thousands of our people. It is estimated that 5,000 have fled to the North and to the mountains of Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia. Business here seriously injured. Our health and city authorities are making gallant fight to suppress it or hold in check until frost relieves, which rarely visits us before last October or 1st November. The only business that is running smoothly is the internal revenue of this district. My own health was never better. I reside in Riverside, a high bluff on the St. John's River, one and half miles from the city; considered one of the most healthful spots of earth perhaps in the United States. No fever has occurred in this beautiful suburb, nor is it likely that there will be any. I have thought it proper to close the office—and have so advertised—at 3 o'clock p. m., and open at 10 o'clock a. m. each day. I then go in my buggy (I will not risk going in the street cars) to my home and remain until 9:30 o'clock next morning; then come to my office. In this way I am at my post of duty, entirely undismayed at my surroundings. If I fall I will fall with my face to the foe, with colors flying.

I trust in God and fear no evil.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WHITFIELD WALKER,
Collector.

Hon. JOSEPH S. MILLER,
Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 59, after line 10, in the Senate items, I move to insert:

To pay W. B. Clarke for extra services as laborer from March 4, 1886, until March 4, 1888, $280.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend the bill by inserting, on page 55, after line 19:

For the purchase of a steam-launch, the vessel to be under the control of the collector of customs at Key West, Fla., or of the chief inspector of customs appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall report to the collector at Key West, except when otherwise directed by the Secretary, to enforce the quarantine laws against infectious and contagious disease and to prevent smuggling and other violation of laws of the United States on the coast of Florida and the Gulf of Mexico, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I submit to the Senator in charge of the bill the following letter, which I have just received from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 21, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 19th instant, inclosing an amendment to the general deficiency bill providing $20,000 for a steam-vessel at Key West, I have the honor to state that the reports of the collector of customs at that port—a copy of which was sent to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations July 30, 1888—shows that two vessels are needed for service on the Florida coast. The Department has urged the appropriation of $55,000 for the larger of these vessels, by letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, February 20, 1888. Since that time the need of more protection to the Florida coast than is now afforded by the one revenue steamer cruising there has become manifestly apparent, and, in the absence of the appropriation then asked, the adoption of your proposed amendment is recommended, with this change: Strike out all in lines 1, 2, 3, and in line 4 before the word "except," and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or construct a steam revenue vessel, to be stationed at Key West, Fla."

The amendment submitted is herewith returned, altered as suggested.

Respectfully, yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, United States Senate.

I suggest to the Senator from Maine that in the present condition of the importation of yellow fever from Havana in smuggling on the coast of Florida, the adoption of this amendment is very urgently necessary. The disease now prevailing and threatening almost the entire country is said upon the evidence obtained by the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service to have been introduced by smugglers upon the coast of Florida. There is no means by which this smuggling can be successfully prevented except by having one or more vessels upon the largely extended coast of Florida, the vessels drawing only a light draught of water and capable of pursuing these people into the bays and recesses of the coast.

Mr. HALE. If I believed that the building or buying of this vessel was essential in the present condition of Florida, I might consent to waive the point of order; but I do not believe it is, and I am constrained to make the point of order that not only it is not a deficiency, but it is not regularly estimated for.

Mr. CALL. I do not understand the Senator from Maine. Does he raise the point of order?

Mr. HALE. Yes, I raise the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I ask upon what point does the Senator hold that the amendment is not in order?

Mr. HALE. First, it is not a deficiency. Secondly, I do not understand that it is regularly estimated for.

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes; in the Book of Estimates. It is estimated for here in this recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. The rule, I believe, does not require anything about its being on a deficiency bill or any other bill but a general appropriation bill. It is estimated for by the Department in the Book of Estimates, referred to in this communication, and it is again estimated for and recommended here.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator point out where it is found in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. CALL. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury states that he has estimated for it and presented it to the House of Representatives and to the Senate as late as July last.

Mr. HALE. There may be some recommendation, but I do not understand that there is an estimate.

Mr. CALL. And here is his letter, in specific terms recommending again this particular amendment and the appropriation for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter which the Senator from Florida sends to the desk contains merely the opinion of the Treasury Department upon the merits of the appropriation which had been submitted by the Senator from Florida. It is not, in the technical sense of the term, an estimate. The Chair thinks that under the rules the amendment, if objected to, is not admissible.

Mr. CALL. I submit to the Chair whether the statement in the Secretary's letter referring to his previous estimate of $55,000 does not bring the amendment within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He refers in his letter to a previous letter written to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dwelling upon the importance and advisability of the appropriation; but the Chair understands an "estimate" to have a technical meaning. It must be an amount specifically set forth in the annual book sent down from the Department to the two Houses of Congress for the guidance of the committees of the two Houses.

Mr. CALL. I very respectfully ask the Chair if the rule uses the term "the Book of Estimates," or whether it says "recommended by the head of a Department." My recollection is that the language of the rule is "recommended by the head of a Department."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments," is the language of Rule XVI. It has always been held that that had a technical signification and meant that it must be forwarded, as the estimates are sent annually by the heads of the Departments, to the committees of Congress stating the items for which appropriations are desired.

Mr. CALL. I understand the Chair, then, to rule that nothing but an annual estimate by the head of a Department would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not that.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw the point of order. The amendment clearly comes within the spirit of the rule according to the ruling of the Chair. The objection is merely in the letter, and I do not think it is even in the letter of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator desires, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. CALL. I have no doubt the Senate would decide it in favor of the Chair; but I appeal to the Senator from Maine, in a case so manifestly within the spirit of the rule and of such urgent necessity, where a contagious disease has been, and is being, and may be introduced every day, threatening the whole country and creating panic and alarm, when the Secretary of the Treasury states that specific fact and recommends this appropriation. Upon the ruling of the Chair that the item must be in the Book of Estimates, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the estimates come only once a year, for it is not practicable to estimate but once a year in that way——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hold that the item must be contained in the Book of Estimates. The estimate might be sent down by the head of the Department at any time. But the amendment is not within the rule. It appears from the letter that the Senator from Florida sent a copy of the amendment to the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is his response to a request of the Senator from Florida for his opinion as to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I sent it as a member of the Committee on Appropriations at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, I will say to the Senator from Maine, and if the chairman were here he would not raise the objection, because it was by his direction that I sent it to the Department, he stating that my transmission of it would answer the same purpose as if it were sent by himself.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Florida has followed the direction of the chairman of the committee in this regard, I will not make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer, by request of a Senator who is absent, the following amendment:

For payment on account of Army transportation, 1882 and prior years, as certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session, as follows:

To the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, $32,788.48; to the Hoboken Land Improvement Company, of New Jersey, $15,800; in all, $48,588.48.

For payment on account of barracks and quarters, 1881 and prior years, to L. A. Von Hoffman and William A. Mertens (trading as R. Von Hoffman & Co.) and William H. Newman, $18,430.56, certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Mr. HALE. Are these items regularly estimated for?

Mr. PLUMB. These items are regularly estimated for, and are contained in one of the documents from which the committee of the House have taken certain things, leaving out these among others. I do not care anything about these items, but I have presented the amendment at the request of a Senator who was obliged to go away, for the purpose of bringing up this question. There are certain deficiencies which are perhaps unavoidable. While I think myself that executive officers do not exercise as much care as they ought to prevent deficiencies, and do not fairly discharge themselves of the obligations of the statute, at the same time, when one of them within the apparent purview of his authority does incur an obligation to an individual for supplies or for services and that comes here under the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the regular estimates, I think it is an outrage, to speak very slightly about it, that it is not appropriated for. What happens is this: The Secretary sends down his estimates; the House committee goes to work and picks out various items from these estimates. Whether that is a selection by judgment, or whether it is by caprice, or whether it is by favoritism, I will not say; but I do say that when that estimate comes down, prima facie at least, every single item in it is entitled to the same respect and to the same treatment that every other item is entitled to; but what happens? These are not appropriated for, they are dropped, hung up; they get into the class of what are called claims. The next thing we know they pass into the hands of attorneys; special bills are introduced for their payment, and so on, and we have all that claim business before another committee, whereby the innocent persons who dealt with the Government on the theory that the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of War, or the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or whoever else had charge of the particular class of expenditures, had authority to do what he did, and the Government got the benefit of the service, and the man is obliged to wait for indefinite years, and pay probably 50 or 75 per cent. of the claim to an attorney to dog the heels of Congress in order to get it through.

What I say is that we ought to take these claims as they come and pay them to the innocent people who are entitled to our consideration, who have given apparently value to the Government, or else we ought to reject the whole of them. I say we ought not to reject them for this reason: While I believe, as I said, that there is a good deal of looseness in the Executive Departments about incurring expenditures, it ought not to be charged to the people who deal with the Departments.

The Secretary of the Navy goes to a man and says, "I want a thousand tons of ice." That man can not say to the Secretary, "I want to see your authority under the statute. Show me your authority to buy ice. Let me see your bank account and see if you have not expended all the money appropriated for this purpose." He is bound to presume that the Secretary is justly exercising authority conferred on him by law, and that the money is at hand to pay, or the authority for the payment; and it is a great wrong to punish the claimant for what, at the best, is an improvident act of the executive officer of the Government who has charge of the particular business which may result in the expenditure.

I should be glad to move and shall move, unless for something that I do not now understand, the insertion in this bill of every single one of these items that have been estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas who has just spoken whether his attention has been called as a member of the Committee on Appropriations to an estimate of deficiencies for the service of the District of Columbia, which is Executive Document No. 252 of the present session? I ask whether he has seen that?

Mr. PLUMB. I have seen it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Amounting to $3,010.75, mainly for bills of tradesmen around this city, no one of them large, but many in number, and they are regularly estimated for as deficiencies; and yet the committee have not felt at liberty or have not deemed it wise to insert them. I should like to ask the Senator who has just spoken whether he thinks there was a single one of these tradesmen who was bound to find out when the orders were given him whether or not there was an appropriation adequate to the performance of the contracts that were made with him by the District commissioners?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not. On the contrary, I think every one of them was entitled to presume that the commissioners, in ordering these supplies, were acting within the limit of their authority, were authorized to buy, and had the money to pay. In regard to many of them I can see how these little odds and ends of deficiencies will occur where we make, as we do very often, scant appropriations. Where purchases are going on through different agencies, we can not always be sure that what is outstanding and necessary apparently will come within the appropriations, and with the best of motives the commissioners may sometimes miss it. But getting away from all that and admitting that the commissioners are culpable, that culpability does not rest on the persons who have furnished the supplies, and they ought to be paid.

We have got plenty of money, or we assume that we have, in the Treasury of the United States to pay our debts, and it is not proper to require men who have furnished supplies to the Government to wait in this way. I speak of claims of this obviously proper kind. I am not speaking of that kind which properly go into the class of claims unadjusted, service claims, and things of that kind, or where they have arisen under some emergency or have not been entirely within the limit of what was covered by the law; but I am speaking of this class for which we make appropriations and where the appropriations do not hold out and yet officers who spend the appropriations go on and incur these expenditures. I say in those cases the man who furnishes the supplies should not be held responsible.

I observe that here is an estimate for "supplemental deficiencies." I think the Treasury Department has been rather careless about these things. It has been sending them here from the time the regular estimates came to the present, and it seems to have grown out of a misunderstanding as to what was needed, a lack of appreciation of the situation, somewhat perhaps from incompetency, but whatever it is that does not touch the merits of the case. I find in the estimates coming down here on the 21st of June from the Treasury Department that a number of them have been omitted, some put in by the House and some left out.

I do not know whether the House exercised any kind of discretion or not, or whether it was mere favoritism; but what I do say is that apparently every single one of them stands upon the same footing, every one of them apparently represents something for which the Government has had value at the expense of private individuals; and for the Government to keep the property, and keep the value of the service, and then not pay for it, when it is of a kind that expenditures were authorized for and the Secretary has only exceeded the limit somewhat, seems to me to assume the proportions of a very serious wrong, and one which Congress ought not to be guilty of.

I shall move seriatim or in bulk everything which has been omitted from this bill and that is in this Book of Estimates before me, in order to test the sense of the Senate upon this performance.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to inquire how many of these items there are?

Mr. PLUMB. I should think about thirty or forty, judging from what I see hastily.

Mr. REAGAN. Are they all deficiencies?

Mr. PLUMB. All deficiencies, and they come down in the regular estimates of deficiencies sent us by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REAGAN. All I wish to say is that it seems to me that deficiencies are being constantly created in this way and that there ought to be some investigation. We ought not to be indiscriminately allowing deficiencies without inquiring why they are made, and some committee ought to investigate the matter. We have laws which should control the Departments and should prevent deficiencies from being made, except under extraordinary circumstances.

It seems that the Government goes on utterly disregarding the legislation in relation to the creation of deficiencies. I am under the belief that it is the duty of some committee to investigate the reasons why these deficiencies are made. I shall oppose their being incorporated into the present appropriation bill until the matter can be looked into by a committee and the facts presented to the Senate, and if additional legislation is necessary to prevent the reckless creation of deficiencies on every subject and in all the Departments, that legislation ought to be had.

Mr. PLUMB. What the Senator from Texas says is entirely proper from an original standpoint; but the Senator will bear in mind that some of these have been appropriated for. There has been some caprice or some favoritism in picking out various items from these estimates of deficiencies and putting them in the bill. I am perfectly willing, if the Senate is of that mind, to strike out everything contained in these estimates and let them all go. I am sure that no investigation has been applied to one that has not been applied to all, and there is no lack of investigation in regard to the great bulk of those that have been inserted as items in the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If the committee has not examined them, I think the suggestion of the Senator is one that ought to be adopted. If there has not been an investigation of like items we had better strike them all out and let some committee investigate them.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not true that in respect to every item of these deficiencies they have been recommended by the head of the Department in which the deficiency occurs?

Mr. PLUMB. They have.

Mr. HARRIS. And in addition to that they have gone to the Secretary of the Treasury and been recommended by that official?

Mr. PLUMB. They have.

Mr. HARRIS. Then they have passed these two ordeals of investigation, and I beg to suggest to my friend from Texas that it seems to me a gross injustice and wrong to the citizen, who has trusted upon the supposed authority of the Department with which he dealt, has rendered service, or has furnished material presuming that the Department had the authority, to refuse or delay payment. I do not think our remedy is to withhold from him money that is due him and that he ought to have. Let us deal with the Departments if they have been derelict, but not through the channel of withholding from the citizen the money that he has earned and the money that he is entitled to.

Mr. REAGAN. I venture to say that there has not been one deficiency in ten created where the parties to whom the money is payable did not know at the start that the deficiency was created.

But that is not the main point I propose to make. There ought to be provision, if existing law will not answer the purpose, that officers creating deficiencies unnecessarily should be subject to indictment or should be made individually responsible in the first instance to pay the demands against the Government. When we look at our deficiency bills and then look over the legislation of Congress intended to prevent them, it seems as if there was an utter disregard of the legislation of Congress on this subject, and it has been so for years.

Of course I do not wish to see persons who have in good faith furnished supplies deprived of pay for them, but I do not wish to see the Senate take a course to indicate that it will accept without question all deficiencies created. I want it to take that course which will show that it means to question the propriety of these deficiencies and hold somebody responsible for making them.

Mr. PLUMB. I will just call attention to some of these items to show how innocent the parties themselves must be. For instance, on the first page of these items I find:

Salaries, consular officers not citizens: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of salaries of consular officers not citizens, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887, $2,713.56.

These consular officers are authorized by the Secretary of State to incur certain expenses, which they do incur, and they exceed the amount appropriated for that purpose in gross. How can they tell anything about it? They do not know anything about the state of the appropriation. They are under the orders of their chief, the Secretary of State; they are in the performance of duties imposed by law, and they incur expenses at various points around the verge of the habitable globe. Their accounts come here, and very likely many of them do not get in, or do not get adjusted in the Treasury Department until after the appropriations have lapsed. As to many of them, they are in excess in connection with other expenditures that constitute an excess of the appropriations made. If there is anybody to blame for that, it is the Secretary of State.

I do not mean to say now for the purpose of what I am about to observe that he is responsible, but what I do say is that for this widely scattered service of the Republic to be thus made the bearer of the burden of all this complaint is wrong. If we are to have some new plan, let us have it; but as long as we go along with the old plan, let us carry it out decently and in order and with due regard to the rights of those people who are helpless in all these respects and who must incur these expenses, render this service, and take their chances of getting pay.

Then going over a little further I find, for instance:

Salaries, office of depositary at Tucson: For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, $700, being the difference between the amount of salary per annum of this officer, $1,500, under the act of May 18, 1872, creating the office, and the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

What has happened there undoubtedly is that that account has not been adjusted until after the money appropriated for it has lapsed into the Treasury. The officer is not responsible and perhaps the Secretary is not responsible. The system is perhaps responsible that that account was not adjusted in time to enable the officer to receive the money out of the appropriation for the year in which the service was rendered.

I turn over and find under the head of "Public Schools, District of Columbia:"

Repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds: Lumber, cement, paint, glass, etc., $137.51.

We appropriate each year a sum varying from $15,000 to $25,000 for repairs of school buildings in the District of Columbia. What contractor is there who knows the expenses he will incur or that are incurred by him under the direction of the commissioners in connection with all the other expenditures over and in excess of the gross amount that we appropriate? How can he tell anything about it? And here I find $137.51 representing money actually paid out for cement, lumber, paint, and glass, and yet we stick upon this point of authority and say, "We will not pay it."

There is such a thing as withholding more than is meet, but it tends to poverty, and that is just this withholding exactly. We ought to pay these debts, and then if we do not think that our executive officers are doing the right thing let us hail them under the statute. They are subject to indictment in some of these cases, I have no doubt, but at all events, whomever we punish, let it be the people who make the expenditures and not the innocent victims of the assumed authority of these executive officers.

Further on I find in this same lot:

Buildings and grounds, public schools, District of Columbia: Building on lot adjoining Sumner school building: To pay Frank Baldwin for excavating, grading, concreting, and building extra foundation, not included in contract, being for the service of the fiscal year 1888, $973.06.

Mr. Frank Baldwin may or may not be able to carry this sum indefinitely, but I will say, without knowing anything about it, that that money was fairly earned, and that to withhold it from him is of very great damage to him and of no use to us, because we have got the money in the Treasury.

So all the way through I find small items of deficiencies of different kinds, ranging from $3.53 up to $1,000 or $1,500, a large number of which I know must be inevitable, and I do not suggest this by way of complaint against the officers making the expenditure, but whether they do or not, it is not fair to make these people a vicarious sacrifice.

I am willing, so far as I am concerned, if that meets the view of the Senate, to leave them all out and let it be understood once for all that we will never pay any more deficiencies until we have subjected all these expenses to scrutiny, and so on. But even then, what will that result in? Suppose we do that, it will result then, according to the logic of the Senator from Texas, in refusing to pay these expenses if we do not think that the Secretaries of the Navy and Treasury and State, etc., should not have made the expenditures. That does not help the people who have innocently rendered the service or put out the money on account of the Government.

What I say is, that the punishment ought to fall on the proper persons and not on these innocent people. If we are going to pick out somebody, let us pick out somebody of our size. The idea of picking out somebody to whom we owe $137.51 for lumber, cement, paint, glass, etc., and subjecting him to the loss of waiting does not seem to me a fair thing to do.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator offered an amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I have offered one amendment.

Mr. HALE. I will offer an amendment to that of the same sort, so that they will go together. It is offered as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is propased to add to the amendment:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies: To pay the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and other claimants enumerated in Schedule C, House Executive Document No. 210, pages 23 and 24, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, the sums severally reported therein, and amounting to the sum of $97,704.57; said sums having heretofore been reported by the Secretary of the Treasury as audited claims, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, and enumerated in House Executive Documents Nos. 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, under "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

Mr. HALE. I do not know that we shall be able to get the House conferees to agree to any of these items, but they ought all to go in together and be subject to a fair settlement in conference.

Mr. PLUMB. They ought all to go together.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas contains one item that has already been stricken out or disagreed to on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. PLUMB. I will amend by striking out the Hoboken Land Company item.

Mr. HALE. No; I think that had better go in as an amendment, so that all will be together.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the vote by which that was stricken from the bill should be reconsidered.

Mr. HALE. I prefer that it should go in as an amendment with the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it can only properly be offered when the bill is reported to the Senate unless the vote be reconsidered.

Mr. HALE. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent it may be done. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of the Senator from Maine, who has charge of the bill, whether or not there is now in this bill, as it came from the House or as it is reported from the Senate Committee on Appropriations, an appropriation for the list of claims allowed by accounting officers contained in House Executive Document 377, Fiftieth Congress, first session, being "a supplemental list of claims allowed by accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund?"

Mr. HALE. That was one of the documents the committee had put into the bill with the exception of some large items, the old controversies that we have had so many times and with but one result touching the items in relation to the aided railroads.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to inquire whether the items on page 19 of that document, Executive Document 377, relating to claims that have been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for barracks and quarters have been included or not.

Mr. HALE. They are all in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas having been amended on the motion of the Senator from Maine, the question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer as an amendment everything that is in this estimate marked with the word "omitted" opposite, except those items for the pay of transportation on the Pacific railroads.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator put that in form, so that when the bill shall pass and go into conference we shall have it distinctly before us?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the items.

Mr. PLUMB. He will find opposite the items in pencil the word "omitted." They are all those now omitted.

Mr. HALE. Some of those are already in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This printed page contains so many marks and alterations that perhaps the Senator from Kansas had better indicate the special items he desires added to the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I will indicate them and read them. I first move to insert.

Contingent expenses, foreign missions, 1885 and prior years, $233.33: To enable the accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to allow and credit the accounts of F. H. Titus, late acting United States consul at Guatemala, the sum of $532.25 for compensation while in charge of the legation of the United States in Central America, under the direction of the Secretary of State, from August 16, 1881, to December 21, 1881; from April 18, 1882, to June 30, 1882; and from July 1, 1882, to July 18, 1882; and to allow and credit the accounts of H. C. Hall, United States minister to Central America, the sum of $233.33 paid under the direction of the Secretary of State to said F. H. Titus for like service during the fiscal year 1884, and disallowed by the accounting officers on the ground that Mr. Titus was not authorized to perform diplomatic functions, $765.58.

Mr. COCKRELL. I trust that the Senator from Maine can get a fresh copy of that document that is not all marked over.

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble is I can not tell what is in it without making a lengthy comparison.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can take a fresh copy and write opposite each item that he wants inserted the word "omitted."

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to yield to me a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 17, page 92:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to loan any scientific instruments in the possession of any of the bureaus under his charge, and not in use, to persons taking observations, or making investigations in connection with, or for the use of, the Signal Service, under such regulations as he may prescribe, taking such security for the safe-keeping and return of such instruments on demand as he may deem necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception of this amendment? If there be no objection, the question is on agreeing to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to offer another amendment, to come in on page 30, after line 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of the cadet-engineer graduates who are affected by the act of July 9, 1888, fixing their status in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to allow them the difference between the pay they have already received as cadets and that of assistant engineers from July 1, 1883, to July 1, 1884, respectively; and a sum sufficient to pay the amount found due is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. That is based on a judgment of the Supreme Court?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is to carry out the decision of the Supreme Court in reference to these cadet engineers, and I have a letter from the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury which states that it is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment to come in after line 10, on page 59.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the widow of the late James T. Farley, late a Senator from the State of California, deceased, the sum of $1, 248.80, being the amount of one mileage from his home to the seat of Government and return.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to change the place in the bill in which my amendment relating to the steamer to be stationed at Key West, Fla., was inserted, so as to make it come in on page 13, after line 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be inserted on page 13, after line 9, if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. I suggest a change of the language in the words suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, which the Secretary will read, being a mere informal and immaterial change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to make the amendment read:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or construct a steam revenue vessel, to be stationed at Key West, Fla., except when otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will stand as last reported, by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. On page 101 I move the correction of a single word, which is a misprint, at the end of line 14. It should read "numbered 22107," instead of "numbered 32107." It is to identify a claim by the right number.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment, to insert on page 19, after line 12:

For salaries and contingent expenses, streets, public schools, buildings for schools, courts, miscellaneous expenses, health department, judgments, and water department, $3,010.75, as per estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, August 28, 1888, Senate Executive Document No. 252.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

To Bartholomew Coffey, for services of farmer in charge of the Umatilla agency, in Oregon, from August 6 to 26, 1886, both days inclusive, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, $68.47, and covered by the order of the Secretary of the Interior of July 7, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move as amendments the items in the estimate before referred to which are marked with a black stroke, being all, I think, except those relating to the pay of the Pacific railroads, which have not been inserted by the House. I do not see any reason, in looking over them, why they should be treated in any different way from those which have been included.

I do not know anything about any of the claims, but I only desire that the Senate shall pursue one rule or the other. Either treat the recommendations of the Secretaries in regard to matters which involve the service rendered and expense incurred by private individuals as entitled to be paid on the recommendation of the Secretaries or strike them all out, and adopt some plan which shall prevent the recurrence of these expenses hereafter, or which will give them some authority, when they are estimated for here, which will enable them to be appropriated for without any delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the point in the bill at which these items shall come in?

Mr. PLUMB. The first ones should come in under the State Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriations for the State Department begin on page 1 of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. They will go along with the items in regard to the State Department, in whatever part of the bill they appear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The items concerning the State Department end on page 5.

Mr. PLUMB. All those relating to the State Department should come in at the end of line 2 on page 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 2, on page 5, it is proposed to insert:

Foreign intercourse:

Salaries of consular officers not citizens: To pay the balance of compensation due A. B. Keün, vice-consul-general at Teheran, while in charge of the consulate-general of the United States at that place, from June 10, 1886, to November 21, 1886, being deficiencies on account of the fiscal years 1886 and 1887, as follows: For the fiscal year 1886, $230.77; for the fiscal year 1887, $1,565.24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 9, it is proposed to add:

Salaries, office of depositary at Tucson: For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, $700, being the difference between the amount of salary per annum of this officer, $1,500, under the act of May 8, 1872, creating the office, and the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of Mr. PLUMB'S amendment, as follows:

Wages and contingent expenses, assay office at Boisé City: To reimburse Henry F. Wild, assayer in charge, for amount paid to Kelly & Krebs for subscription to Idaho Statesman, one year from December, 1885, $12; to reimburse same for amount paid to P. H. Lannan for Daily Tribune from November, 1885, $12; to pay Milton Kelly, publisher of Idaho Statesman, for advertising for supplies at Boisé City, May, 1886, $12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next amendment of Mr. PLUMB, as follows:

Contingent expenses, Territory of Washington: To reimburse Eugene Semple, governor of Washington Territory, amount expended by him, as per vouchers submitted, on account of contingent expenses of Territory of Washington for the fiscal year 1887, $64.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next amendment of Mr. PLUMB, as follows:

Fish hatchery, Duluth, Minn: For the completion of the fish hatchery on Lake Superior, near Duluth, Minn., including its equipment, water supply, and the construction at the station of ponds for the cultivation of trout, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of Mr. PLUMB'S amendment as follows:

Salaries and traveling expenses of agents at seal-fisheries in Alaska: To pay Thomas F. Ryan, late assistant agent at the seal-fisheries in Alaska, the amount due him for traveling expenses necessarily incurred in May, 1885, said amount being in excess of the sum appropriated for the traveling expenses of the agency which he filled, and a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $266.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of Mr. PLUMB'S amendment, as follows:

Refund to Iselin, Neeser & Co.: To repay to Messrs. Iselin, Neeser & Co., amount of excessive interest collected in error by the United States district attorney at New York, in the settlement (without suit) of a claim against said firm for duties on merchandise imported by them; the amount having been covered into the Treasury, $30.96.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, between lines 12 and 13, under the head of "Public schools," it is proposed to add:

Buildings and grounds, Public Schools, District of Columbia: Building on lot adjoining Sumner school building: To pay Frank Baldwin for excavating, grading, concreting, and building extra foundation, not included in contract, being for the service of the fiscal year 1888, $973.06.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] in reference to W. B. Clarke. That is a case where extra compensation is provided for, and the committee are against all extra compensation. The committee considered this case with the others and rejected it; and there are a good many others of something like the same kind, and I do not think fish should be made of one and flesh of the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 10, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted:

To pay W. B. Clarke for special services as laborer from March 4, 1886, to March 4, 1888, $280.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to this amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Maine will not press the motion to reconsider. It is a very small appropriation to compensate one of the bright young officers of this body, who has not only discharged the ordinary duties of messenger, but has also qualified himself as a typewriter and made himself very useful to a committee, and it is really only to equalize his salary with that paid others. Therefore I trust the amendment will not be reconsidered.

Mr. HALE. I know the force of what the Senator says. My attention was called away by the Senator from Nevada at the time the amendment was offered, and I had not the chance of making the point of order on it, but it is extra pay for one of the officers about the body here, for doing work outside, technically, of the place he is employed in. There are many such cases, and the committee believed that it was its duty to set its face against all of them. The truth is that the employés about this body are better paid now than any other set of men in the service of the Government. If you compare the work done by a laborer, or a messenger, or a clerk about the Senate with that of the men and women who are employed in the Departments through the entire year, the comparison is all in favor of the ease and pay of our own employés, and I have always felt and feel now that the Senate ought not to start out in this race.

We are continually importuned here to put up the pay of the employés of the Senate. I do not pass a day while these appropriation bills are being considered that somebody or other in the employ of the Senate does not ask to have his pay advanced. Every Senator wants his clerk to be advanced or the man who stands at the door of his committee to be advanced. I have a man at this time in my own committee-room who expects that I shall favor such a measure for him; but I am against it. As this is a precedent, I do not believe in setting it, and I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote by which it was done.

Mr. DAWES. I should be very glad to vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland, for the man at the door of the Committee on Indian Affairs has only the pay of a skilled laborer, and yet he has performed all the duties of a messenger in all the capacity of a messenger in the Senate since the 1st day of January. I brought that fact to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, and I was met by the statement that there were very many such cases that could not be considered. I then stated to the committee that if that was their rule I should not ask them to make an exception in favor of the man at the door of my committee-room, and therefore I did not press it, and I did not put it in such form that it would be in order to offer it now.

It would be manifest injustice to several, I know, situated in precisely this way, if one should go on the bill and the others should be omitted. I think the man at the door of the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs is entitled justly to the pay of a messenger, for the duties of a messenger have been exacted of him, and I know that at another committee-room close by mine is another situated precisely in the same way.

Mr. HALE. There are a dozen such cases. I have one in my own committee.

Mr. DAWES. I should be glad if they were all put in, but since the amendment of the Senator from Maryland was adopted my attention has been called to the fact that I sit still here and see a most worthy man left out in the cold, while the Senator from Maryland has been more successful.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 55, after line 19, which I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Two hundred and seventy-six thousand six hundred and nineteen dollars and seventy-five cents to the Chinese minister at this capital, who shall accept the same on behalf of his Government as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects, as aforesaid, and shall distribute the said money among the said sufferers and their relatives.

Mr. TELLER. I know of course that the amendment is out of order if any member of the Senate sees fit to raise the question, but as this is the last appropriation bill, as I understand, at this session, it seems to me that the committee should allow this to go in, and then if they determine that it is not a proper thing, of course there will be no objection to striking it out. It was thought proper by the State Department to make this arrangement with the Chinese minister when the treaty of which so much has been said was negotiated, and I find in the correspondence submitted by the State Department with the treaty that there has been considerable correspondence on this subject heretofore. I want to read what the Chinese minister, Chang Yen Hoon said:

Referring to the cases of outrages committed upon the Chinese in the United States in the past years, you kindly gave me repeated assurances, in person, that indemnities would be awarded and the cases settled within a certain time, which I, in my dispatches, more than once communicated to the foreign office; but, nevertheless, they still remain unsettled. Consequently I find myself placed in a rather delicate position, which it seems hard for me to extricate myself from.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether this is regularly estimated for by the State Department, which has it in charge? If so, of course it is not subject to the point of order. If not, then clearly there are reasons why the State Department, that has the matter in charge, has not presented it.

Mr. TELLER. The State Department did present it in the treaty. There is provision for it made in the treaty. As the treaty has now failed, there should be some provision for making this payment which the Chinese minister avers we have promised to pay. I have no doubt that is so. I ask the Senator to allow the amendment to go in and then the committee can look at it, and if they do not think it ought to be in they can strike it out. No harm can be done by putting it in now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as offered by the Senator from Colorado will need some change in order to enable it to be properly inserted.

Mr. TELLER. I will look at it and have the necessary change made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the reception of the amendment, the Chair will put the question on agreeing to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I offer an amendment, after the word "fog-signal," on page 13, line 19, to insert:

That a fog-signal be established at Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, at a cost not to exceed $5,500.

That a fog-signal be established at Mackinac Point, Straits of Mackinac, at a cost not to exceed $5,500.

That a light-house be established at White Shoals, or at Simmons Reaf, Lake Michigan, as the Light-House Board may determine, at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

That a fog-signal be established at Twin River Point, Lake Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That a fog-whistle be established on the breakwater at Chicago, Ill., at a cost not exceeding $5,200.

That a steam fog-signal be established at Manistee Light-Station, Lake Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That range-lights be established in the channel of Detroit River, Michigan, between Fighting Island and Lime Kiln Crossing, at a cost not exceeding $7,000.

That a fog-whistle be established on the breakwater at Cleveland, Ohio, at a cost not exceeding $5,200.

That a fog-signal be established at La Pointe (Point Chequamegon), entrance to Ashland Harbor, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That a fog-signal be established at Point Iroquois, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That a fog-signal be established at Cheboygan Point light station, Lake Huron, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That a fog-signal be established at Presque Isle, Lake Huron, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That range-lights and stakes be established at Lake St. Clair, from Grosse Point to the entrance of Detroit River, at a cost not to exceed $3,000.

That range-lights be established at Russel Island to St. Clair Flats Canal, Lake St. Clair, at a cost not exceeding $1,500.

That a fog-whistle be established at Two Harbors, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That a light be established at Devil's Island, Apostle Group, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.

That range-lights be established at Duluth Harbor, at a cost not to exceed $3,284.12.

And the sum of $149,684.12, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this act.

Mr. HALE. To save time, as these items are all of the same sort, I will ask the Senator if there is any law that has already passed authorizing the erection of these signals and lights?

Mr. PALMER. A bill has passed both Houses authorizing the establishment of these signals and lights.

Mr. HALE. Has it been signed by the President?

Mr. PALMER. That I can not tell.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order.

Mr. PALMER. I do not know whether the bill has been or not. If the Senator from Maine can assure me that it has not, I think the point of order may be well taken.

Mr. HALE. It is rather incumbent on the Senator to show that it has.

Mr. PALMER. How does the Chair decide?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to hear the point of order stated again.

Mr. HALE. I asked the Senator if there was any law for the establishment of these fog-signals, and he states in reply that the bill has passed the House and Senate, but he does not know whether it has been signed by the President, and he raises the point that I ought to show that it has not been. The burden is upon the Senator to show that it is a law.

Mr. PALMER. Inferentially I think I can show that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be ready to decide upon any question when the evidence is presented.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think that any veto has been issued upon this bill. I think undoubtedly it has become a law, or I should have known of it from looking over the RECORD. I should have remarked that the bill passed more than ten days ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator if all these bills have been passed by the other House?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; they were passed by the other House first and came over here.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are certainly not deficiencies.

Mr. PALMER. The only reason why I ask to have these items put upon this bill is because they are works that can be completed this winter, and they are very essential, and the people upon the lakes where they are located are very urgent to have them provided for. If I had not supposed in a conversation I had with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this would have been accepted by the committee, I probably should have gotten an amendment through upon the House bill making the appropriation.

Mr. HALE. With whom does the Senator say he had a conversation?

Mr. PALMER. With the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Not with me.

Mr. PALMER. No, sir; but I understood from the chairman that there would be no difficulty if the bills had passed both Houses. Otherwise I should have provided for it in some other way.

Mr. CULLOM. While there are a number of those light-houses they do not aggregate a very great amount of money, and I am sure they are very important. Certainly the fog-signals ought to be established in the interest of commerce upon the lakes. Lest there might be a slip and a failure to get them established by the separate acts which have been passed, I hope that the Senator from Maine will not object to the reception of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that a deficiency appropriation bill which has a clearly recognized scope is a proper bill to put on new public buildings that are not already authorized by law? I have had some experience in regard to appropriation bills in the Senate and in the House, and I have never known the deficiency bill to be loaded with appropriations of this kind. If you can put on a batch of appropriations for new fog-signals, you can for new light-houses, for new public buildings, and for every service of the Government. I am desirous of keeping the deficiency bill down to what it has always been kept.

I should be glad, if this were a proper item, or if the Senator had got it in in time, to put it in the bill where it properly belongs, but it is my duty to make the point of order.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator tell me what he means by "the proper time?"

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that all the bills upon which light-houses, public buildings, fog-signals, and all things of that kind are put have already passed. I do not know why the Senator did not get his amendment in before. He has had the same chance that everybody else has had.

Mr. PALMER. Does the Senator mean in this bill?

Mr. HALE. Not in this bill, of course, but another bill.

Mr. PALMER. I can give a very proper solution to that. This matter came over from the other House too late for the sundry civil bill; therefore it did not go on that. An appropriation would have been made upon this bill if the same treatment had not been given to several other bills which have met with an abrupt rebuff by the conferees on the part of the House, who refused to concur in the amendments of the Senate on some point of order. Otherwise I should not have troubled the Senate with trying to fix this as an amendment to the deficiency bill.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think it is a deficiency?

Mr. PALMER. It is a very great deficiency—a deficiency that has been long felt.

Mr. HALE. It is a deficiency in the Senator's reasoning; that is very evident.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator did not regard himself as the Cerberus, the watch-dog of this bill, and if he did not fear that large amounts in irrelevant amendments would be appended to the bill, I have no doubt that his knowledge of the facts in the case would induce him to permit this to be put in as an amendment without his opposition.

Mr. HALE. That is pretty nearly true. The Senator has it about right.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator who has the bill in charge concedes that point. I should like to know (and it has annoyed and bothered me somewhat), if it was not for just such cases as this, why should that language be used in the title of the bill "and for other purposes." This is certainly for another purpose.

Mr. HALE. That refers to deficiencies for other years.

Mr. PALMER. I think if it related to deficiencies for other years it would have said, "and for deficiencies for other years." In my opinion that language was put there for just such an exigency as this.

The Senator from Maine is perfectly right in fighting off amendments, but still under the circumstances, in an extreme case like this, it seems to me it should meet the favor of the Senator and it should be permitted to go on the bill, particularly when it is now a law and no appropriation has been made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to ask the Senator if he would yield to a motion to adjourn and finish his speech to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first pass upon the question of order.

Mr. HALE. I think we can get through with the bill to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule provides that no amendment that is not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill shall be received. This bill is entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes." The Chair supposes that that provision of the rule is intended to exclude from the different appropriation bills amendments which are not connected with the subject-matter thereof; in other words, that upon the Indian appropriation bill this amendment would not be in order. The Chair therefore holds that the point raised by the Senator from Maine is well taken, and will decline to receive the amendment unless otherwise instructed by the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. While I have the highest regard for the opinion of the Chair, and ordinarily would not dissent from it, I think that I should like to appeal from that decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the appeal. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Is the Senate ready for the question? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw the appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ayes have it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to modify the amendment that I offered. As it reads now the payment would be made to the Chinese minister. I wish to strike out "minister" and insert "Government;" so as to read that the payment shall be made to the Chinese Government. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made by unanimous consent.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless a separate vote is desired in the Senate on any amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, the question will be taken on concurring in the amendments in gross.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment on page 27 relating to the Hoboken Land Improvement Company of New Jersey, $15,800, may be reserved. I ask that a vote may be taken separately in the Senate upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no other amendment reserved, shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in the Senate?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reserved by the Senator from New Hampshire, which will be read by the Secretary. The Chair understands that the Senator desires to reserve one item in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. CHANDLER. No, the amendment striking out the same clause on page 27.

Mr. PLUMB. That has been reinserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That clause has been reinserted in the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HALE. That suits everybody except the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand exactly what has taken place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the Senator from New Hampshire if he desired to reserve a vote on that item in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not, but on striking out the clause on page 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment reserved by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the following clause beginning on line 15, page 27:

For payment on account of Army transportation, 1882 and prior years, as certified to Congress as due, by the accounting officers of the Treasury, in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session, namely: To the Hoboken Land Improvement Company of New Jersey, $15,800.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. This item is for an audited claim that has been audited a great many years. It is a claim that was inserted in one deficiency bill by the Senate at this session, but was stricken out on the report of the conference committee. The Senate conferees did not insist upon it and it went out. The claimants have been to the House of Representatives, presented this claim, and it was inserted by the other House in this bill, and I am unable to see any logic or any justice to these claimants in now striking it out of the bill in the Senate for the purpose of inserting it again in some other connection and with other claims.

These claimants have used due diligence; they have gone where they should have gone, and they have had this just claim inserted in the bill. Why should they not have the benefit of their diligence? Why should not this item be allowed to stand, and if there are other claims exactly like it why should they not be added by the Senate instead of striking this claim out and putting it in somewhere else in some other connection?

Mr. HALE. I want to say——

Mr. CHANDLER. It may be, if the Senator will wait until I get through, that there is some force and some justice in this treatment of the claim, but it does not occur to me that there is any; and in justice to the claimants, who have been a long time without their money and who have had this claim once passed upon already at this session by the Senate, I am compelled to make objection to striking out this clause.

Mr. HALE. I will give the reason in a minute, because I know the Senate wants to adjourn.

This amendment was put on a former bill by the Senate with other amendments just as good. The House rejected them all, and we could not force them to agree to them. In making up this bill they have done what they sometimes do and what the Senate is impatient at their doing; they have selected this one claim out from others, making fish of one and flesh of another, and have refused to put the others in.

I do not believe in doing that. The course that the Senate has taken up to this time, and that the Senator from New Hampshire wants to change now, is to strike this out from the bill where the House put it and place it with the other good claims, and then we can go to the House with the same claims for the others that we have for this item. But if you do what the Senator from New Hampshire desires, you agree to this item that the House put in, having picked it out from the others, and they will say, "We shall pay no attention to the others," which are just as good. It gives them the opportunity of getting in what they choose to put in, and does not give us any fair opportunity.

Under the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas this item is included with the others that are just as good, and the Senate has a fair chance with the House conferees. I hope the Senate will sustain that position. I shall not say another word because I know it is late, and I desire to have the bill go through. I am willing to take a vote now.

Mr. CHANDLER. This claim is not due to the House of Representatives; it is due to these claimants; and when they have procured the allowance of their claim correctly through the House committee and through the House, why can they not be entitled to the benefit of it? It seems to me that it is child's play to undertake to crucify these claimants simply to make up an issue with the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. HALE). Ask for a conference on the deficiency bill.

Mr. HALE. That course has not been customary on appropriation bills. I think I shall not do that.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 25, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 24, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, the 21st, was read and approved.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I desire to correct the RECORD. In an explanation made by myself on last Friday I wished to state then, and I state now, that on the vote taken on the sundry civil appropriation bill on Wednesday, and on the yea-and-nay vote taken on Thursday, I am recorded as voting in the negative and as being paired with Mr. PETERS, of Kansas, on all political questions. At the time of voting I had forgotten the pair, having made it several days previous. I now wish unanimous consent to recall the vote, and set myself right on record.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

A. M. WOODRUFF.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of A. M. Woodruff.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a Senate bill. There is a House bill which is an exact fac-simile of that, for the payment of a similar amount, and I would ask the House to consider the Senate bill at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. M. Woodruff, of Pulaski County, Arkansas, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $933.33, for wood sold by him for fuel for the Fifty-fourth Regiment of United States Infantry, colored, during the years A. D. 1865 and 1866, and for which proper vouchers were issued and delivered to him, the said A. M. Woodruff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, subject to objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I send up the Senate report, as the House report is very brief.

The Senate report (by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of A. M. Woodruff, having considered the same submit the following report:

This claim is based upon a voucher, of which the following is a copy:

(No. 22.)

[The United States to A. M. Woodruff, Dr.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1867.

The claim having originated in the State of Arkansas the claimant can be afforded no relief by the Quartermaster-General under the law of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims."

L. HEINE,
Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel and Acting Quartermaster.

This voucher was submitted to the Quartermaster-General for his opinion, to which he replied as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., May 4, 1888.

"SIR: Your communication of the 25th ultimo, inclosing a certified account in duplicate in favor of A. M. Woodruff, of Pulaski County, Arkansas, for 933½ cords of wood, at $1 per cord, said to have been used by the Fifty-fourth United States Colored Infantry at Little Rock, Ark., between the 1st day of February, 1865, and June 30, 1866, and inclosing Senate bill 1668 for the relief of said Woodruff, etc., has been received.

"The claim in question appears to have been presented to this office in 1867, and was returned to the assistant quartermaster-general at St. Louis, Mo., in March, 1869. It having originated in a State declared to be in insurrection, the Quartermaster-General had no jurisdiction in the case under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864.

"This office has no means of judging of the correctness of the claim beyond the fact of the account being certified by an officer of the regiment for which, it is alleged, the fuel was supplied, and approved by the lieutenant-colonel thereof. The signatures of those officers appear to be genuine, and the quantity of fuel charged for is not in excess of the regulation allowance for the period named, and the price charged is reasonable. The certifying officer, however, has not accounted for the property as having been received from Mr. Woodruff.

"But believing that, in this case, due credit should attach to the official certificate of the officers named, the Quartermaster-General is of the opinion that the claim should receive favorable recommendation.

"The account and bill above referred to are herewith respectfully returned.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"S. B. HOLABIRD,
"Quartermaster-General United States Army.

"Hon. J. K. JONES,
"United States Senate."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

JENNIE HART MULLANY.

The SPEAKER. Senate bill No. 2346, granting a pension to Jennie Hart Mullany, was passed by the House on last Friday, and, by an oversight, an amendment proposed by the committee to insert the words "per month" was omitted. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, be reconsidered, the amendment inserted, and the bill again passed. Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this is a long bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of it be dispensed with. It has been recommended by the Secretary of War, and is favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Murphy against the people of Brownsville, in the State of Texas, in his testimony given before the Subcommittee on Military Affairs in the Fort Brown investigation.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 8, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with resolution passed at public meeting, the proceedings of which form part of the inclosed record, I have the honor to transmit to you for delivery to Hon. W. H. CRAIN, M. C. for this district, the accompanying papers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JULES LUCADOU, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS CARSON,
Mayor of Brownsville (now sojourning at Washington, D. C.).

PUBLIC MEETING AT THE COURT-HOUSE, 19TH INSTANT, TO CONSIDER THE TESTIMONY OF SPUD MURPHY AND ONE HENRY DOUGLAS, GIVEN BEFORE A COMMITTEE OF CONGRESS, REGARDING THIS SECTION.

Whereas this section of the country has been grossly misrepresented and wronged in a report recently made by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Military Affairs at Washington, said report appearing to have been based on the evidence of one Charles J. Murphy, commonly known as Spud Murphy, claiming to be a merchant from this city, and one Henry Douglas; and said report as published appears calculated to do great and undeserved injury to the people of this section; and for the purpose of correcti g the bad impression created abroad by said report, the citizens of Brownsville are requested to meet at the court-house on Friday, the 19th instant, at 7 o'clock p. m., to take such action as may be deemed advisable to set this community right in the premises and vindicate its good name.

By request of citizens.

E. C. FORTO, County Judge.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., July 17, 1888.

INDIGNATION MEETING.

Pursuant to a call of the Hon. Emilio C. Forto, county judge of Cameron County, Texas, the citizens and good people of this county assembled in mass at the court-house in the city of Brownsville, on Thursday, the 19th day of July, 1888, for the purpose of expressing their indignation at the outrageous and maligning testimony given by one Charles J. Murphy, better known as "Spud," and one Henry Douglas, before the subcommittee on Military Affairs, at Washington, D. C., touching the Fort Brown matter.

The Hon. Emilio C. Forto, county judge, called the meeting to order, and in a few and appropriate remarks stated to the meeting that at the earnest and repeated solicitations of our best citizens and merchants he had made the call for this meeting.

Nominations for chairman being in order, Mr. Benjamin Kowalski moved that Mr. G. M. Raphael be made chairman of this meeting, which, being duly seconded, Mr. Raphael was elected chairman of the meeting.

On motion of Col. W. H. Mason, duly seconded, Jules Lucadou was elected secretary of the meeting.

Hon. E. C. Forto explained to Mexican citizens present the object of the meeting in the Spanish language.

Chairman G. M. Raphael announced to the meeting that he corroborated all the statements expressed by Hon. E. C. Forto, believing them to be true, and he emphatically denied ever signing Spud Murphy's recommendation knowingly.

Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Texas, offered in evidence four certified copies of indictments for four separate and distinct felonies committed in this county and found by the grand juries against Charles J. Murphy.

Adolphus Glaevecke, county clerk of Cameron County, Texas, took the floor, and declared that Charles J. Murphy, alias "Spud," is a crank and a scoundrel; that if his name appears signed to Murphy's recommendation it must have been obtained under false representations.

Louis Cowen, esq., addressed the meeting in appropriate terms, sketching part of Charles J. Murphy's character, denouncing him as an impostor and that he, Murphy, had robbed money belonging to the Catholic church of this city, that his signature which appears upon Murphy's recommendation must certainly be a forgery, as he would never have recommended a man without character such as Murphy for any place.

Francisco Yturria took the floor and remarked that he had been in business in this city ever since 1853, that he never knew Charles J. Murphy as a merchant in this community, that Murphy has always borne a bad reputation in this vicinity, and that he was discharged from the office of inspector of hides and animals for this county for official misconduct.

Hon. E. C. Forto took the floor and stated that Charles J. Murphy, alias "Spud," was a common beggar in this community, and lived for many years from the charity of the people and by swindling and defrauding the persons who were simple enough to trust him.

John J. Smith, superintendent of the national cemetery at Fort Brown, Tex., for many years a resident of this country, stated that he knew Charles J. Murphy; that he had left this community as an adventurer, and that his (Murphy's) statements before the subcommittee at Washington, D. C., were false and untrue; that this soil is of the highest fertility and is capable of producing as good crops as any other place in these United States; and suggests that a true statement in regard to the condition of affairs and productiveness of the soil in this locality be submitted to the Government.

On motion of the Hon. E. C. Forto, duly seconded, it was moved that a committee be appointed for the purpose of draughting suitable resolutions and taking testimony and statements, with a view of presenting same to our Representatives and Congressmen at Washington, D. C.; whereupon the following gentlemen were appointed, to wit:

William Kelly, Francisco Yturria, Alexander Werbisbi, Robert Dalzell, H. M. Field, E. H. Goodrich, George Watson.

On motion of Hon. J. J. Cocke, collector of customs for the district of Brazos de Santiago, duly seconded, Chairman G. M. Raphael and Secretary Jules Lucadou were added as members of the above committee.

Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Texas, offered his services in his official capacity, to take affidavits before the committee, which offer was thankfully accepted by the chair.

On motion of Hon. J. J. Cocke, collector of customs for this district, duly seconded, the meeting was adjourned until Thursday evening the 26th instant.

G. M. RAPHAEL,
Chairman.

Adjourned indignation meeting convened at the court-house on Saturday the 4th day of August, 1888, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. William Kelly, who stated that Mr. G. M. Raphael, the regular chairman, was unable to attend the meeting.

On motion of Benjamin Kowalski, esq., duly seconded and carried, Mr. William Kelly was elected chairman pro tempore.

The committee heretofore appointed to take testimony presented affidavits, which were read to the meeting.

Mr. Louis Cowen moved that the testimony taken by the committee be forwarded to our representatives in Washington, whereupon Hon. E. C. Forto offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by the meeting, to wit:

"Resolved, That the testimony procured by the committee and now here presented to this meeting, be transmitted to the Hon. W. H. CRAIN, member of Congress for this district, with the request that he submit the same to both Houses of Congress, and particularly to the members of the Military Committee of the House, in order that the good name of this community may be vindicated; and

"Resolved further, That as most of the persons composing this meeting and its committee and those who have testified, are well known to Mr. CRAIN, he is hereby requested to make known their characters and standing to all whom it may concern."

On motion by Hon. E. C. Forto, duly seconded, the meeting was adjourned sine die.

WILLIAM KELLY,
Chairman.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

I, E. H. Goodrich, certify on oath that I have known Charles J. Murphy (commonly known here as "Spud" Murphy) since the year 1866; that during said period and until he left Brownsville I never knew him to have had any standing, political, social, or otherwise, and at no time was he known here as a leader of any political party. He made pretense of being a Republican, was always encouraging revolts among the members of the Republican party, and succeeding in procuring credentials, either forged or executed by a few soreheads, he obtained money and deadhead passage to attend conventions from Democrats, who no doubt aided him in order to create dissension, which he generally succeeded in doing, and by his persistency, and in order to preserve harmony, the regular delegates occasionally allowed him to take part in the councils of the party. I have resided continuously in Brownsville since March, 1866; shortly after my arrival here I became acquainted with Murphy at a Republican meeting; have observed his political career closely, and as chairman of the Republican county committee for twenty years past up to 1888, have never known him to abide by the action of any legitimate gathering of Republicans; to the contrary he always carried on a sideshow of his own, and I have been informed and verily believe that notwithstanding his professions he was invariably voted at the polls by the Democrats who maintained him.

I have never known him to engage in any mercantile business, his principal aim and pursuit was a fat office; a man of broils, as the police records of the city will show, of low tastes, and no social standing even with the parties whom he herded with, and if he was ostracized by the people of this section by reason of his political preferences, as he alleges, he is the first and only one I have heard claim that political faith influenced our citizens in social or commercial intercourse; the ostracism of over 1,200 Republican voters at the last general election in a county polling under 3,000 votes would seem to any intelligent being the height of absurdity.

I disclaim ever having signed the recommendation dated March 19, 1875, alleged by Murphy to have been signed by me and others; if my signature is appended to that instrument it was obtained without my knowledge of what I was signing, as I would not recommend a man of his character for any office, knowing him for the past twenty years as a villifier of character, a broiler, deadbeat, and a fraud; a man too lazy to work, had he bared his arms to till the soil (which he alleges "would not support a goat") as many better men have done before him, he would not have existed for several years before his blessed departure from this section upon the charity extended by the good people he now vilifies; I would not believe him under oath.

E. H. GOODRICH.

United States Commissioner, Western District of Texas.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of Texas:

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared H. M. Field, who, being duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says: I am forty-six years of age and am by profession a civil engineer. I came to this section of the country in 1865. Have been county surveyor of Cameron County, Texas, from 1868 to 1878, inclusive, and am quite familiar with the richness, fertility, and productiveness of the soil of this county.

Have been connected with farming enterprises in this section for the last twenty years. I own a piece of land within the city limits of the city of Brownsville, Tex., and I know by my deeds to the same that it has been under cultivation ever since 1842, and for the last twenty-three years I know of my own knowledge that from one to two crops have been annually raised upon the same. Last year (1887) I sowed eight acres of this land in "Johnson grass," and cut three crops of hay off during the year. I can not state the number of pounds, because I did not weigh the hay. This year (1888), upon this same land, I have cut two crops of this hay and have now the third crop ready and ripe to cut; the first crop I sold to the contractors for the Government at Fort Brown, and delivered, as shown by the quartermaster's scales, 29,950 pounds of cured hay for the first crop above referred, and I lost, besides, by rain, about 1 ton; the second crop I have cut and stacked, but have not delivered the hay yet. I will commence cutting the third crop on the 6th instant. This spring I opened a road 20 feet wide and about 1,200 feet long across my hay-field, thereby reducing the acreage. This spring I planted on my land 6 acres of millet, which produced about 15 tons of cured hay. I also planted 10 barrels of potatoes (5 barrels being of the class called "Peerless" and 5 of the class called "Early Rose"), from which I have sold a little over 100 barrels and have kept 15 barrels of the same for seed; none of this land has ever been manured and does not require manuring. My land, being all upland, is not of as good a quality as the lands embraced in the Fort Brown military reservation, the greater portion of which are river-bottom lands, therefore of a far superior grade.

In 1866 I was stationed as an officer of the Army at Fort Brown, Company I, of the First Artillery, had a garden at the post at that time, upon which were raised the finest vegetables I ever saw, and most of the years since I have seen the post gardens, and all class of vegetables are grown in them most luxuriantly.

In 1865 and 1866 I was detailed and placed on duty as acting assistant engineer of the district of the Rio Grande, and part of my duty at the time was to clear the grounds preparatory to the building of the Fort Brown post and to make plans and estimates for building the same, under the instructions of General George W. Getty, who was district commander at the time. After my leaving the service in 1868 I was again employed by the Quartermaster Department during the construction and finishing of the said post; part of my occupation then was to grade the grounds and put them under proper drainage; I removed in so doing several date palms and the remains of the brick tanks used for irrigation, these being the remains of an old Mexican garden cultivated prior to the occupation of the post by our troops in 1846.

In 1882 Lieut. Thomas M. Wenie had charge of the post garden of Fort Brown; he sent me some of the vegetables which had been grown on the garden under his charge, among which there was a head of cabbage weighing 25 pounds, a beet weighing 12 pounds, and a sweet potato that weighed 6 pounds; these vegetables had each a label attached to them bearing their respective weights; these seemed to me to be exaggerated, and to convince myself, I weighed them and found them to weigh the pounds above set forth.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of Texas:

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared H. C. Hune, justice peace, precinct No. 3, of Cameron County, Texas, who being duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says: I am seventy years of age; am by profession a tailor; have been justice of the peace for precinct No. 3, of Cameron County, Texas, for the past four years.

I came to this section of the country in 1846 as a private in the army of General Taylor, and served through the Mexican war in Company K, Fourth Artillery; have served through the war of the rebellion in the Union ranks in Company M, First Artillery, and have been a Republican all my life.

In 1846, when General Taylor took possession of the lands known from that time to the present date as the Fort Brown reservation, said lands were under a high state of cultivation, and had been for a great number of years prior thereto; all around the lake or lagoon embraced in the reservation there was a magnificent orchard, containing all class of fruit trees which grow in this latitude, showing by their size and productiveness that they had been planted many years prior to our advent to this frontier. The remainder of the lands were used as corn and cotton fields and vegetable gardens.

During my life as a soldier I have been stationed at a great many posts, both in Texas and other States, and can truthfully say that Fort Brown is one of the finest posts I ever was in.

I was acquainted with Charles J. Murphy (commonly known here as "Spud Murphy") for several years, and always knew him to be a dead beat. When he was about to leave for Washington, I made for him a full suit of clothes and charged him $10 for it. When I went to endeavor to collect the money due me, he then told me that he had no money to pay me with, but said that he was to obtain money in Washington, and would faithfully remit me the amount as soon as he got there, but to this day he has never kept his word, and the debt is still due and owing, nor has he ever written to me in regard to the same. He once wrote me a letter from Washington, wherein he requested me to address him as "Colonel Murphy," which letter or request I never deigned to notice, as I would not stoop to aid him in his frauds. I knew Murphy to be a dishonest man and consider nothing too low for him to do, and would not certainly believe him under oath. I have seen in the report of the Subcommittee on Military Affairs a petition in which my name appears as indorsing the said C. J. Murphy, and do say that I have no recollection of ever having signed the same; that if my signature appears on any petition, claimed to be in favor of said Murphy, that it is either not genuine or was obtained under false representations.

I knew Henry Douglas when he enlisted in my company at Point Isabel, Tex., in 1850. He never served through the Mexican war; he enlisted after the war; was here only a very short time. Douglas can not competently testify as to the post here, because during the short time he was here no buildings had been erected at the post; it was merely a camp around the fort. In regard to his testimony as to men being hung to the beams of the slaughtering-houses, I never saw such things done here. I believe that when Mr. Douglas imagined he witnessed such acts, he must have been suffering from a nightmare, caused by a too hearty supper accompanied by over copious libations, and took the wild ramblings of his diseased brain for a reality and a fact.

To the contrary, he always carried on a side show of his own.

I have never known him to engage in any mercantile business. His principal aim and pursuit was a fat office, a man of low tastes and no social standing even with the parties he herded with; and if he was ostracized by the people of this section by reason of his political preferences as he alleges, he is the first and only one I have heard claim that political faith influenced our citizens in social or commercial intercourse, the ostracism of over 1,200 Republican voters at the last general election in a county polling under 3,000 voters would seem to an intelligent being the height of absurdity. Knowing him for the past twenty years as a vilifier of character, a broiler, dead beat, and a fraud, a man too lazy to work, had he bared his arms to till the soil (which he alleges would not "support a goat"), as many better men have done before him, he would not have existed for several years before his blessed departure from this section upon the charity extended by the good people he now vilifies.

In looking over the report of the "Subcommittee on Military Affairs," I find a petition on page 143 of said report indorsing Charles J. Murphy, and to my surprise I see the names of Elijah Guidon and Chance Polite, as having signed said petition. I know of my own knowledge that neither Guidon nor Polite were able to write; they were uneducated men. I would not believe Murphy under oath.

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared H. E. Woodhouse, who, being duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says: I am sixty years of age; came to this section of country as supercargo of the schooner Isbon, from New York, and landed at Brazos de Santiago, Texas, on the 30th day of November, 1847; was a merchant during all these years, and sold the first lot of goods that went out of Brownsville.

I knew Charles J. Murphy, and know that he went to Washington on a part of $200 (money) that Tomas Zamora had given to Higinio Salinas (a man who is slightly deranged), his brother-in-law, to pay over to me on a running account that said Zamora owed me, and the said Murphy prevailed upon the said Salinas to give him (Murphy) the money, and that he would attend to his (Salinas's) claim in Washington. Murphy obtained the money, I think, about April, 1882, and these facts came to my knowledge through Tomas Zamora subsequently, about July, when Zamora came to town and told me he had sent me money by Salinas which he, Salinas, did not pay over to me, but had used it, giving a part thereof to Murphy to pay his expenses to Washington.

I would further state that I have never signed my name, knowingly, to Murphy's petition, which appears on page 143 of the "Report of the Subcommittee on Military Affairs," and that if my signature alleged to be attached to the said petition is genuine it must have been signed to some other paper and for another person, as near as my recollection will serve me. I believe it was signed to a petition for Mr. Edward Downey and not for Charles J. Murphy. I knew Murphy and regarded him as a person without respectability or good standing in this community.

I am not aware that Charles J. Murphy was ever a merchant, either in this country or in any other, and am at a loss to know in what class of merchandise he was dealing in while in this community.

Since 1876 I have never failed to raise from 280,000 to 300,000 pounds of sugar yearly. I also raise various other crops, but make no mention of these because my chief pursuit is sugar raising. When I say 280,000 to 300,000 pounds of sugar, above referred to as the annual product of my plantation, compares favorably and has the market value of the kind known as "white clarified sugar." My crop of 1887 produced over 400,000 pounds of sugar. At no time since starting my plantation have I had over 180 acres under cane cultivation. My land is inferior to that of the Fort Brown reservation.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of Texas:

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared Adolphus Glaevecke, clerk of the county court of Cameron County, Texas, who, being duly sworn, upon oath, deposes and says: I am seventy years of age and have been county clerk of this county for the past fourteen years. I came to this section of the country in January, 1836. In May, 1836, the famous order of the Mexican General Ampudia, after his arrival from the defeat at San Jacinto, Tex., it being Order No. 1, to the effect that whoever was caught 9 miles north of the Rio Grande would be considered a Texas spy and be put in the ranks of the army. The country was then swarming with cattle and horse stock, and notwithstanding General Ampudia's order there was no lack of fine, fat beeves within the 9-mile zone up to May, 1846, when General Taylor broke the order.

In the fall of 1836, Mr. Stryker, myself, and others, started to plant and cultivate cotton, which resulted in a general cleaning of lands on both sides of the Rio Grande from its mouth up to Reynosa, and Messrs. Constantine Tarnava, Emil Manautou, and Charles Stillman advanced the money and furnished the seed to the planters on both sides of the river to carry out this enterprise. In 1837 Mr. Stryker built a cotton-gin on the Villa Nueva Island, so did Messrs. Heim and Wagner opposite Mr. Stryker's, on this side of the lake. The crop of 1837 was so heavy that it became necessary to build more gins, whereupon, in 1838, Messrs. Tarnava and Manautou built two large gins in Matamoras, Mexico; Mr. Alvino Lopez built one 25 miles above Matamoras, and Mr. Dwythe Smith built another at Reynosa, Mexico. All these gins had plenty to do up to the year 1847, when the cotton enterprise fell through, caused by the war between the United States and Mexico and a terrible drought, which commenced in August, 1846, and ended in April, 1847.

This cotton was raised on the river lands of the same kind, quality, and description of those embraced in the Fort Brown reservation, which before its occupation by General Taylor was known as one of the most fruitful labors on the river.

In 1842 this section was afflicted with a terrible drought, which did not, however, injure but merely delayed our crops on the river lands. Thousands of cattle were lost coming into our water-ponds from 12 to 20 miles above our famous 9-mile zone, to bog and die at the ponds; but the drought did not affect our crops and herds inside the zone, as the same were handled and the latter driven daily to good watering places on the river, and grass never failed.

I became acquainted with Charles J. Murphy in July, 1865. From the intercourse I had with him I put him down as a tramp, a beggar, and a drone on his own party, despised by every decent Republican, and associating solely with negroes, from whom he obtained some few quarters by writing letters for them at the rate of 25 cents each.

I find on the criminal docket of the county court of Cameron County, Texas, a case styled as follows:

"No. 16. The State of Texas vs. Charles J. Murphy. Falsely personating an officer. Filed August 18, 1876."

This was a case where he procured himself a horse and went out into the country representing himself to the ignorant people as an inspector of weights and measures, and blackmailed numbers of poor people for alleged shortness in their measures and weights. He kept up these fraudulent doings until reported to the county judge, who, after having him brought into town, reprimanded and fired him out of his (the judge's) office in my presence. The case against him was finally dismissed from the docket, on the 7th day of January, 1877, for the want of prosecution, due solely to the fact of the inability of getting the witnesses in from distant parts of the county.

I further know that the said "Spud" (the name by which Charles J. Murphy was commonly known), being angry with Col. John L. Haynes, collector of customs for the district of Brazos de Santiago, for denying him a place in the office, even refusing him the situation of janitor, he, the said Spud, voted about 20 negro votes for us (Democrats) just to spite Colonel Haynes, and especially E. H. Goodrich, special deputy collector.

During all the time Murphy lived at Brownsville he was simply an adventurer living by his wits; never had any reputable employment, except for a short time, in the internal-revenue collector's office; never was a merchant or in any business here, and derived a precarious living at lunch-counters and among negroes, for whom he acted as letter-writer. He never owned a house, simply renting some rooms in the suburbs of this city, and taking particular care never to pay the rents due to his landlords; never had a regular boarding-place in the town; was regarded simply as a dead-beat and blackmailer, and was always treated as such.

I have resided in this county for fifty-two years, most of the time a farmer and stock-raiser, and came of farming people. I have never seen better agricultural lands in this country or in Europe than those of the valley of the Rio Grande, from Hidalgo County to its mouth. Two crops of corn a year are nothing unusual to be raised on the lands about Brownsville. Corn, sugar, beans, and potatoes are raised in abundance (at this moment corn is selling for 20 cents per bushel). The lands in the Fort Brown reservation are as fruitful as the rest. There is no difference in their quality.

During the years 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867 very little crops were raised; labor had become disorganized on account of the wars in both Mexico and our country; the laboring people were nearly all in one or other of the four armies operating in this section—the Federal and Confederate in Texas, the Imperial and Liberal in Mexico. The handling of cotton exported at Bagdad was more lucrative than agricultural pursuits, and hence the lands lay idle in those years. This accounts for the testimony given by Major Wainwright and others who were here only during this period.

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared William Kelly, of Brownsville, Tex., who, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I am forty-eight years of age, and have resided in Cameron County since 1865, an in Brownsville since 1870. I am a steam-boat owner, and have been engaged in the transportation of merchandise on the Rio Grande since 1866. I am familiar with the character of the lands on both sides of the river. The lands which comprise the military reservation of Fort Brown are of precisely the same character as those on either side of them for a distance of 60 miles to the westward and 20 miles to the eastward, where the salt lands of the coast adjoin. I regard the lands of the Rio Grande Valley as among the most fruitful agricultural lands in the world.

Cultivated lands have borne crops continuously, to my knowledge, for 20 years, and by reputation for 30 or more years previously, without a pound of artificial manure or fertilizer having been applied to them. Sugar, the most exhaustive of crops, has been raised for twenty years continuously on the same land without any artificial fertilizer. Two crops of corn are commonly raised each year from the same lands except in years of drought, which come irregularly, and average one year in five. Corn is selling in the market here to-day for 20 to 25 cents per bushel, and we are now shipping our surplus corn to Galveston by steamer.

During the years 1866 to 1869 agricultural pursuits were practically abandoned on this frontier in consequence of the disorganization of labor arising from the wars of intervention (Maximillian) in Mexico, and of the rebillion in this country.

I know Charles J. Murphy. He was distinctly a person of the "political bummer" class, without regular employment or means of livelihood except when occasionally holding some petty office bestowed on him for political services. I knew him from 1866 until he left here. During that period he was not engaged in any business except the occasional office holding before mentioned. He never owned any property in this county, never was a tax-payer or house-holder; was simply a disreputable political "hanger-on," living by his wits, and frequently before the courts charged with various criminal offenses. It is within my knowledge that in 1868, on the occasion of a Catholic Church fair, he was intrusted with the selling of tickets and made away with the proceeds.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Texas, personally appeared Jules Lucadou, who, being duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says: I was born in Brownsville, Cameron County, Texas, and am thirty-six years of age. Have been deputy clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Texas, for the past eight years; was appointed in July, 1885, by the late Hon. E. B. Turner, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas. Have taught schools in different school communities of this county for a number of years. I am perfectly familiar with the country all over this county, and do say that the richness, fertility, and productiveness of this soil can not be excelled, notwithstanding testimony to the contrary. Our lands are of such a superior quality that they have never been and do not require manuring. Certain cereals—I know this to be a fact—do not thrive well here, due solely to the fact that the soil is altogether too rich for them. Cotton, corn, sugar, beans, etc., are raised here in abundance, and two crops from the same land are almost annually raised.

From 1857 to 1863 my father cultivated a vegetable garden within rifle range of Fort Brown. This garden produced all classes of esculent vegetables, from the commonest to the finest, namely: Asparagus, artichokes, egg-plants, tomatoes of all kinds from the size of a cherry to that of an apple, pease, celery, spinach, sorrel, rutabagas, cauliflowers, brussels-sprouts, raddish, squashes, parsnips, cabbages, string-beans, potatoes, sweet potatoes, melons, muskmelons, watermelons, in fact all varieties of vegetables. My father abandoned the cultivation of his garden on account of the war.

I am acquainted with Charles J. Murphy, and was present at one of his swindling operations. It happened about the middle of June, 1878. He went to the house of Mr. Antonio Valdez, a farmer at the Rusias ranche, in Cameron County, Texas, and introduced himself as an "inspector of weights and measures," and demanded for inspection Valdez's scales and measures, and after pretending to do some tinkering to the scales and simulating that he figured out the cubic capacity of the measures, which I believe he was unable to do, he declared them to be in accordance to law, and extorted from Mr. Valdez $2.37. I came to Brownsville some time afterwards, and learned that Murphy had been indicted for perpetrating extortions of the same nature upon various parties in this county, and that he had never been appointed to the office he pretended to hold.

On the 25th day of August, 1880, Charles J. Murphy, as a lawyer, defended his first, last, and only case in the district court of this county. His client was a man named Juan Rosas, who stood charged with the theft of a cow. I was foreman of the jury sworn to try the case. During the progress of the trial his ignorance of law made him the laughing-stock of the district attorney, jury, and spectators. He had the impudence to endeavor to give to the jury the law by which the jury should be governed in finding their verdict. The court thereupon severely reprimanded him and informed him that it was the prerogative of the judge presiding at a trial to give the law to a jury, and not that of the lawyers engaged in the case. The questions he propounded to the witnesses examined rather tended to help the prosecution than to favor the defense. He finally succeeded in lodging his client in the State penitentiary at Huntsville for a term of two years.

Charles J. Murphy never had any political or social standing in this community, and I never heard of him as being a leader in politics in this county. I would not believe Charles J. Murphy under oath, if it was to his interest to testify to an untruth.

I am now postmaster at this place; was also clerk and assistant postmaster in the post-office at Brownsville from 1869 to 1877; have also held other Government positions. I know Charles J. Murphy (commonly called "Spud"). My positions and standing in this community brought me in contact with all classes of people, and I know that Murphy never did have any standing in this community; politically, have known him to be always in conflict with his own party, as he called himself a Republican. I was also secretary of the leading social clubs and societies in this city, and know positively that Murphy never did have any "social" standing; he was not ostracized, as no lady or gentleman would associate with him; his character and habits was enough to condemn him, and he was always considered as a crank, a dead-beat, and a tramp. I was also forage master at Fort Brown, Texas, under Maj. T. J. Eckerson, United States Army (now on the retired-list). I know and saw vegetables grown in the Fort Brown gardens cultivated by the troops stationed there for their use; they had little or no trouble to grow all they desired; in fact, they always had a superabundance of vegetables, so much so that they gave it away. The parade grounds are now and always were covered with fine grass. I have often heard officers United States Army remark that Fort Brown, Texas, was the finest post that they were ever stationed at—and no doubt it is.

Before me, Jules Lucadou, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at Brownsville, personally appeared William P. Guirey, who, being duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says: I am managing editor of the Brownsville Daily Cosmopolitan and Weekly Times. I have edited and owned the Cosmopolitan since 1879. I know Charles J. Murphy well as a flannel-mouthed Irish shyster, who when here lived by his wits; never had any visible means of support or credit; a man whom I never would have trusted with a nickel I ever wanted to see again; one whom I would not believe on oath, and whose paltriest statements even in the course of ordinary conversation could not be relied on as having the flimsiest basis of truth. According to my recollection some time in 1880 the Republican party here held a convention and appointed Col. John L. Haynes, then collector of customs, among others, delegate to the State convention at Austin. As the Cosmopolitan was an independent paper they sent the proceedings around to us and we published them. Couple of days afterwards Murphy turned up at the office with the alleged proceedings of an opposition convention, signed by himself as secretary, and appointing himself as delegate to the convention. We as newspaper men had heard nothing of any such meeting; told Murphy if he wanted the proceedings published he had to pay for them. After considerable talk, for he was a terrible bore, and could talk by the hour, to get rid of him, agreed to publish it for $4. He told us to begin setting it up, that he would go and get the money. My partner at that time, Mr. H. St. Clair, told him "Not much, Mr. Murphy; if you want that to go in you have got to put up the money before one type is laid alongside of another; you have to get it here mighty quick or it won't go in today." Murphy went off, and after some time returned with the cash, and the proceedings were published. Murphy took a copy of the paper to Austin and bulldozed the convention into dividing the representation of Cameron County between Colonel Haynes and himself, much to the disgust of the local Republicans.

In the name and by the authority of the State of Texas:

The grand jurors for the aforesaid county of Cameron, in said State, elected, tried, impaneled, and sworn to inquire in and for the body of the aforesaid county and State, on their oath do find and present that at the spring term, A. D. 1867, of the honorable the district court of the twelfth judicial district of the State of Texas, in and for the county of Cameron, Hon. Edward Dougherty being then and there the judge of the said court and Edward Tilghman, clerk, and Robert B. Foster, deputy clerk of the same, and on the 1st day of April of the said year 1867, one James L. Edwards, R. W. Robinson, and C. N. Thompson were in due form of law tried upon a certain indictment then and there depending against them for having on the 6th day of March, 1867, in the county aforesaid, feloniously seized, taken, and carried away two horses, the property of the United States of America; and that at the said trial, so then and there had as aforesaid, one Charles J. Murphy, clerk, late of said county, appeared as a juror upon the said trial, and was duly sworn, and took his oath before the said Hon. Edward Dougherty, judge as aforesaid, the said oath being then and there administered in open court by Robert B. Foster, deputy clerk as aforesaid, to speak the truth of, upon, and concerning his, the said Charles J. Murphy's qualifications to sit as a juror in the trial of the said felony then and there preferred against the said James L. Edwards, R. W. Robinson, and C. N. Thompson (he, the said Robert B. Foster, deputy clerk as aforesaid, having sufficient and competent power and authority to administer an oath then and there to the said Charles J. Murphy in that behalf); whereupon it then and there became a material inquiry on the trial of the said Charles J. Murphy as to his qualifications as a juror, whether he, the said Charles J. Murphy, was a qualified elector under the constitution and laws of the State of Texas and of the United States of America, and a householder in the said county of Cameron, or freeholder in the said State; and that the said Charles J. Murphy, being so sworn as aforesaid as required by law, wickedly contriving and intending to cause them, the said James L. Edwards, R. W. Robinson, and C. N. Thompson, unjustly and illegally to be convicted of the said felony, did then and there willfully and deliberately, knowingly, falsely, corruptly, and wickedly say, depose, and give in evidence before the said court, in open session thereof, and in presence of the said Hon. Edward Dougherty, judge, and Robert B. Foster, deputy clerk thereof as aforesaid, that he, the said Charles J. Murphy, was then and there a qualified elector under the constitution and laws (meaning the constitution and laws of the State of Texas and of the United States of America), and a householder in the said county of Cameron; whereas, in truth and in fact, he, the said Charles J. Murphy, was not then and there a qualified elector under the constitution and laws aforesaid, nor a householder in the said county, nor was he then and there a natural-born or naturalized citizen of the United States of America nor of the State of Texas, as he, the said Charles J. Murphy, then and there well knew; and so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said Charles J. Murphy, at the said spring term of the year 1867 of the said district court of the twelfth judicial district in and for the county of Cameron, and on the 1st day of April of the year aforesaid, before the said Hon. Edward Dougherty, judge, and Robert B. Foster, deputy clerk thereof (the said clerk, under the direction of the said judge, having then and there competent power and authority to administer the said oath to the said Charles J. Murphy), did, in manner and form aforesaid, commit deliberate, willful, and corrupt perjury, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the State.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

District court, A. D. 1871, fifteenth judicial district.

Be it remembered that on this 11th day of December, A. D. 1871, there was begun and holden a term of the district court in and for the county of Cameron, in the fifteenth judicial district, State of Texas, at the court-house in the city of Brownsville, said day being the first day of the term appointed by law for the holding of said court in said county, to wit, fifth Monday after the first Monday in November, as per act of the Legislature entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act prescribing the time of holding the district courts in the several judicial districts in the State,' approved August 10, 1870," approved April 17, 1871.

Present: Hon. William H. Russel, judge; F. E. Macmanus, esq., district attorney; William Scanlan, esq., sheriff; R. B. Foster, esq., clerk.

The court was opened by the sheriff by proclamation, when on Thursday, the 4th day of January, A. D. 1872, the same being a regular day of the term, among others the following proceedings were had, to wit:

1005. The State of Texas vs. Charles J. Murphy.

On this day the plea of the statute of limitation filed by defendant, coming on to be heard, and after argument by counsel, because the law appears to be with the defendant, it was ordered that said plea be sustained, and that this case be dismissed.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

I, Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Texas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of the order of court dismissing cause No. 1005, wherein "The State of Texas" is plaintiff and "Charles J. Murphy" is defendant, entered on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1872, as the same appears of record on the minutes of the said district court in Book "C," page 628.

To certify which, I hereunto set my hand and impress the seal of court at office in Brownsville this the 19th day of July, A. D. 1888.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

In the district court of the fifteenth judicial district, in and for the county of Cameron, March term A. D. 1872.

In the name and by the authority of the State of Texas:

The grand jurors for the county of Cameron, in said State, elected, tried, impaneled and sworn to inquire in and for the body of the county of Cameron, State aforesaid, on their oaths do find and present that one Charles J. Murphy, inspector of hides and animals in and for the inspection district of Cameron County, late of said county, on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1872, at the city of Brownsville, in the county aforesaid, it being then and there the duty of the said Charles J. Murphy as such inspector of hides and animals aforesaid to faithfully examine and inspect all hides and animals known to and reported to him as sold, leaving, or going out of the county for sale or shipment, and to keep a record, in which he shall record a true and correct statement of the brands and marks of such hides and animals, and the name or names of the vender or venders and the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and to return a certified copy of the same to the clerk of the district court of the said county at the end of each month; and not to permit any unbranded hide or animal upon which the brand or mark can not be ascertained, or any hide upon which the brand has been branded after being skinned from the carcass, to be taken or shipped out of the county, did then and there, willfully, wrongfully, fraudulently, and in disregard of the duties of his said office, neglect and fail to inspect five hundred and fifty-nine salt hides then and there shipped for Brazos de Santiago, and from the said Brazos de Santiago, in the county aforesaid, reshipped out of the said county, for New Orleans, La., and that the said Charles J. Murphy did then and there willfully and fraudulently permit the said salt hides to be taken and shipped out of the county aforesaid without being then and there inspected by him, the said Charles J. Murphy, or his deputies, and that the said Charles J. Murphy did then and there willfully and fraudulently fail to keep a record containing a true and correct statement of the brands and marks of the said five hundred and fifty-nine salt beef hides, and the names of the venders and purchasers of the same, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the State.

SUPPRESSION OF "TRUSTS."

Mr. CRAIN introduced a resolution, the title of which was read, as follows:

Resolution authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the House at any time a bill defining "trusts," and providing for their suppression and prevention.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask that this resolution may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with authority to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that the request for unanimous consent can not be made at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine makes a point of order, and the request can not be entertained.

Mr. CRAIN. I now move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, with authority to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer is in order; but the latter part of the motion is not in order, because it proposes a change of the rules of the House.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to ask, by way of parliamentary inquiry, when it will be proper for me to make a motion of that character.

The SPEAKER. It is never proper except by unanimous consent, or by introducing during the call of the States a resolution which would go to the committee to be reported back. The proposition to give a committee the right to report at any time is a proposition to change the rules of the House and must take the usual course.

Mr. CRAIN. But there is no Committee on Rules to which to refer a resolution of this character. I mean, practically there is now no committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman. There is no quorum of the committee in the city. The gentleman moves to refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary. If there be no objection, it will take that course.

Mr. CRAIN. I would like to know in what manner——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the only manner known to the Chair by which a committee can be authorized to report at any time: First, by unanimous consent of the House; second, by introducing a resolution in the regular way, giving such authority to the committee, and having it referred, reported back, and adopted by the House. There is no other way in which a rule of the House can be changed.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. CRAIN. I shall ask unanimous consent, as soon as the call of States is through, to present the resolution again in a modified form.

LAS VEGAS GRANT, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH introduced a bill (H. R. 11505) to authorize and require the Secretary of the Interior to cause a patent to issue to the town of Las Vegas for the lands known as the Las Vegas grant, situated in the county of San Miguel, Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINUATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR SUPPORT OF GOVERNMENT.

The call of States having been concluded,

Mr. FORNEY said: I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and ask its passage at this time.

Mr. ROGERS. Let it be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to continue the provisions of existing law providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the provisions of joint resolutions approved June 30, 1888, July 31, 1888, September 1, 1888, and September 15, 1888, providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 10th day of October, 1888.

Mr. FORNEY. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution of this character heretofore passed will expire to-morrow, hence it becomes necessary that this resolution should be passed to-day.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 226) was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be considered in the House as in committee.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from a committee of conference, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 106, 107, 118, 222, 223, 233, 236, 238, 239, 243, 244, 248, 254, 255, 256, and 257.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 240; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to Senate amendment numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by House amendment numbered 4 the following:

"Provided, That the President may, at any time in his discretion, by proclamation open any portion or all of the lands reserved by this provision to settlement under the homestead laws."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$502,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, after the word "industrial," the words "and primary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Catalogue of the Congressional Library: To enable the Librarian of Congress to continue the work upon the catalogue of the Congressional Library, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,067,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendment numbered 110 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

JAS. N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1889 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

With the exception of Senate amendment numbered 110, the conference committee report the same action upon all of the amendments of the Senate that was agreed upon and submitted in the last report considered by the House touching the said amendments.

On amendment numbered 110, relating to the construction of the Congressional Library building, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JAS. N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURNES. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the amendments referred to there, on which, as he says, the report is the same as that formerly submitted to the House, were considered by the House at all, with the exception of the amendment disagreed to, namely, amendment No. 110? Was there any discussion of the others?

Mr. BURNES. I think there was no objection to any of the amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. But was there discussion—were they considered?

Mr. RYAN. In reference to some there was discussion; in reference to others there was acquiesence without discussion.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me ask in reference to the addition of the word "primary" before "industrial"—if that refers to education in Alaska?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to be permitted to occupy the floor for a short time, with the consent of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

[Mr. SAYERS withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will do it in a manner that will enable us to ask some questions. My colleague showed that it cost more to run this Government under the present Administration than under the last one, and my colleague gave the names and dates, the figures of the salaries paid; and if that is inaccurate I would be glad to have it shown.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount of increase for pensions alone——

Mr. PAYSON. I am not talking about that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am. The amount is nearly $38,000,000; and taking out that item, the reduction would be over $27,000,000 as between the two Administrations.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman is not prepared to question the accuracy of the figures of my colleague [Mr. CANNON], he can not give me the information I desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] desires unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HERBERT. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I am prepared to question——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri, as the Chair understands, has demanded the previous question.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman to yield me a few minutes. I understood I was recognized.

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes.

[Mr. HERBERT withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some remarks on the question with regard to the Congressional Library; but I understand from the gentleman in charge of this bill that there will be an opportunity for further discussion on that subject when the bill again comes up.

Mr. BURNES. I suggest to my friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] that the Library question will not be settled by the adoption of this report; and when an affirmative or definite proposition comes in, the gentleman will have an opportunity of presenting his views.

Mr. ROGERS. That question is not affected by this report in any way, as I understand.

Mr. RYAN. No; on that question there is still a disagreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof, the report was adopted.

Mr. BURNES. I now move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the conference asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN.

DUTY ON JUTE BAGGING.

Mr. CLEMENTS, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial of the Farmers' Alliance, in Georgia, for the removal of the duty on jute bagging; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

THE BAGGING "TRUST."

JOHN H. DENT ALLIANCE, No. 440,
Cave Spring, Ga., September 1, 1888.

Whereas in the midst of the difficulties which present themselves at this season of the year, when our farmers are on the lookout for the best means of protecting the proceeds of their crops, the special trouble to find something to clothe our cotton is prominent and demands our first attention. We wish to put it upon the market in a decent condition, and are willing to pay a fair price for wrapping material; but just at this point we are met with the unreasonable price put upon bagging by trust companies. Extortion upon the farmer seems now to be systematized, and plans forming to get hold on the hard earnings of field labor the order of the day; and

Whereas systems like those having to be met with systems, it is high time the agricultural men of this country should speak and act together. We must raise an opposing force to protect ourselves. If in one step we fail, we must try another: Therefore, be it unanimously

Resolved, That we request our Representatives in Congress to use their influence to the utmost to remove the duty on imported jute bagging as early as it is possible for it to be done.

Further resolved, That in this we earnestly ask the co-operation of the County Alliance of Floyd County and all good citizens of this State.

W. D. MCCOLLUM,
JOHN H. DENT,
E. R. KING,
Committee.

PREVENTION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of citizens of Bath, Me., asking Congress to make appropriation to relieve the yellow-fever sufferers and prevent the spread of yellow fever; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

At a meeting of the citizens of the city of Bath, Me., held September 20, 1888, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That the public interests require that the Government of the United States should take prompt measures to relieve the sufferers from yellow fever in the South, and to prevent the spread of the disease.

"Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives be requested to favor an appropriation by Congress for the purposes indicated in the foregoing resolution."

TRUSTS.

Mr. CRAIN, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the House at any time a bill defining trusts, and providing for their suppression and prevention; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for the regular order.

ALFONSO ROBERTS.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the request for the regular order in order that I may obtain unanimous consent to report a bill from the Committee on Public Lands and ask for its immediate consideration. It involves the title to the farm of a poor man in Colorado. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. The title to the man's farm depends upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the demand for the regular order for the present.

Mr. PAYSON. I now report back from the Committee on Public Lands the Senate bill to which I have referred (S. 3125), restoring the right of pre-emption to Alfonso Roberts, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alfonso Roberts be, and he is hereby, authorized to pre-empt the land in Colorado for which he filed a claim in 1884, on making the proofs required by the provisions of the pre-emption law.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. This being Monday, the regular order is the consideration of business called up by the Committee on the District of Columbia if they claim that privilege.

ADULTERATED FOOD OR DRUGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (S. 249) to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food or drugs in the District of Columbia, which has been reported by the committee with amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, as it involves the creation of a new office and fixes a new salary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that the bill called up by the gentleman from South Carolina ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, upon the ground that it creates a new office with a new salary. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether he admits that the bill does create a new office and does make a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am willing that the bill shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no objection to that. It will then be open to amendment under the rule.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person within the District of Columbia shall mix, color, stain, or powder, or order or permit any other person to mix, color, stain, or powder any article of food or drugs with any ingredient or material so as to render the article injurious to health, with the intent that the same may be sold in the said District, and no person shall sell any such article so mixed, colored, stained, or powdered. Any person violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each offense be fined not exceeding $200 for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense not exceeding $300, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the committee to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "health," insert the words "or manufacture any article of food which shall be composed in whole or in part of diseased, decomposed, offensive, or unclean animal or vegetable substance."

In line 12 strike out the word "or" and insert after the word "powdered" the words "or manufactured."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], and I now yield the floor to him.

Mr. ATKINSON. The purpose of the bill, I presume, is well understood by all gentlemen who have listened to the reading of its title, and unless some one desires to propose an amendment I shall move that the bill be ordered to a third reading.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to consider this bill under the rules, section by section, for the purpose of amendment, and I now offer an amendment to the first section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, after the word "sell," in line 11, the words "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bill is carefully limited to the District of Columbia. The very first line provides "that no person within the District of Columbia" shall do such and such things. Therefore, while there is no objection to this amendment, it is hardly necessary. The caption of the bill also limits its operation very carefully to the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROGERS. I knew that was the intention of the committee, and the purpose of my amendment was to make the limitation specific. The first section relates to the "mixing" of these articles. The second relates to the selling, and in order to place the matter beyond all controversy I think the words which I have suggested ought to be inserted.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will accept the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no person shall, within the District of Columbia, except for the purpose of compounding as hereinafter described, mix, color, stain, or powder, or order, or permit any other person to mix, color, stain, or powder, any drug with any ingredient or material so as to affect injuriously the quality or potency of such drug, with intent that the same may be sold in the said District of Columbia, and no person shall sell any such drug so mixed, colored, stained, or powdered under the same penalty in each case respectively as in the preceding section for a first and subsequent offense.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That no person shall sell any article of food or drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by any purchaser, and any person violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for the first offense be fined not exceeding $50, and for each subsequent offense not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That an offense shall not be deemed to have been committed under this section in the following cases, that is to say:

First. Where any matter or ingredient not injurious to health has been added to the food or drug because the same is required for the production or preparation thereof as an article of commerce, in a state fit for carriage or consumption, and not fraudulently to increase the bulk, weight, or measure of the food or drug, or conceal the inferior quality thereof.

Second. Where the drug or food is a proprietary medicine.

Third. Where the food or drug is compounded as authorized by this act.

Fourth. Where the food or drug is unavoidably mixed with some extraneous matter in the process of collection or preparation.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the same amendment; after the word "sell," in line 4, to insert "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. ATKINSON. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

SEC. 5. That no person shall sell any compound article of food or compounded drug which is not composed of ingredients in accordance with the demand of the purchaser. Any person violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not exceeding fifty dollars: Provided, That no person shall be guilty of any such offense as aforesaid in respect of the sale of an article of food or a drug mixed with any matter or ingredient not injurious to health, and not intended, fraudulently, to increase its bulk, weight, or measure, or conceal its inferior quality, if at the time of delivering such article or drug he shall supply to the person receiving the same a notice, by a label, distinctly and legibly written or printed on or with the article or drug, to the effect that the same is mixed.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the same amendment here also; after the word "sell," in the first line, to insert the words "in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. I now move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question, as I do not understand the meaning of the first paragraph of this section. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain what it does mean, where it provides "that no person shall sell any compound article of food or compounded drug which is not composed of ingredients in accordance with the demand of the purchaser."
